VOLUME XLII, PART V.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

SIXTIETH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

I know the gentleman so well that I know if the President were thumping at the gentleman the gentleman would thump back. [Laughter.] Nor am I charging for one moment that the President either did or could have prevented the gentleman from debating his own case. The gentleman is not afraid of the President nor of anybody else. But, in the President's argument concerning the matter, did he emphasize his point by thumping on the desk?

Mr. DIEKEMA. In answer to that, Mr. Chairman, I am glad to say that the President did not thump on the desk, but that the President, in his usual vigorous style, used gestures. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, I would ask the gentleman this question. This report says that the President called him to account. Now, would the gentleman mind—if he objects to it, of course, I have no right to cross-examine him—would the gentleman mind giving to the House, to the best of his recollection, just the conversation that took place between him and the President upon this subject? Because if it be true that the President questioned or argued or debated with a Member of this House concerning his right to cast a vote, to make a speech, or to make a report in this House, he committed a breach of the privileges of the House. Would the gentleman mind answering the question?

Mr. DIEKEMA. I am very happy to answer that question. Mr. Chairman, the President did not agree with the result of the findings of this committee, and expressed his fear that the great work which Judge Wilfley had been doing in China in cleaning up corruption, in removing from there American corruptionists, in purifying the adminstration of the law in that distant land, might be hampered as the result of a misconstruction on the part of the Americans and the Chinese residing there of the meaning as expressed in our report, and felt that the committee might have been happier in expressing their conclusions in a different manner, such as in his opinion would not injure the American court and the administration of American justice in China, which, as he expressed to me as his opinion, had been raised to a wonderful height during the administration of Judge Wilfley, and had commanded the praise, not only of Americans, but of Chinese and of foreigners in Shanghai.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One more question and I am through. Did the President say that the subcommittee had no right to go on and make these reflections upon Judge Wilfley; that all they had the right to do was to say whether or not he was guilty of an impeachable offense?

Mr. DIEKEMA. He did not, nor did he intimate in the remotest sense that the committee had not a complete right to investigate and report on the whole subject. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WEBB. May I ask the gentleman a question? How long did the discussion last?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WEBB. I ask that he have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIEKEMA. About ten minutes, I should say. It is difficult to time oneself when engaged in a discussion.

Mr. WEBB. Tell us who first broached the subject, the gentleman or the President?

Mr. DIEKEMA. The President did.

Mr. WEBB. Was it in the public reception room?

Mr. DIEKEMA. It was.

Mr. WEBB. How many people were there?

Mr. DIEKEMA. I can not tell the gentleman.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

For furniture, and materials for repairs of the same, $4,000.

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, exclusive of salaries and labor, unless specifically ordered by the House of Representatives, $20,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment by direction of the committee, to go in as an independent paragraph.

Line 11, page 2, insert:

"Public printing and binding: Printing and binding for the Department of the Interior, $85,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DALZELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 19955) making appropriations to supply certain additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAWNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bills on the Private Calendar in order to-day may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that pension bills on the Private Calendar in order to-day may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAPRON took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

On motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, a motion to reconsider votes by which the several foregoing pension bills were passed was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 19158) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. CAPRON in the chair.

Mr. GILHAMS. Mr. Chairman, I desire unanimous consent to return to pages 6 and 7 of the bill under consideration, and offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 22, after the word "dollars," insert "for the acquisition of sites and the erection of buildings for the use of the Weather Bureau, and for all necessary labor, materials, and expenses, plans and specifications to be prepared by the Secretary of Agriculture, and the work done under the supervision of the Chief of the Weather Bureau, not to exceed $45,000.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

Salaries, Bureau of Animal Industry: One chief of Bureau, $5,000; one chief clerk, $2,000; one editor and compiler, $2,000; four clerks of class 4; five clerks of class 3; thirteen clerks of class 2; thirteen clerks of class 1; eight clerks, at $1,000 each; three clerks, at $900 each; two clerks, at $840 each; three clerks, at $720 each; one mechanic, $1,200; one messenger and custodian, $1,000; one carpenter, $1,100; one messenger, $840; three messengers, at $720 each; one skilled laborer, $840; one skilled laborer, $720; two skilled laborers, at $600 each; one skilled laborer, $660; one illustrator, $1,400; in all, $83,660.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve the point of order on some language in line 8.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, we witnessed the amazing spectacle this morning of a Representative on the floor of this House expressing his gratification and his pleasure at the fact that he had been permitted to discuss a proposition with the President of the United States. His statement of the fact seemed to bring a smile of joy to the faces of our friends across the aisle, because, I presume, it is the first indication from the White House that these gentlemen are to be permitted to discuss great problems with the President of the United States. In the past Members of his House have not been so fortunate as the gentleman from Michigan was. There was a time when the President called one of the Members of this House to a very severe accounting, to such an accounting as lost him his seat on the floor of this House. Members of the Committee on Agriculture and Members of this House will recall the discussion relating to the meat-inspection bill that passed Congress in the Fifty-ninth Congress. They will recall, too, a series of remarkable letters passing between the President of the United States and the then chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Mr. Wadsworth. They will recall, too, that this stanch Republican, this strong partisan, but withal this good man and patriot, the then chairman of that committee, does not hold a seat on the floor of this House at present, for the reason that the big stick of the White House was used against him in his district and drove him from public life. On June 14, 1906, the President of the United States wrote to Mr. Wadsworth a letter relative to the meat-inspection bill. In this letter we find the following language:

Perhaps the amendment as you have now drafted it is not quite as bad as it was when you submitted it to me in the first instance, but it is very, very bad. There seems to be one point in which it is possible that the amendment is even worse than the original amendment if, as seems likely, there is no provision making plants accessible at all hours to the inspectors. In any event I am sorry to have to say that this strikes me as an amendment which, no matter how unintentional, is framed so as to minimize a chance of rooting out the evil in the packing business.

Further on he says:

Doubtless it suits the packers.

Further on he says:

It would hamper in the most grossly improper fashion the Secretary of Agriculture doing the work which you have appointed him to do.

And further on he says:

It seems to me that the surest way to keep our foreign trade from us, and, indeed, our interstate trade likewise, in a thoroughly unsatisfactory condition, and to prevent its resuming a position which it formerly had, is to enact the law in the shape of the proposed amendment submitted to me by you.

To this Mr. Wadsworth replied, and he calls attention to the mistake of the President in this language:

If you will turn to page 4 of the bill (copy inclosed), line 2, you will find the following words: "And for the purposes of such examination and inspection said inspectors shall have access at all times to every part of said establishment."—

Although the President, in his letter to Mr. Wadsworth, called attention to the alleged fact that this provision was not in the bill. Further on Mr. Wadsworth called attention to the fact that—

The Secretary of Agriculture shall cause an examination and inspection of all cattle, sheep, swine, and goats, and the food products thereof, slaughtered and prepared in the establishments hereinbefore described for the purpose of interstate or foreign commerce, to be made during the nighttime, as well as during the daytime.

That is the provision of the bill which was submitted to the President, and yet in the face of that provision the President writes to Mr. Wadsworth, as the chairman of the great Committee on Agriculture, and points out, or attempts to point out, the fact that one of the weaknesses of the bill was the fact that no provision was made for night inspection.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not make that motion——

Mr. MANN. There is a point of order pending.

Mr. LEVER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to continue my remarks for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to continue his remarks for five minutes. Is there objection? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. Now, Mr. Chairman, the President in this letter has made the statement that this bill framed by the Committee on Agriculture, if enacted into law, would be ruinous to the foreign trade of America in meat products. Let us see what the workings of this bill have been. Let us see how they tally with the judgment of the President. I wish to read from the hearings of last year the testimony for the benefit of the House for the purpose of showing that the Chief Executive does not hold within himself all wisdom, all virtue, and all patriotism; that there are left in this country at least a few men who have a little sense, a little patriotism, and a little virtue. I will read from page 228 of the hearing, as follows:

Doctor MELVIN. The general action of the bill has been found to be very effective, and there is no doubt that it has resulted in a great deal of good, and I would not like to endanger it by suggesting changes.

Now, on page 243, Mr. LEVER asks the question:

If you will pardon me a moment, Mr. Chairman, I want to get this clear. We will take Doctor Melvin back a little bit. We had a severe agitation last year about this meat business—the packing business. I want to ask the Doctor whether or not in his opinion that agitation hurt seriously the export trade in meat and meat products.

And understand, gentlemen, Doctor Melvin is the man commissioned by the Secretary of Agriculture to enforce this meat-inspection law, and has more knowledge concerning it than any man, perhaps, in the country. To that question Doctor Melvin answered:

There is no doubt but what it did for a time.

Referring to the agitation:

Mr. LEVER. For a time. Now, I want to ask you this—if this bill prepared by this committee has had any effect whatever in restoring the confidence of our foreign buyers of meat and meat products, and are we beginning to get back on a normal basis in the export of these products?

Doctor MELVIN. Yes; I think we are, quite rapidly.

Mr. LEVER. Is it your opinion that it is the result of this bill?

Doctor MELVIN. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Prepared by this committee?

Doctor MELVIN. Yes.

But let us go a little further. The bill had been in operation only about seven months when Doctor Melvin made that statement, which is an absolute demonstration of the fact that the President spoke without information in his letter to Mr. Wadsworth, and not only that, but his judgment was bad as to the effect of this bill.

In the hearing before the Committee on Agriculture on the estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, this same question came up. Let us see what the statement of Doctor Melvin is now after the bill has been in operation nearly two years:

Mr. COLE. Mr. Chairman, I was not here yesterday and I would like to ask one question. How is the meat inspection coming on; is it satisfactory?

Doctor MELVIN. Very satisfactory.

Mr. COLE. Are you asking for any amendments of the law?

Doctor MELVIN. No, sir; we have not asked for any this year. We considered it advisable to work under the present law for two or more years and ascertain very definitely whether any essential changes were necessary before suggesting any. There have been several of minor importance that have occurred to me, and probably next year we may come in with a recommendation for these minor changes.

So that, after this bill has been in operation for eighteen months, it is found by the man charged with the enforcement of the law that he can make no recommendation for any change, that he can suggest nothing but minor changes that might be of any value. But, Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States drove from power and from office the chairman of this committee because he had the nerve and patriotism to stand up for his rights and stand up for truth as he saw it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman reserves the point of order.

Mr. FORNES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, in relation to this bill it is a fact that the Department has accomplished, by its energy and through the great help of the committee which has just made such an excellent report, splendid results in the country. But, however productive our fields, our mines, or our forests, the value thereof depends largely upon the facility of transporting those products, and that facility, as a rule, cheapens the cost thereof. I therefore think that at this time it is quite proper for me to refer to the House resolution introduced by me in the early part of this session, and the amendment thereof introduced last month, namely, the bill H. R. 17417, and I desire to submit and to have inserted in the RECORD a statement thereon which has a bearing upon the Agricultural Department of our Government. I desire that privilege, and I hope the House will grant it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORNES. The bill is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17417) providing for the survey of a ship canal from Benton Harbor, on Lake Michigan, to Toledo, on Lake Erie.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made under the supervision of the Chief of Engineer Corps, United States Army, and report to Congress, in detail, the cost of the project for the establishment of a ship canal from the most available southerly point on the eastern shore of Lake Michigan, at or near Benton Harbor, in the State of Michigan, to the most available westerly point of Lake Erie, terminating in the vicinity of the city of Toledo, in the State of Ohio, and the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

Mr. Chairman, respectfully referring to the bill introduced by me (H. R. 17417) providing for the survey of a ship canal from Benton Harbor or vicinity, on Lake Michigan, to Toledo, on Lake Erie, I beg to submit the following statement in favor of same:

The cost of transportation is paid by the producer or the consumer. The amount of such cost has a fixed basis, calculated upon distance, time, and safety; hence if these principal elements which establish the rate of transportation can be reduced the producer has the trade advantage, both domestic and foreign, the purchaser the benefit of the lower prices.

The construction of a ship canal of ample dimensions connecting the lower easterly shore of Lake Michigan with Lake Erie at or near Toledo, Ohio, would lessen the shipping distance more than 500 miles between the great and constantly increasing commercial ports of Chicago, Milwaukee, and other shipping points on Lake Michigan and Lake Erie. This route, being in a more temperate climate, would lengthen the annual navigation period by fully a month. It would largely decrease the loss through shipwreck in the dangerous early spring and autumn storms, so prevalent in the zone of upper Lake Michigan and Lake Huron. It would avoid the shallow waters of the St. Clair River and Lake St. Clair, also the Detroit River, which are all serious obstacles to navigation. There would be no perceptible current in the canal, the altitude between Lake Michigan and Lake Erie being 14 feet only, or about half an inch a mile. The construction of this proposed canal seems to me most imperative, in order that the vast and constantly increasing commerce between the Middle and Northwestern fertile sections of our country and the Atlantic ports will not be diverted through the Canadian channels. If not already a settled fact, it is safe to assume that the Dominion of Canada will connect the Georgian Bay with the St. Lawrence River or Lake Ontario by a ship canal. Such a line would attract a large amount of freight from our lakes on account of the shortness of the route. A report made by the underwriters at Chicago January 11, 1908, states:

During the season of navigation on the Lakes, just closed, 38 vessels, with a total tonnage of 27,010, passed out of existence. With the exception of one steamship, all the boats lost were freighters. The aggregate loss in value was $1,692,000. This does not of course include large amounts which were paid out by the underwriters for partial losses. This latter amount doubtless exceeds the aforesaid amount. The season was remarkable for the number of disastrous collisions on the route between Lake Huron and Lake Erie, being 129 out of a total of 534.

Assuming that the ship canal would lessen this loss by but one-third, equivalent to at least $1,000,000 a season, not mentioning even the far more valuable loss of human life, this saving alone would more than pay the interest on the capital invested.

During the year 1907, 23,721 vessels passed through the Detroit River with a tonnage of 48,958,328, as compared with 24,077 with a tonnage of 46,072,618, showing that the vessels are growing larger, as well as the business. The merchandise traffic of 1907, through the Detroit River, amounted to 67,292,504 net tons, as compared with 60,578,155 net tons in 1906. Of the western shipments of 20,326,311 tons, 18,427,121 tons were coal from the mines in Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia. The total lake commerce for 1907 was 10 per cent greater than 1906 and 20 per cent greater than 1905.

The approximate grain shipments yearly from Lake Michigan ports to Buffalo is reported as 80,000,000 bushels, the average freight charges and insurance being 3 cents a bushel. The ship canal would, owing to the shorter distance, lower the insurance rate, decrease the freight and insurance charges at least one-third, or $800,000. Again, a longer navigation season would increase the total shipments, hence increase materially the amount saved. Shipments from Lake Erie ports to Lake Michigan ports are reported at about 17,000,000 tons. Applying the same economy on account of the distance and length of season, an additional saving of about $700,000 is obtained, or a million and a half annually on these two items of freight, or a return of 6 per cent on an outlay of twenty-five million, which in my judgment, is an amount far in excess of the cost of a canal of ample dimensions. It is admitted that the commerce of our country, both domestic and foreign, urgently demands increased shipping facilities and at a reduced cost. The millions of people of the Middle and Northwestern States will obtain their coal, farm implements, and household goods cheaper; and, likewise, at least 15,000,000 people of the Atlantic coast States will obtain the necessaries of life at less cost, saving the poor breadwinner on the indispensable article, flour, at least 10 cents a barrel, saved because freight is lower and the time in transit lessened.

The Empire State, New York, fully realizing the urgent demand for improved and cheaper freight-carrying methods, appropriated recently over $100,000,000 for the improvement and enlargement of the Erie Canal. In other words, less than one-eighth of the population of the United States assumed a debt of over one hundred million for the benefit of the nation's commerce in the matter of more extensive exports of our farm and mineral products on account of lowering freight charges against them and improving shipping facilities.

To illustrate the wisdom of these expenditures by the State and the nation, the wonderful increase in lake commerce should clearly suffice, viz., the total shipments by lake in net tons in 1906 were 73,600,648; in 1907, 83,387,319. Coal shipments in 1906 were 17,575,917 tons, and 19,388,414 tons in 1907. Contemplate, if possible, the extent of the lake and canal commerce twenty-five or fifty years hence, when more than the outlay has been liquidated by the economy it established, the property and life saved, and as time goes on, its usefulness and benefits increase, for the more numerous the time-saving methods adopted the greater the ability to meet competition in trade with other nations. The canal toll should not exceed the cost of maintenance and interest on the United States Government bonds, running fifty years, with 2 per cent per annum for the sinking fund, to liquidate the bonds.

I herewith submit various committee reports of former endeavors in behalf of this undertaking, namely:

Report of the Committee on Railways and Canals dated June 19, 1878, House Report 1010, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, to accompany House bill 3660, recommending an appropriation of $15,000 for the survey.

Report of the Committee on Railways and Canals dated January 23, 1880, House Report 155, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, to accompany House bill 994, recommending an appropriation for the survey.

Report of the Committee on Railways and Canals dated May 6, 1886, House Report 2294, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, to accompany House bill 4971, recommending an appropriation of $30,000 for the survey.

I ask that these reports be annexed to my statement and be printed in the RECORD in connection therewith; also I desire to have inserted that portion of the President's message to Congress on March 25, 1908, in reference to waterways, to wit:

Ample provision should be made for a permanent waterways commission, with whatever power is required to make it effective. The reasonable expectation of the people will not be met unless the Congress provides at this session for the beginning and prosecution of the actual work of waterway improvement and control. The Congress should recognize in fullest fashion the fact that the subject of the conservation of our natural resources, with which this commission deals, is literally vital for the future of the nation.

WATER TRANSPORTATION BETWEEN LAKES MICHIGAN AND ERIE.

June 19, 1878, committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Hazleton, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, submitted the following report (to accompany bill H. R. 3660):

The Committee on Railways and Canals, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3660) to provide for a water route to facilitate transportation between Lake Michigan and Lake Erie, having considered the same, report:

That on behalf of 6,500 citizens of Michigan, who have presented a petition asking that a survey be made for a canal to connect Lake Michigan and Lake Erie, the following statement has been presented to the committee:

"The annual commerce of the States tributary to the lakes is over $500,000,000.

"The annual loss of property on the lakes, between Chicago and Detroit, is not less than $1,500,000.

"The saving of distance between Chicago and Detroit by this proposed canal is over 500 miles.

"It is estimated that a saving of 1 cent a bushel on the grain exported from Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, and Missouri would pay a very large interest on the cost of the proposed canal.

"From two to three days in time of transit between Lake Michigan and Lake Erie would be saved by the proposed canal and from eight to ten weeks of navigation gained in the spring and autumn.

"It is estimated that a toll of 5 cents per ton would pay the entire cost of the canal and expenses of operating it in twenty years."

Without expressing any opinion on the representations made, the committee are of the opinion that the project is of sufficient importance to warrant a survey by the Government to determine whether there is a practicable route for a canal to connect Lake Michigan with Lake Erie and what would be the probable cost of constructing the same.

We reccommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "thirty-five," in the eighth line, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifteen," and that the bill be passed with that amendment.

[House Report No. 155, Forty-sixth Congress, second session.]

WATER ROUTE BETWEEN LAKES MICHIGAN AND ERIE.

January 23, 1880, committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Wise, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, submitted the following report (to accompany bill H. R. 994):

The Committee on Railroads and Canals, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 994) to provide for a water route to facilitate transportation between Lake Michigan and Lake Erie, beg leave to make the following report:

First. That the aspect of the country through which the route of the projected canal would pass is of a level and even character, abundantly supplied with running water in shallow streams, and would offer but little opposition to the construction anywhere, and most of the way is peculiarly adapted to the water feeding of canals.

Second. Taking into consideration the great distance and high latitude of the channel through Lakes Michigan, Huron, and St. Clair to Lake Erie, we find that by this route we have to pass around four-fifths of an irregular circle, a distance of 1,000 miles, the northern part of the circuit in a frigid climate, with streams ice locked two months of the year longer than on the southern fifth of the circle, the proposed route, which is but 200 miles long and 4 degrees south of the northern part of the circle, and should it prove practicable to use the channels of the St. Joseph and Maumee rivers, which lie nearly in the direction of the proposed route most of the way across this peninsula, the distance and cost of actual canal cutting would be still further reduced nearly in that proportion, as comparatively little work on these two rivers would make them navigable to points less than 50 miles apart. This cutting off of 800 miles in distance and adding two months yearly to the navigation season would certainly be a master stroke in benefiting the large and increasing commerce from the West to the East, to say nothing of the local benefit conferred upon the proposed route.

Third. So long as the Dominion of Canada is an appendage of Great Britain, the necessity of the bill before us is apparent as a military route. Its inland character, and the saving of time and distance in the transportation of gunboats, men-of-war, and heavy ordnance that can not be transported by railroad, would seem to make it a military necessity in case of war with Great Britain.

Fourth. Your committee would also call the attention of the House to the vast agricultural area beyond the western terminus of said canal; also the large and rapidly improving territory in western Canada, which must seek a more southern latitude for ingress and egress, which will soon become as celebrated for cereal productions as Russia, lying under nearly the same latitude as it and in as favorable a climate.

Fifth. It seems to be an acknowledged fact that the present railway facilities are insufficient to move the vast quantities of produce from the Northwest to Eastern markets in due season, unaided by water communication, as is well shown by the vast accumulation of grain in Chicago and other points at the present moment awaiting transportation east. Further, such stagnation in movement, or the impossibility of movement, of such products, not only makes it impossible for, but invites, capitalists to interpose their power to monopolize and form "pools" and "corners" to the serious detriment of both producer and consumer. And, again, while the railroad companies are gradually enlarging and extending their facilities, the ratio of increase in produce is much greater than this, so that evidently these difficulties will become greater and greater year after year without the aid of enlarged, better, and safer water communication for the movement of these heavy products.

Sixth. It is a matter of vital consequence to our commerce to establish this route, or some equivalent thereof, in order to hold our own trade and to draw that from western Canada over our routes, instead of waiting until after they have constructed similar cut-offs, which they propose, across their own territory, and have drawn all their commerce and a part of ours from us.

[House Report No. 2294, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

WATER ROUTE TO CONNECT LAKE MICHIGAN WITH DETROIT RIVER.

May 6, 1886, committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Atkinson, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, submitted the following report (to accompany bill H. R. 4971):

The Committee on Railways and Canals, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4971) to provide for the survey of a water route to connect the waters of Lake Michigan with Detroit River, have considered the matter, and beg leave to report:

That a bill of similar import was introduced into the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses and referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, which considered the same and reported favorably thereon; that the Committee on Railways and Canals now report the bill favorably and adopt the report presented to the Forty-seventh Congress, as follows:

"The Committee on Railways and Canals, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3693) to provide for the survey of a water route to connect the waters of Lake Michigan with Detroit River, have considered the matter, and beg leave to report:

"The length of the canal, for which the bill before the committee proposes to authorize and direct an appropriation of $30,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War for a preliminary survey, would be about 178 miles. The canal would shorten the voyage, for all such vessels as could navigate it, between the lower lake ports and Chicago or Milwaukee, about 550 miles; or, as between Chicago and Buffalo, by one-half the distance.

"It is believed that the season of navigation on the lakes would also be prolonged, as between the upper and lower lakes, by at least thirty days, a portion of which gain would be in the spring and a portion in the autumn or early winter months, and would be a gain of at least 15 per cent on the open period of navigation.

"It would further appear that as to steam vessels an average of two days' time would be saved on the voyage each way, making a saving of four days on the round trip, which, on the season's work of, say, fifteen round trips, would amount to sixty days. As to sailing vessels, the difference in their favor would be much greater; but confining the comparison to steam vessels and their tows, the advantages of the ship canal which is contemplated in this bill would be in the two ways indicated equivalent to an addition of ninety days to the time of open navigation, or an addition of nearly or quite 50 per cent, and increase the number of voyages or trips in that proportion. The value of this can not be even approximately estimated, but if the ship canal were to be of sufficient capacity to float vessels freighted with 50,000 bushels of wheat or corn, the added value to commerce would be immensely in excess of the expenditure, which, it is believed, would not exceed $5,000,000.

"The late navigation of the upper lakes is always hazardous, and it is estimated that loss by storm and wreck between Chicago and Detroit rivers has for twenty-five years past been more than $1,000,000 annually. The operation of the canal would undoubtedly diminish this by at least one-half, which would of itself be equivalent to the interest on the cost of the canal and the expense of its conduct and administration.

"There has never been an official or governmental survey of the proposed route, but it has been carefully examined by private parties of experience in railway and canal engineering, and your committee are informed and believe that the aspect of the country through which the projected route would pass is of a comparatively level and even character, abundantly supplied with water in running streams, and bordered along a large part of the way with deep, never-failing little lakes of from 2 to 10 miles in circumference, and to the number of 300 and more. A considerable portion of these lie above the summit level of the proposed canal, and an abundant water supply for a ship canal of largest capacity is therefore undoubted.

"It is proper to say, however, that the bill under consideration but proposes an appropriation for a survey, leaving it to a future Congress to appropriate for the work itself, if it be determined to enter upon it. The question of water supply, the depth of cut, and general engineering problems and ascertained conditions will then be available for accurate information.

"So long as the Dominion of Canada is an appendage of Great Britain the necessity of the bill before us is apparent as a military route. Its inland character and the saving of time and distance in the transportation of gunboats, men-of-war, and heavy ordnance that can not be transported by railroad, would seem to make it a military necessity in case of war with Great Britain.

"There are five States in the Northwest whose products would be tributary to the proposed canal, whose united crop of cereals is now materially in excess of the whole crop of the United States twenty-five years ago, and the rapidly increasing productions of provisions, live stock for transportation, and other heavy freights to move are in still greater proportion. While this is all true, it is also true that less than one-twentieth part of even the most productive portions of our Northwestern States and Territories are yet under cultivation, and our vast mining interests only in the first stages of development.

"The increased necessities for almost unlimited transportation increase faster than those facilities are furnished, and invite the attention of the Government to all feasible improvements and the opening of new water courses such as that under consideration. While the railroad companies are gradually enlarging and extending their facilities, the ratio of increase in produce is much greater than this, so that evidently difficulties will become greater and greater year after year without the aid of enlarged, better, and safer water communication for the movement of these heavy products.

"There is, in the opinion of your committee, no means of affording protection to American industry in a manner more direct and so free from question as to multiply the methods of cheap transportation, and there is no method of diminishing its cost so promising as to increase the waterways, which not only afford the cheapest of all, but should remain in the control of the Government, be exempt from all questions of discrimination, rates, and other distracting questions of carriage that agitate the public mind.

"Taking into consideration the little opposition of nature, the shortening of distance, the more favorable climate, and the lengthened navigation season and the lessening of its perils, the inadequacy of present routes, the prospective increase of these difficulties, and, independent of the difference in the length of time of navigation in the two routes, the great disparity in the increase is so important that the committee respectfully report in favor of an appropriation for a survey for a water route, such as described in the bill under consideration, and recommend that it do pass."

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order on page 9, line 21, commencing with the word "and."

Mr. SCOTT. We have not read that paragraph. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] reserved a point of order on the paragraph that has just been read. I do not see him in the Chamber now, but I believe the gentleman from Illinois desires to reserve the same point of order. I presume it is aimed at an increase in one salary and the introduction of another place.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that the reading of the bill has not proceeded as far as indicated by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. The other gentleman from Illinois he refers to.

Mr. SCOTT. I am not talking about the point the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has raised, but the point that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has raised to the first paragraph of the bill. I was saying I presumed that point was leveled at an increase of salary and the introduction of another place. The estimates for this salary roll included an increase of $250 for the chief clerk and $100 for the editor, both of which were denied. Increases were asked also on the roll of clerks; but all these were denied except one clerk of class 4, which was granted, and a clerk at $900. Speaking, first, as to the $900 clerk, I wish to say that this place was inserted in order to eliminate two clerks at $600.

Mr. MADDEN. Just to assure the gentleman the only interest I have in the point of order is as to the words "and compiler."

Mr. SCOTT. I respectfully suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order will not lie against that item, for the reason that the title given is the same as in the current law.

Mr. MADDEN. The current law reads "one editor," and the words "and compiler" are added.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman is right; I see, on looking closer, that the words "and compiler" are added. They were added at the suggestion of the Chief of the Bureau, because, in his opinion, it would more accurately describe the work which the man occupying that position was intended to do. He not only edits the manuscripts which come to him, fitting them to go to the printer, but he compiles matter that is brought into the Bureau from different sources in such a way as to prepare it for bulletins and other forms of publications.

Mr. MADDEN. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. As I understand it, the gentleman's point of order only goes to the words "and compiler."

Mr. BURLESON. This does not create an additional office?

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, no.

Mr. BURLESON. It is just the one office.

Mr. SCOTT. It is a matter of indifference as to whether the change is made or not.

Mr. MADDEN. This creates a new office, if I understand the English language. It creates new duties, and in the nature of things it will create a new office, and it may be that it will create several new places. I object to it because of the doubt it serves to make.

Mr. SCOTT. The apprehensions of the gentleman are entirely unfounded, but I concede the point of order, and it makes no difference.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER of Vermont). The point of order is sustained.

Mr. OLMSTED. I move to strike out the last word.

I offer this important amendment for the purpose of making an important inquiry upon a very important subject. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], having listened recently to a scientific lecture, worked off a considerable portion of it upon us last evening. We listened with great interest and greater incredulity when he attempted to have us believe that scientific research has now reached to such a dizzy height that the scientists, without any appropriation by Congress, can tell four years in advance what the weather is going to be on the planet Mars, but that on this terrestrial ball it is an impossibility to regulate our weather properly without an appropriation to pay the expense of observing the vapors that rise from the Salton Sea, formed by the overflow of the Colorado River into the empty bed of a dried-up old lake; so we have left in this bill an appropriation sufficient to send a corps of Government employees to sit around the rim and watch the vapors rising from that dead and vanishing lake. We were told that we could not properly construct even the Panama Canal unless those experts had an opportunity to watch those Salton Sea waters evaporate. That it would not do as a test to watch merely the evaporation of water from a bucket. We were told that it must be done now. That the lake will soon be gone; that this is our last chance; that there is no other lake in the world like this; and that such observations at any other place would serve no useful purpose.

How would an estimate of the vapors arising from that lake serve as any guide to the vapors which might arise from a living body of water, fed by living streams and its temperature and evaporations constantly changing as a result thereof? In my judgment the Government observers might as well sit in this gallery, hang their legs over the railing, and observe the vaporings which arise from this floor from time to time. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] offered a much more valuable amendment whereby, had it become effective, people living along rural free-delivery routes would have been enabled to tell in the afternoon whether or not it had rained in the morning. [Laughter.] But that amendment failed. However, we have passed beyond the provision in this bill relating to the Weather Bureau and now approach the question of animal industry. Every Member of this House finds his daily mail flooded with inquiries from his constituents. After some years of experience I thought I had become able to answer offhand any possible question relating to the affairs of this Government or the welfare of the nation, but recently there have been propounded several that staggered and one that completely overpowered me. A short time ago a constituent desired to know the exact value of the gold in a gold dollar. [Laughter.] Knowing that there was some alloy in it, I took up the question with apprehension, but by the assistance of the Secretary of the Treasury and Director of the Mint I was able to answer with exactness. Another desired to know whether it was true, as had been asserted, that since the Spanish war we could truly say, with the King of England, that the sun never sets on our possessions. With the aid of a globe and all the data at the command of the Committee on Insular Affairs, of which I have the honor to be a member, I wrestled with that problem for several days and then turned it over to the Government Observatory, just outside the city. After two weeks they were able to inform me that there is a short period within the twenty-four hours when the sun, hanging out over some point in the Pacific Ocean, does not shine upon any people or possessions within the jurisdiction of the United States. I submit to the gentleman from Illinois that that would be a far more important place to take these observations of evaporation. [Laughter.] For when the sun gets there I have no doubt that it accelerates its speed in order to again get where its rays may fall upon the glorious folds of the American flag. [Laughter.]

But to return to the question of animal industry. All kinds of questions are propounded to us. Why, I have been told that some time ago a Member from Missouri had a letter from a constituent asking what price he could obtain for a carload of mules in this city. He replied that the street cars were run by electricity and the Government was run by jackasses. [Laughter.] That was during the last Democratic Administration. [Laughter.] So he said there was no use for mules in Washington.

But to return to the question of animal industry. The latest conundrum was propounded to me by an intelligent lady. That is the important inquiry which I am about to bring to the attention of the House and the country. She wrote me in all seriousness, stating that she understood that the Government made numerous publications upon all subjects, and assuming that I as a Member of Congress must be familiar with their contents. Therefore she desired me to answer this question: "What does it cost to keep a hen a year?" [Laughter.] Compared with that question the evaporation of the Salton Sea sinks into utter insignificance. Mr. Chairman, we are upon the subject of animal industry. What animal is more industrious than the hen? Whose activity is more useful to the human race? The nightingale, the lark, and the linnet have all had their praises told in story and in song, but the hen, more valuable to the human race than all other birds, is compelled to sing her own lay. [Laughter.] I do not wish to consume unnecessarily the time of the House. My constituent went further into detail and said that if there were any differences, depending upon the different breeds of hens, she would like to know the respective costs of keeping hens of the different breeds. I will not go so far into detail as that, but now ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] the distinguished and capable chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, in charge of this bill, and ex-officio custodian of all information relating to such subjects, to inform me, my constituent, the House, and the country what answer ought to be made to that question of such transcendent importance and vast significance, "What does it cost to keep a hen a year?"

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry: For carrying out the provisions of the act approved May 29, 1884, establishing the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1891, providing for the safe transport and humane treatment of export cattle from the United States to foreign countries, and for other purposes; and the provisions of the act approved February 2, 1903, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to more effectually suppress and prevent the spread of contagious and infectious diseases of live stock, and for other purposes; and also the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1905, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts, to permit and regulate the movement of cattle and other live stock therefrom, and for other purposes: Provided, That live horses be entitled to the same inspection as other animals herein named; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to collect evidence and secure the enforcement of the act of June 29, 1906, entitled "An act to prevent cruelty to animals while in transit by railroad or other means of transportation," and so forth, and particularly to inquire into the condition of pens and yards into which live stock are unloaded, and the manner of unloading, in order that live stock in interstate commerce may secure humane treatment, including the services of such persons as may be necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. I suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill, in reference to the latter part of the paragraph, why not make that portion of the paragraph relating to the enforcement of the humane treatment in the transit law read in the same form of language as the rest of the paragraph—"for carrying out the provisions of the act of June 29, 1906, entitled," and so forth—instead of the form that it is now in?

Mr. SCOTT. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois is a very proper one. I have no objection to it whatever.

Mr. MANN. I will make a point of order on the paragraph, after line 16 to the end of the paragraph.

Mr. SCOTT. I think the point of order will hardly lie. It seems to me that the bill is justified in carrying a provision for the enforcement of an act, which act by its own terms places the enforcement thereof in this Department.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is perfectly correct about that, and an item for carrying out the provisions of that act would not be subject to a point of order; but if this goes out on a point of order, if the gentleman does not offer an amendment, I will. This provision goes away beyond that and provides for securing evidence about the enforcement of the act, "and so forth."

Mr. SCOTT. That is a misprint. I remember striking it out of the first proof sheets that came from the office, but I did not follow it up to see if it was out.

Mr. MANN. The whole paragraph goes away beyond the enforcement of the law, and is a matter, so far as the jurisdiction of committees are concerned, that comes within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and not under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to ask why it would not be possible to shape the amendment to strike out certain language and insert, instead of letting it go out on a point of order, which I do not wish to concede.

Mr. MANN. The point of order is perfectly clear.

Mr. SCOTT. I thought the gentleman said that it was not clear.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it is perfectly clear. This says:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to collect evidence and secure the enforcement of the act of June 29, 1906, entitled "An act to prevent cruelty to animals while in transit by railroad or other means of transportation," etc., and particularly to inquire into the condition of pens and yards into which live stock are unloaded and the manner of unloading.

Now, the act of Congress provides what shall be done by the Secretary of Agriculture, and the appropriation gives him the means to carry out the provisions of the act. But this provision changes the law.

Mr. SCOTT. There was no intention to change the law. The language carried in the bill is simply that submitted in the estimates.

Mr. MANN. I suppose that is true.

Mr. SCOTT. I am perfectly willing to have it go out, and I think the bill would be improved.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What change does the gentleman from Illinois suggest?

Mr. MANN. To insert in place of what is in the bill this provision, which is in conformity with the other provisions in the bill:

For carrying out the provisions of the act of June 29, 1906, entitled "An act to prevent cruelty to animals while in transit by railroad or other means of transportation."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It changes the phraseology, but not the significance. I suppose all the work specified here can be done under the provisions of the general act. What I do not always understand is why it is necessary, whenever the Federal Government enacts a law with a penal provision, that a battalion, or a host in many instances, of special agents shall be appointed to go about to look up evidence to see if anybody is violating the law. We have penal laws in every State, and it is rarely necessary to create an army of spies to travel around over the State to see if they can secure evidence that some citizen is violating the law.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana on that point that I had charge of the bill creating the act referred to and gave the matter a great deal of attention. We had long hearings on the subject. It is perfectly self-evident, I think, that an act requiring that live stock shall be unloaded at least once every thirty-six hours and fed and watered in proper pens will not enforce itself where both shipper and the railroad company for some reason desire to run over the time, and that it is necessary for the Secretary of Agriculture to have some means of employing inspectors where they suspect railroads are violating the law to watch at certain yards and see that railroads do not run over the time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, the Federal legislation is predicated upon the theory that there is no virtue nor sentiment of humanity in the people. The States depend upon citizens for information in the proper enforcement of local penal laws.

Mr. MANN. In my city we depend largely upon 4,000 policemen, and in the gentleman's own city they have a number of policemen, and in this city they have 750 policemen.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is true of all large cities, and true, more or less, of all communities and municipalities, but the penal laws generally enacted by the States do not carry with them authority to appoint a lot of State agents to go about throughout the country to find out whether the laws are being observed. It may be, and possibly is true in this particular case, that the law would be violated and that there is no such sentiment against its violation in the various States throughout the country as would result in necessary information to the Federal grand juries and proper prosecutions. It may be that this is necessary, but it is one of the instances I wanted to call to the attention of the committee.

We have now four or five thousand special agents, Government spies, traveling about over the country looking for violations of the penal laws of the United States—a great army of them, a system of espionage that we ought not to tolerate unless it is necessary for the proper enforcement of the law. This is a good law and I think it ought to be enforced, and it may be that conditions are such that in this case there ought to be granted to the Secretary of Agriculture public funds to use in collecting evidence and securing the prosecution of offenders.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand there is any very large amount estimated for in reference to this. It has required only a few prosecutions to make the railroads wake up, and they have already collected, I may say to the gentleman, so far as this law is concerned, from the railroads in penalties and fines for neglect to obey this law more than the total cost will be to enforce it for another year.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and perhaps other Members of the House will be interested in knowing that this particular language to which the gentleman objects was included in a letter which the Secretary of Agriculture addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury asking for a supplemental estimate to the amount of $25,000. The letter read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 1, 1908.

SIR: I beg to request that you will transmit to Congress, as a supplemental estimate from this Department, the following item of $25,000 to cover necessary expenses for collecting evidence and securing the enforcement of the act of June 29, 1906:

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to collect evidence and secure the enforcement of the act of June 29, 1906, entitled 'An act to prevent cruelty to animals while in transit by railroad or other means of transportation,' etc., and particularly to inquire into the condition of pens and yards into which live stock are unloaded, and the manner of unloading, in order that live stock in interstate commerce may secure humane treatment, including the services of such persons as may be necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $25,000."

Since August, 1906, the inspectors of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture have reported over 1,200 violations of this law. These cases have been transmitted to the Attorney-General for prosecution. Over 250 cases have been tried and penalties fixed. In all, under the law, $24,306 in penalties have been collected up to the present time. This is exclusive of costs, which will probably amount to between $7,000 and $8,000 in addition. There are now between 900 and 1,000 cases pending in the courts.

The principle upon which this law rests is sound—the principle that dumb brutes in a civilized and humane nation should receive due care from common carriers in the course of transportation.

The collection of evidence in cases under the law involves the expenditure of a considerable amount of money, which subsequently is returned to the Treasury in the shape of fines and costs. Violations are reported in the first instance by inspectors of the Bureau of Animal Industry, who make the reports incidentally in connection with their other duties. The matter of procuring evidence, consulting records, interviewing witnesses, and the incidental work connected with the preparation of the cases for the United States attorneys involves considerable outlay. The examination by Government inspectors of the pens and yards along the lines of the different railroads into which cattle are unloaded for rest and water involves a considerable expenditure. This examination is necessary in order to determine whether such pens and yards are properly equipped so that the live stock may feed and rest while confined therein.

There is no specific appropriation to cover these expenses. In my opinion it is advisable that a specific appropriation shall be made for this purpose.

Very respectfully,

JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

From which it would appear, Mr. Chairman, that in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture it is necessary to insert the language which he included in his letter in order that the expense which is involved in the collection of evidence to enforce this act may be met, and I submit that to the gentleman for his consideration.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas knows the high regard that I have for the Secretary of Agriculture. Yet it has been a long time since this House has been honored with the presence of the Secretary of Agriculture as one of its Members, and I really believe that while the Secretary could give everybody in the House points on the subject of agriculture, the House itself is a better judge of the language of an appropriation bill than the Secretary of Agriculture. Merely furnishing him the means with which to carry out the law is all he desires, but the gentleman changes the law in this bill.

Mr. SCOTT. He changes the law.

Mr. MANN. I mean the bill proposes to change the law. That law was framed after a great deal of consideration. I do not know, but that this would change it in behalf of more humane treatment; perhaps it would change it in behalf of less humane treatment. I do not want to have that law changed upon an appropriation bill. I do want, however, to furnish the means to carry out the law.

Mr. SCOTT. I have no doubt that the gentleman is in hearty sympathy with the purposes of the law, and if in his judgment the language which he proposes to substitute for that which is in the bill will carry forward effectively the enforcement of the law, I have no objection to the change.

Mr. POLLARD. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois whether these words that the Secretary uses in his draft do not cover matter that is included in the bill, to which the gentleman refers, in the law—is not the ground all covered?

Mr. MANN. If they do there is no necessity of repeating the language in this bill.

Mr. POLLARD. That is what I was going to inquire into in this case. If that is the case all that is necessary here is to repeat the title of the act and give complete authority to do what is asked for.

Mr. MANN. The first part of the paragraph reads:

For carrying out the provisions of the act approved May 29, 1884, establishing the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1891, providing for the safe transport and humane treatment of export cattle from the United States to foreign countries, and for other purposes.

That is a similar law relating to export cattle—that is, cattle that are carried by boats.

Mr. POLLARD. As I understand the gentleman, all he desires to do is to substitute for this language the two titles of those two acts, giving the Secretary——

Mr. MANN. Full authority——

Mr. POLLARD. I do not see any objection to that.

Mr. MANN. But this changes the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois state his point of order?

Mr. MANN. The point of order is that the latter part of the provision, that part of the paragraph commencing with line 17 to the end of the paragraph, is a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois mean by that it embodies new legislation?

Mr. MANN. It embodies new legislation, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that conceded by the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. SCOTT. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not concede it embodies new legislation, but I have no objection to the language going out and the language suggested by the gentleman from Illinois being inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course the Chair not having the original law is not able to state——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is very clear, I take it, that unless it repeats the exact language of existing law it is a change of law, even though it should endeavor to incorporate the substance of the present law. Now, this reads "in order that live stock in interstate commerce may secure humane treatment"——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to insert in lieu of the matter stricken out on the point of order this amendment, after line 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after line 16, "for carrying out the provisions of the act of June 29, 1906, entitled 'An act to prevent cruelty to animals in transit by railroad or other means of transportation.'"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order on that part of the paragraph commencing on line 4, after the word "one," to and including the word "purposes," in line 6, and I will ask the chairman of the committee if he will be kind enough to tell us why this language is used?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the point of order comes too late.

Mr. MADDEN. No; the point of order was reserved on the whole paragraph and it has not been withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point raised by the gentleman from Kansas is well taken.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague, whether or not he did not reserve the point of order on the whole paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that, but the committee has adopted an amendment since that time.

Mr. MADDEN. But the point of order, Mr. Chairman, was not yielded up by any Member on this floor, and I submit that the point of order, as long as it was reserved on the whole paragraph, applied to every part of the paragraph, and the fact that one special part of the paragraph was modified——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands, however, that the adoption of an amendment is a waiver, and the Chair so holds.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I am very willing to give the gentleman information in regard to this language.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not saying that I would insist upon the point of order, but I simply wanted to know from the chairman of the committee the purpose of the language that is used in this connection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, this language was used in every appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture from the passage of the act referred to up until the passage of the meat-inspection law. Members of the House will remember that the meat-inspection law came into the appropriation bill the second year after it was passed, and was stricken out on the ground that it was not necessary to repeat it, and the Clerk in striking out the "meat-inspection amendment," as it was called, inadvertently took out the language providing for the enforcement of this act of 1891, and this bill simply restores that language.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to collect and disseminate information concerning live stock, dairy, and other animal products, and to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, black leg, tuberculosis, sheep scab, glanders or farcy, hog cholera, and other diseases of animals, and for this purpose to employ as many persons in the city of Washington or elsewhere as he may deem necessary, and to purchase and destroy diseased or exposed animals or quarantine the same whenever, in his judgment, it is essential to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, tuberculosis, or other diseases of animals from one State to another; to improve and maintain the Bureau experiment station at Bethesda, Md., and to construct and alter buildings thereon as may be necessary from time to time in his discretion; to establish, improve, and maintain quarantine stations, to construct and alter buildings thereon as may be necessary from time to time, and to provide proper shelter and equipment for the care of neat cattle, domestic and other animals imported, at such ports as may be deemed necessary; to prepare and publish reports relating to animal industry; to rent suitable buildings in the District of Columbia, to be used for office, laboratory, and storage purposes for said Bureau of Animal Industry for purposes other than meat inspection: Provided, That the act of March 3, 1891, as amended March 2, 1895, for the inspection of live cattle and products thereof, shall be deemed to include dairy products intended for exportation to any foreign country, and the Secretary of Agriculture may apply, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, the provisions of said act for inspection and certification appropriate for ascertaining the purity and quality of such products, and may cause the same to be so marked, stamped, or labeled as to secure their identity and make known in the markets of foreign countries to which they may be sent from the United States their purity, quality, and grade; and all the provisions of said act relating to live cattle and products thereof for export shall apply to dairy products so inspected and certified: Provided also, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to purchase in the open market samples of all tuberculin serums, antitoxins, or analogous products, of foreign or domestic manufacture, which are sold in the United States for the detection, prevention, treatment, or cure of diseases of domestic animals, to test the same and to publish the results of said tests in such manner as he may deem best: Provided also, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to investigate, in cooperation with municipal and State authorities, or in such other ways as he may deem best, and to report to Congress upon the prevalence and extent of tuberculosis among dairy cattle in the United States, $947,200.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order on the paragraph, and will ask the chairman of the committee if he will not be kind enough to explain that part of the paragraph beginning with the word "also," on page 11, line 22, and ending on page 12, line 2?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve specially a point of order to a portion of the paragraph beginning at the word "provided," line 25, page 10, and extending to and including line 14, page 11.

Mr. SCOTT. Taking these points of order in the order in which they come in the bill, and referring first to the one raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS], I would like to inquire what his objection is? Exactly identical language has been carried in the bill for many years.

Mr. PERKINS. Of course, the law of 1895 is an existing statute, but I did not understand—perhaps I am wrong in my understanding—that that authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to practically establish tests of all dairy products, and to stamp upon all dairy products that may be sent from this country to any other country—cheese, butter, whatever it might be—stamps that should indicate or guarantee their purity. I do not understand that is the law. I may be wrong in my understanding. The gentleman is more familiar with the statutes than I am.

Mr. SCOTT. The current act, as I have just stated, contains exactly this language.

Mr. PERKINS. You mean that the last appropriation bill may have contained a similar provision?

Mr. SCOTT. It is true, as the gentleman suggests, that the language to which he has referred has no legal existence except as it is carried from year to year in this appropriation bill. The House adopted it several years ago because a situation had grown up in Europe which seemed to threaten our trade in dairy products unless something could be done to give them a better standing than they then had. The Secretary of Agriculture was of the opinion that by the expenditure of a very small sum of money each year he would be able to issue the certificates provided for in this language, and he has been doing that work with very beneficial results to our commerce.

Mr. PERKINS. Now, exactly, what has the Secretary of Agriculture done? What does he do? For instance, cheese or butter is sent to Europe. Is that all inspected by the Government and certified?

Mr. SCOTT. My understanding of the conduct of the inspection is that whenever certificates are asked for they are given. I confess that it has been so many years since this matter was discussed before the committee that I am not able to give the gentleman the details of the work.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman in charge of the bill must concede that under the wording of the bill, as he reports it, the Secretary of Agriculture would be authorized to ascertain the purity and quality, and cause to be marked and stamped and labeled every pound of butter and every pound of cheese and every pound of the enormous amount of dairy products sent from this country to Europe—a power, certainly, which would involve the expense of hundreds of thousands of dollars and would cause the Government of the United States, if this power was exercised, to take entire charge of an industry, examine it, guarantee it, and certify it before the goods could be sold.

Mr. SCOTT. Evidently some limitation is put upon the discretion of the Secretary by the act of 1895, which is referred to here, because the gentleman will notice that the language is as follows:

To include dairy products intended for exportation to any foreign country, and the Secretary of Agriculture may apply under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him the provisions of said act.

This simply authorizes him to prescribe the regulations that may be necessary in order to put into practical effect the provisions of the act of 1895.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me ask the gentleman, who has drawn this bill doubtless with care, if the act of 1895 does include dairy products, if there is any necessity for saying it may be deemed to include dairy products? A provision in a bill in which some act is referred to that Congress has passed, and which then provides this shall be deemed to contain some other power, I think we always view with just distrust.

If the law the gentleman refers to when it was made contained the words "to be deemed," and so forth, then it would be right; but if it does not contain that, I do not think that on a general appropriation bill it should be changed so that it will have that effect.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman is undoubtedly correct in the construction of the words "to be deemed" contained in the act of 1895. It obviously provided for the inspection of live stock and products thereof going into our export trade, and the language of this bill simply extends that to dairy products, and that carries with it the limitation put upon the Secretary's discretion in the original act.

Mr. PERKINS. But this bill says that products of the dairy "shall be deemed," and so forth, a construction which perhaps is not authorized.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What in the world do the products of live stock mean unless they include dairy products?

Mr. PERKINS. That would depend upon the way the law of 1895 is drawn.

Mr. DRISCOLL. They would include dairy products.

Mr. OLMSTED. Would it include oleomargarine?

Mr. PERKINS. Would it include oleomargarine?

Mr. DRISCOLL. We might call it a dairy product; it has milk and butter in it.

Mr. SCOTT. We are to assume that a reasonable limitation and restriction as a safeguard and restraint would be made in the regulations under this law by the proper authority, and under the language of this bill all these limitations and restrictions and regulations were extended also to the provisions in regard to dairy products; so that I am sure the gentleman's apprehension in regard to extravagant expenditures in the carrying out of this law are unfounded.

Mr. PERKINS. How much is spent under it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. PERKINS. How much is expended under this clause? What is done under it? This is a very broad clause. I do not want to interfere with something that is being interpreted in a reasonable and proper way.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me? I think this clause was inserted here at the particular instance of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN]. A few years ago he introduced, and we passed, first, in the Interstate Commerce Committee, a provision which subsequently became law in reference to the branding and marking of dairy products in interstate commerce for the purpose of preventing butter and cheese being wrongly labeled as to the point of origin. The gentleman's own State produces a very high quality of cheese, and a great deal of cheese from other States was shipped and sold as certain brands of New York cheese. The same was true of butter. That provision went into law as to interstate commerce, and the same people who were anxious to have that law enacted were also anxious to have their cheese and butter that was exported so labeled that it might be known abroad whether it was butter and cheese that came from New York or the Elgin district in Illinois, or Wisconsin, or less favored districts.

Mr. PERKINS. But the gentleman would not regard it as advisable to have the Government undertake the inspection and the certification of any great article of produce like butter and cheese. If it is going to do that, sooner or later the law will be extended to every branch of business. I am sure my friend from Illinois would not be in favor of that.

Mr. MANN. Well, I see no reason why it should not be done to the extent it is done in the case of butter, by undertaking to say that these dairy products shall not be wrongfully branded as to their point of origin; and that is practically all that is done in this matter.

Mr. SCOTT. I am now able to answer the gentleman's inquiry as to the cost of this work. The Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry submits the following statement:

This work covers general investigations in dairy subjects; special lines of work relating to dairy organizations, laws, and development of foreign markets; investigations in the manufacture of dairy products, inspection of dairy exports and of factories and markets for renovated butter. The cost was $58,777.18 for salaries, $23,278.79 for traveling expenses, $11,878.22 for miscellaneous items; a total of $93,934.19.

And that was spent on all the dairy investigations which included inspection of creameries and violations of the law relating to renovated butter.

Mr. PERKINS. Has the gentleman such knowledge of the results of this appropriation that he thinks it really of sufficient value to the business of the country that these appropriations for these various investigations should be continued? Of course, that means they will become permanent, or has he no knowledge on the subject?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes; I have some knowledge on the subject. I remember, when the question came before the committee some years ago, that grievous complaint was made on the part of foreign purchasers of our dairy products that the foreign markets were being stocked with renovated butter. It was sent over from the United States without any inspection, put on the market there as pure creamery butter, and as a result the dairy products of the United States were brought into disrepute and we were liable to lose our foreign markets for those products. Since this provision has been carried in the law that has been corrected, and the small amount of money that has been spent has had very good results.

Mr. PERKINS. I am not very clear, but I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. There is a point of order pending.

Mr. SCOTT. Referring now to the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SCOTT. I will ask for another extension.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois specify his point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. I will specify it. Beginning at "Provided," in line 21, on page 11, there is the following language:

Provided also, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to investigate, in connection with municipal and State authorities or in such other ways as he may deem best, and to report to Congress upon the prevalence and extent of tuberculosis among dairy cattle in the United States, $947,200.

That is the language against which I make the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the committee regards the language against which the point of order has just been raised as of very great importance, and hopes it will not be eliminated from this bill. The Bureau of Animal Industry has already done a good deal of work in studying tuberculosis and the extent thereof among the dairy herds of the United States. As a result of its studies, disclosures have been made which certainly show the pressing importance of further investigation. It has been shown, for example, that dairy cows apparently in perfect condition, so slightly affected by tuberculosis that the presence of the malady can only be disclosed by the application of the tuberculin test, were actively giving out the germs of the disease. The sediment from separators in the public creameries has been examined, and tubercle bacilli have been found in 25 per cent of the samples. I think likely the dairy herds which supply the city of Washington are in as healthy condition as those which supply other cities of our land, and yet a recent examination showed that 18 per cent of the cows included within those herds were suffering from tuberculosis.

Now, when it is remembered that practically all dairy products are consumed in a raw state, that the tubercle bacilli thrive and multiply in milk, that they live for a hundred days or more in butter, it certainly is hard to overestimate the importance, both from the standpoint of economy and for the protection of the public health, of taking some steps to eradicate this evil. There has been a very insistent demand from many quarters that the Federal Government should enter upon the inspection of dairy products entering into interstate commerce, as we now inspect meat food products. It is the opinion of your committee, however, that this matter can be safely left to local regulation, provided the need of such regulation can be made apparent, and it is in the belief that such an investigation as authorized here would make that need apparent that the language referred to has been inserted. We believe that if the Secretary can be permitted to take a tuberculosis census of the dairy herds of the country the results will be so startling that local sentiment everywhere will compel measures to be taken to eradicate or at least to minimize the danger. I hope, therefore, the gentleman from Illinois will feel warranted in withdrawing his point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. It is a well-known fact, Mr. Chairman, that every State in the Union and every great municipality in every State makes provision for the investigation which is proposed to be made here. The District of Columbia, through its Commissioners, only a few days ago appeared before the Appropriations Committee, or the subcommittee having charge of the bill carrying appropriations for the District of Columbia. In that bill provision is made for the very character of investigation sought to be made in the bill now before the House.

The great cities of New York and Buffalo and Chicago, and every other city in the Union, make provision for this very kind of investigation. Inspectors are appointed under the control of the health departments of all the great cities of the Union. These inspectors go to the farms adjoining the cities. They examine the herds from which the milk is procured for consumption in those cities. They almost dictate the character of the food to be consumed by the cattle furnishing the milk for the people in those cities.

We have the information upon which to base the prohibition of food products of this character by the people in the community represented by them. This is a legal function, in my judgment. There is no reason why the Federal Government should appropriate a million dollars to tabulate the information already in possession of the municipalities of the country.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken in assuming that a million dollars is appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. MADDEN. It is $947,000.

Mr. NORRIS. That $947,000 covers all the items.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, if the $947,000 is intended to cover all these several hundred items, I have a complaint to make about the manner in which the committee has performed its duty, for I believe that the committee should furnish the information to this House upon which this House can base an intelligent judgment as to how much money is to be used for each specific purpose.

Mr. POLLARD. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. MADDEN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. POLLARD. I can say for the information of the gentleman that the Secretary only estimated that he would need $25,000 for this purpose.

Mr. MADDEN. Then there ought to be some information upon which Members who are not so fortunate as to be associated with the Committee on Agriculture can base their action on these matters.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman can find it in the hearings.

Mr. MADDEN. No one has a copy of the hearings until the bill is before the House, and then no opportunity is given to Members to read the hearings.

Mr. SCOTT. Does not the gentleman from Illinois realize that it is absolutely impossible for a great scientific Department, such as the Department of Agriculture, to forecast in detail every dollar of expenditure during the entire year? Does he not realize that the appropriation in a lump sum is absolutely essential for carrying on the work of the Department?

Mr. MADDEN. If it is so impossible for a scientific department to tell what it will cost to do a scientific work, how much more difficult must it be for men on the floor of the House, who make no pretense whatever to being scientific, to tell what amount is necessary by the scientific language used in the bill. We have here one more item that would puzzle the most scientific gentleman on the floor to tell how much the expense will be under it. On page 10, lines 15 and 16, "to construct and alter buildings thereon as may be necessary from time to time in his discretion." Who can tell how much money is to be expended for this purpose? Who can tell how far the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture is to go? Why not spend the whole of the $947,000 for the repair and maintenance of buildings and changing buildings? What evidence have we from the language in the bill to show us that any part of the $947,000 is going to be spent for investigating tuberculosis in cattle? What assurance can the chairman or the members of the Committee on Agriculture give to the House that the whole of the $947,000 will not be spent for any one of these purposes? Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, speaking to the point of order, I wish to respectfully submit that it is not obnoxious to the rule, for the reason that the language objected to is solely to provide for carrying into effect the existing law. The act of May 29, 1884, which established the Bureau of Animal Industry, made it the duty of the Chief of that Bureau to investigate and report on the condition of diseased animals in the United States, and also to inquire into and report the causes of contagious and communicable diseases among them and the means of prevention and cure of the same; and to collect such information on these subjects as shall be valuable to the agricultural and commercial interests of the country.

He is also to examine and report upon the best methods of treating, transporting, and caring for animals, and the means to be adopted for the suppression and extirpation of contagious pleuro-pneumonia, and to provide against the spread of other contagious, infectious, and communicable diseases.

It is the duty of the Commissioner of Agriculture to prepare such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the speedy and effectual suppression and extirpation of said diseases, and to certify such rules and regulations to the executive authority of each State and Territory, and invite said authority to cooperate in the execution and enforcement of this act.

And it further provides that whenever the governor of a State or other properly constituted authority signify their readiness to cooperate for the extinction of any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease in conformity with the provisions of this act, the Commissioner of Agriculture is authorized to expend so much of the money appropriated by this act as may be necessary in such investigation, and in such disinfection and quarantine measures as may be necessary to prevent the spread of the disease from one State or Territory into another.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the language of the act fully covers the language carried in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the chairman of the committee, if this language is all that is desired, what more is necessary than the appropriation?

Mr. SCOTT. This language is inserted for this reason, Mr. Chairman: The Comptroller of the Treasury, as I understand it, in passing upon bills or vouchers from the Department of Agriculture insists that they shall be drawn in compliance with the specific language in the appropriation act, and shall not merely hark back to some general statute.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, if I may be heard for a moment, the question asked by the chairman of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] is very pertinent, Why is it necessary to carry this item in an appropriation act that is already authorized by law? I do not quite agree myself with the position of the gentleman from Kansas that it is necessary in order to make use of the appropriation for this purpose, if the authority be granted in the act to carry out the provisions of the act of May 29, 1884; but here is the point: The act of 1884 creating the Bureau of Animal Industry authorized the Secretary of Agriculture, then the Commissioner of Agriculture, to cooperate with the authorities of different States as to all contagious, infectious, and communicable diseases among cattle or live stock. Under that provision, if an appropriation be made to carry out the provisions of the act of May 29, 1884, the Secretary of Agriculture has authority not merely to expend money upon the subject of investigating tuberculosis, but any other communicable disease. But Congress, in making the appropriations, has the power to liimt that authority given to the Secretary of Agriculture and say that this money shall be expended for the investigation of tuberculosis, pleuro-pneumonia, or such other diseases as he may name, provided they are inserted in the general language of the original act; so that the provision here is a mere limitation made by Congress upon the original act, which gave authority to have cooperation upon all communicable, infectious, and contagious diseases.

Mr. BURLESON. And it is clearly within the scope of the original act.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly within the scope of the original act.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the point of order is made to the proviso on the bottom of page 11. It does not seem to me to be a limitation upon any appropriation. It simply says the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to investigate. There is nothing negative about it, nothing restrictive about it. It appears on its face to be giving him an authority which he does not now possess. It may be a very desirable authority, but we are discussing now simply a point of order. It seems to me that upon its face it is plainly legislation—certainly it is not a limitation upon any appropriation.

Mr. MANN. No; not a limitation upon the appropriation, but by the appropriation a limitation upon the existing authority of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then it changes existing law.

Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all.

Mr. OLMSTED. And a thing that limits existing authority changes existing law.

Mr. MANN. It does not limit his authority except in the way of money to carry out the authority. The authority that he has is not changed. His duty is not changed, but the means to execute the authority is changed. Has the chairman before him the act of 1884?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The Chair would like to say to the gentleman from Illinois right in that connection that it seems to the Chair the language is rather unfortunate in order to accomplish the purpose which the gentleman sets forth, or which the Chair takes to be the purpose of the proviso. The Chair would ask whether the gentleman from Illinois could not modify that language so as to take out that word "authorize."

Mr. MANN. I think it would be easy enough to say "for the investigation and cooperation with municipal and State authorities," and so forth.

Mr. OLMSTED. "As provided by such act." That would be all right.

Mr. MANN. I do not think there is any trouble about that.

Mr. SCOTT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair indicated to the gentleman from Illinois that it seemed desirable to change that phraseology.

Mr. SCOTT. In view of that suggestion, I should like to offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, then, will sustain the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair does that, I would like to be heard on the point of order I do not think it ought to be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on that. The gentleman from Kansas now offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

Insert in line 21, page 11, after the colon, the following:

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the prevalence and extent of tuberculosis among dairy cattle in the United States."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I submit that is subject to a point of order, and I want to reserve a point of order upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this act creating the Bureau of Animal Industry is not only very broad, but very elastic. I want to call the Chair's attention, while I discuss as well as I can the point of order, to this language: "That the Commissioner of Agriculture shall organize in his Department a Bureau of Animal Industry." That is one thing he must do. "And shall appoint a chief thereof, who shall be a competent veterinary surgeon." That is another thing. "And whose duty it shall be to investigate and report upon the condition of the domestic animals of the United States." It does not say how he shall investigate, it does not say he shall or shall not cooperate with States or counties. On the contrary, the whole proposition is left wide open to his discretion, plus the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, who is in charge of this Bureau.

Now go a little further, "and also inquire into and report the cause of contagious, infectious, and communicable diseases among them." It does not say how or with whom he shall inquire. Now, let us go back. How shall the Bureau of Animal Industry operate? "Shall appoint surgeons," and so forth, "whose duty it shall be to investigate," and so forth. What else? "And also"—that is to say, the Bureau of Animal Industry, now either directly, the Secretary himself, or through his agent—"shall inquire into and report the causes of contagious, infectious, and communicable diseases among them and the needs for the prevention and the cure for the same." What else? "And to collect such information on the subjects as shall be valuable to the agricultural and commercial interests of the country." It does not say how he shall collect. Now, all on earth, Mr. Chairman, that this provision does is to say what is already the law. This law is so broad, gives so much discretion to the Department, that they can go down and work, as they have done, Mr. Chairman, right in the State of Tennessee, and they did not go straight to the seat of the trouble, not at all.

The milk sickness—by the way, Mr. Chairman, that was called to my attention by wire from home when I happened to be here and I went to the Department and what did they do? They sent an agent down there and what did he do? He went to Nashville, the State capital, and sought and found and cooperated with the head of the animal industry for that State and the two went together and investigated that dreadful sickness—milk sickness—which, by the way, caused the death of Abraham Lincoln's mother. The cause or cure for it never has been known. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is very clear, the language I quote, that even if this language is not put into the bill here the Department has discretion, and it is merely declaratory of the discretion it has and a writing out of the powers that the Secretary of Agriculture already has. It is not a change of existing law nor is it making new law. It is simply writing down in black and white what is already the law.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, just one moment on the point of order. As I understand it the gentleman from Kansas had consented to a modification of this item by offering a new item with a view of eliminating the words, "in cooperation with municipal and State authorities." From my viewpoint it was unnecessary for him to have done that, because clearly under the law, as I believe it can be shown, the item as originally carried in the bill was in order. Let us look to the act of 1862 establishing the Department of Agriculture. It provided that "the duties of which"—that is, the duties of the Department of Agriculture—"shall be to acquire"—it does not say how; it does not say whether through its head individually or whether in cooperation with scientists or in cooperation with State authorties or county authorities or with municipal authorities—but "to acquire"—using the word in its broadest sense—"and diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture, in the most general and comprehensive sense of the word."

Could the scope of this law be made broader? Consider further, in connection with this law, that under the act of 1889, creating this Department of Agriculture, it provides that "all laws relating to the Department of Agriculture in existence as far as applicable to the new Department are continued in full force and effect." I can not see how it can for a moment be contended that the item as originally drawn and carried in the bill is not authorized by law. And, of course, if the original item was not subject to the point of order, the item as amended would not be.

Now, if that is the law, why is it that the item as it was originally carried in this bill is not authorized by the law? It undoubtedly is.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not desire to make the point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes simply to say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] that the only embarrassing word in the original language was the word "authorized." The Chair considered that if the law did authorize it, some other language would be more suitable.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], I understand, has withdrawn the point of order.

Mr. POLLARD rose.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to suggest, before having the motion put on the amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. POLLARD] is recognized.

Mr. POLLARD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not rather out of place to have the amendment follow the proviso in line 21, as it has not much continuity to that subject-matter?

Mr. SCOTT. The whole proviso went out.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would suggest it would be more relevant after the word "another," line 13, page 10. It does not seem to connect very well with the previous proviso as found on line 15, page 11.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to say that the place just suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin as the best place for the insertion of this amendment is the place at which I intended to have it put. It was a mistake in making the notation on the amendment, and I would be glad if consent could be given to have it changed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the change in the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 10, after the word "another."

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, last night my colleague [Mr. HINSHAW] was called to Indiana on account of the serious illness of his wife's father. He desired to submit some remarks upon this bill, and he requested me to ask unanimous consent that the House grant him permission to insert in the RECORD some remarks on the bill when he returns.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. POLLARD] asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. HINSHAW] may extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] that the appropriation went out of this.

Mr. SCOTT. I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] withdrew the point of order against the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. He made a point of order to the end of the paragraph, and the point of order was sustained, and the gentleman from Kansas can offer a motion to put in the amount, $947,200, at the end of the paragraph.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, if that is the case I move that the appropriation be restored.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My purpose in making this pro forma amendment is to obtain some information as to the policy of the committee in combining various and diverse subjects in one appropriation carrying in the aggregate $947,000. I notice here on page 10, beginning with line 13, an item, "To improve and maintain the Bureau Experiment Station, at Bethesda, Md.," and beginning on line 16, "To establish, improve, and maintain quarantine stations, to construct and alter buildings thereon as may be necessary from time to time, and to provide proper shelter and equipment for the care of neat cattle, domestic and other animals imported," and so forth. The purpose of my inquiry is to ascertain whether the committee has any figures of the estimates that were furnished by the Department as to what would be needed in these respective items during the coming fiscal year.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, speaking to the gentleman's general inquiry, I wish to say that prior to this year the estimates as they came from the Department were not uniform as to the location in a lump-sum paragraph of the total amount of appropriation. In some of the paragraphs the total amount of appropriation carried to provide for all the subjects in that paragraph would appear close to the beginning of it, and in some other paragraphs they would appear close to the end, so that looking through a printed copy of the law one would have to read it practically word by word in order to find the appropriation for each particular paragraph. Your committee believed that it would be better to make the bill consistent in this respect, and hence it has carried the appropriation for each paragraph to the end of that paragraph, so that anyone looking at the law hereafter may by glancing at the end of a paragraph catch the amount appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes; you can catch the total amount that is appropriated, but we have nothing to determine how much is going to be expended in these respective items. The Secretary of Agriculture, under the phraseology here stated, would have the right to expend $947,000 for the establishment and maintenance of quarantine stations. There is no limitation whatsoever on the Secretary as to the amount to be expended. In some appropriation bills that are reported we are particularly careful to place limitations as to the amount that the Department head may expend, and I wish to inquire, and that is the purpose of my making this query, as to the policy of the committee in combining various items and leaving it entirely to the haphazard judgment and will of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SCOTT. The query of the gentleman is a very pertinent one, and I am entirely willing to answer it. In the first place, it would not be possible, as the gentleman suggests, for the Secretary of Agriculture to expend this entire $900,000 for the purpose of maintaining the quarantine stations. If he did that he would not have enough left to pay the expenses of carrying forward the other work.

Mr. STAFFORD. He could neglect the other work, and the Comptroller of the Treasury would sustain his position. He could expend the $900,000 for any one of these respective items. I am not saying that it is a probable case, but we have nothing here to show how much of the expenditures out of the total is for buildings and quarantine stations. That subject is entirely different from the investigation of tubercular troubles.

Mr. SCOTT. If the gentleman will allow me, I stated a moment ago that in providing for the expenditures of a great scientific Department like this it would be absolutely impossible to make specific appropriations. For example——

Mr. STAFFORD. Then do I understand the gentleman to convey the idea that when the committee arrived at the total of $947,000 for all these items it had not before it any segregated estimates of the expenditures needed for the various items to be expended during the coming year?

Mr. SCOTT. The committee had before it this volume [indicating].

Mr. STAFFORD. Very voluminous. I would like to ask if the gentleman, in preparing the bill, preferred to take lump sums rather than go through the tremendous details, as other committees do, and segregate and limit the appropriations?

Mr. SCOTT. This volume contains the detailed estimates of the various Department officials or people making them, and the work they expected to carry forward in all their different lines during the next fiscal year. The committee, in arriving at its conclusions, questioned the chiefs of these bureaus in regard to each item of expenditure submitted in their estimates, and exercised its own judgment then as to whether the amount which they asked should be allowed. It did not put a limit upon each specific item, because that would not be possible, but it considered every specific item in reaching its conclusion.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman state the amount——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman state the amount that would be needed for this item, which is separate and distinct from the others, "to improve and maintain the Bureau experiment station at Bethesda, Md., and to construct and alter the buildings thereon as may be necessary from time to time in his discretion." Is that something in the maze of difficulty beyond the point of limitation?

Mr. SCOTT. It would be absolutely impossible to place a limitation upon that appropriation. The language authorizes the Department to construct and repair buildings. The buildings at Bethesda, with the exception of the residence of the man in charge of the station, are cheap, temporary structures, sheds and pens, that are used for the care of animals that are under inspection there. It sometimes happens when a severe case of contagious disease is under investigation it may be necessary to burn the shed in which the animal afflicted with the disease was stabled. A windstorm may come along and topple over some of these buildings, and this provision is necessary to cover such a contingency.

Mr. STAFFORD. Perhaps that prevents the committee from arriving at a certain estimate, because a windstorm may come along and topple over the buildings, and so it might be beyond the range of human ingenuity to arrive at an estimate; but I can not see the reason why an estimate can not be furnished as to the amount that would be needed for repairs at Bethesda upon the property that was likely to exist at this particular station.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman asked for a concrete illustration. I gave him one and now he jeers at it. Let me suggest a little better one, perhaps. The law authorizes the Secretary to stamp out contagious diseases among domestic animals wherever they may occur in any part of the United States.

Now, there may be in the gentleman's own State or in my State a particularly virulent outbreak of some very contagious or infectious disease, which would do incalculable damage if it were not quickly stamped out. But we could not possibly foresee such a contingency, and if we had divided our appropriation up into specific items, the entire amount of it, how would you take care of a contingency of that kind?

Mr. STAFFORD. Just in the way we take care of it in the postal service, which is a much greater service than this agricultural service, and where the needs of the service are far more difficult to calculate than in providing for the contingencies suggested by the chairman of the committee. I do not claim that they should designate the places where these quarantine stations should be established; but I do maintain, and I do not believe the gentleman has advanced anything to show to the contrary, that it is not possible for the committee to limit the amount to be expended in these respective items. Yea, more, his very contention is that the total amount has been based upon some estimates, and if in the judgment of the committee it were thought better to so segregate the items, I believe he could readily take those figures as the basis of his calculation.

Mr. LAMB. Will the gentleman allow me to state it in a nutshell?

Mr. SCOTT. I shall be most happy to have it done.

Mr. LAMB. In the first place you can not possibly have a bill of particulars for each one of these accounts, and for all the operations of such a Department as that of Agriculture. In the next place there must be authority lodged somewhere, and responsibility, and trust. We can trust the Secretary of Agriculture in this matter. Then, again, you have there in the division of accounts a regular system of bookkeeping that shows accurately the expenditure for each bureau and division, and is admirably managed. The hearings before our committee show this.

[The time of Mr. STAFFORD having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended two minutes.]

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not question but what the money to be expended must be upon vouchers submitted, but I do contend and emphasize the fact that there is no limitation whatsoever upon the Secretary of Agriculture in expending any amount that he may see fit for any of these respective items.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the gentleman will permit me, six or eight years ago I went through this same discussion myself on the floor of the House and criticised the agricultural appropriation bill because it carried a lump-sum appropriation. I finally reached the conclusion that the whole agricultural service is discretionary in the main, and of a scientific and even of an emergency character, and that the system of administration can not be intelligently compared with the administration of the Post-Office Department, or any other of the great Departments of the Government, and that the only practical way is to make lump-sum appropriations, in view of the fact of the broad discretion that the whole law vests in the Secretary of Agriculture to do this or that thing or not to do it, as he deems best.

Mr. STAFFORD. I shall certainly be influenced by the gentleman's judgment after investigation of this subject, and am very glad to hear that he gave it consideration, though I can not conclude, even with all deference to his decision, that some of these items are not capable of separation and segregation.

Mr. POLLARD. I want to remind the gentleman from Wisconsin of his inconsistency. I can not help feeling that in these discussions he has become somewhat captious. Yesterday he took the floor here and argued repeatedly that the committee had gone entirely wrong in inserting in the bill the places where the committee thought the observation stations should be erected. Now, to-day, he comes in and criticises the committee because we are liberal and lodge that authority in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. POLLARD. Gladly.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman had followed the remarks I just made, he would have learned that I stated very definitely, or tried to state definitely, that I had no objection whatsoever to voting a lump-sum appropriation for any of these respective purposes, and that my objection was leveled yesterday at a policy that might grow into an abuse; and when the amendment was offered this morning vesting in a subordinate head the establishment of these weather stations I made no objection to it, because it vested in him the discretion to locate those stations, but it limited the amount. My purpose in making the objection is to the fact that you limit in nowise at all the expenditure of nearly a million dollars to any one of these items when they are capable of segregation. Notwithstanding the gentleman's criticism, I am still consistent.

Mr. POLLARD. I insist that the gentleman is not consistent. I do not care to argue the point, but I want to call his attention to the fact that yesterday he took the ground that we ought not to insert in the bill the places where the buildings were to be constructed, and to satisfy his whim it was changed; and now to-day, when the bill gives the Secretary discretion where the appropriation is to be expended, he objects.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the one case you limited the expenditure and in the other there is no limitation whatever.

Mr. POLLARD. There is a limitation here.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is the limitation as to the amount?

Mr. POLLARD. If the gentleman will read the paragraph he will find there is a limit put upon the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "tuberculosis," in line 6, page 10, insert the words "of animal and human beings."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to that.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I hope the gentleman will reserve it.

Mr. MANN. I will reserve it, although I do not believe that we ought to enter into any argument on tuberculosis of human beings.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that while in this bill we are appropriating nearly a million dollars that may be available for the prevention of tuberculosis among animals, it seems impossible to get any appropriation passed for the purpose of preventing tuberculosis among human beings. I have here a paragraph from a pamphlet written by Doctor Knopf, an eminent specialist on tuberculosis. He says:

It is now universally admitted that tuberculosis is the most frequent cause of death. According to some statistics every seventh, according to others every sixth, death is due to tuberculosis in one form or other. According to Dr. George F. Keene, of Rhode Island, who is a very close observer, the annual tribute of the United States to this scourge is over 100,000 of its inhabitants. Each year the world yields up 1,095,000, each day 3,000, each minute 2 of its people as a sacrifice to this plague.

Now, I wish to call the attention of this committee to the fact that there is a bill to create a tuberculosis commission now pending before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce which apparently has been given no attention, and I certainly wish to compliment this Committee on Agriculture for its care for the preservation of the lives of animals to the extent of appropriating a million dollars, without desiring to cast any aspersion on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for its failure to act on that bill, in the face of the fact that every year 100,000 people in this country are dying from tuberculosis.

I wish to say that this amendment does not lack germaneness so much as one would imagine. I wish to call attention to the fact that this same eminent specialist says that "by the careless expectorating of consumptives in meadows, fields, or stables animals may become infected with the disease." In other words, it becomes important to ascertain to what extent tuberculosis prevails among human beings in order that animals may not be contaminated and catch the disease from human beings. So that I insist that the amendment is at least germane. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while I might be willing, under some circumstances, to favor an appropriation for an investigation of tuberculosis among human beings, I doubt whether I would want to turn that investigation over to veterinary surgeons. [Laughter.] I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I have listened for the past hour to the discussion upon this subject, and have not been able to glean the information that I wanted. I would like to know whether or not the Department of Agriculture does go out in its fight against tuberculosis in cattle and buy herds of cattle and kill them in order to destroy tuberculosis?

Mr. SCOTT. There is no intention, of course, under the present language to authorize such action as that. The only thing that the Department will do under this is to take a census of cattle infected with tuberculosis.

Mr. DRISCOLL. This bill says "to purchase and destroy diseased or exposed animals, or quarantine the same, whenever in his judgment it is essential to prevent the spread of pleuropneumonia, tuberculosis, or other diseases."

Mr. SCOTT. That is in accordance with the law that we passed some years ago, and was intended merely to guard against extreme contingencies, such an occasion as arose in New England three years ago when we had an outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease, for which Congress passed an emergency appropriation of $500,000, $250,000 of which was spent, and a part of it in paying for herds that it was thought might have been exposed, but had not then shown any evidence of disease.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Has the Department, so far as the gentleman knows, ever gone out and examined cattle and bought and killed them in order to prevent the spread of tuberculosis?

Mr. SCOTT. Not to prevent the spread of tuberculosis, to my knowledge.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Or any other disease except the foot-and-mouth disease which the gentleman has mentioned?

Mr. SCOTT. No; I have mentioned the only instance within my personal knowledge.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What does the Department do in the States in the way of fighting tuberculosis?

Mr. SCOTT. The Department has done nothing, but it proposes to go out and take a census in the hope that local sentiment will appeal to the local authorities to take the necessary steps to eradicate the disease.

I might say to the gentleman that in combating other diseases the Department has been engaged for many years in quarantine work of similar character.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Suppose they find in the country—in Illinois, let us say—some disease prevalent there, do they apply the quarantine there, or do they move the cattle to the Washington quarantine?

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, no.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What do they do?

Mr. SCOTT. In a case of that kind the farm on which the diseased cattle are located is quarantined.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Have they ever done that?

Mr. SCOTT. Many times, and the cattle are not allowed to be shipped from that farm until the quarantine is removed. Under the act I have just quoted, the act creating the Bureau of Animal Industry, very great authority was given to the Department in these directions.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting on page 10, after the word "necessary," in line 21, the following:

"Provided also, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to expend $5,000 of the amount hereby appropriated to especially investigate hemorrhagic septicæmia, infectious cerebro-spinal meningitis, malignant catarrh prevalent among domestic animals in the State of Minnesota and adjoining States, to work out, if possible, in cooperation with the Minnesota experiment station, the problem of prevention by developing antitoxin or preventive vaccines, and to secure and diffuse information along these lines."

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against that.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Does the gentleman make a point of order, or does he reserve it.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I make it and I reserve it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry that the gentleman sees fit to reserve or make a point of order in a matter of this kind. I will state to the gentleman that for two years past—during the Fifty-ninth Congress—this item has been in the bill. It was put in there at the earnest solicitation of the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of cooperating with the Minnesota experiment station in endeavoring to stamp out the diseases mentioned in the amendment. These diseases were becoming quite common among horses and cattle, and extended through a great portion of northern Minnesota, down into Iowa, a portion of Wisconsin, up through the two Dakotas, and from there on west. Minnesota has an experiment station that is particularly and peculiarly adapted to investigating matters of this kind, and the Secretary of Agriculture was solicitous that the officers of this station should take up the investigation of the causes contributing to these diseases. Accordingly an agreement of cooperation was entered into as soon as the appropriation for the fiscal year 1906 was made.

The State furnishing the laboratories, barns, and animals for experimentation, and all expense incident thereto, and the Government furnishing the experts to cooperate with the resident scientists. Now, it is true that this amount probably will be expended by Doctor Melvin even if this amendment is defeated, but segregating this sum from the lump appropriation can do no harm.

Mr. DRISCOLL. If the Secretary of Agriculture favored it, why did it not get into the bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I was going to explain that to the committee.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And the gentleman says that he favors it?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. He does favor it.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Then I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, we are asked here to adopt the report of the committee, which we are willing to do, and this is a matter that the committee, as I understand it, has declined to report, and in the absence of some further information I shall reserve the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I wish to state that the chairman of the committee has no objection to this. He so stated to me a few moments ago.

Mr. PERKINS. Then, why did he not report it?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] has stated, the language in which he now offers his amendment has been carried in this bill for the past two years. In preparing the bill this year the committee desired to eliminate as far as possible special provisions of this kind, and the provision under consideration was one of those which was thus eliminated. The committee did inquire of the Chief of the Bureau, however, whether he expected to continue this work, and he stated that he did. It is a matter of very great interest, however, to the gentleman from Minnesota, and the committee has no objection to the amendment if it can be worded in such a way as to provide that $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am willing to accept that.

Mr. SCOTT. If that alteration can be made, the committee will have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. As I understand, an appropriation similar to this has been made for two consecutive years?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Identical with this.

Mr. PERKINS. What results have come? Is this to be a perpetual appropriation?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Probably not, though I would like to have it become such, because of the great importance to this section of the country in stock raising and because of the fact that the Minnesota experiment station is a central point, as it were, in the heart of this region, and they have greater facilities for doing the work there, as the Secretary of Agriculture will inform the gentleman, than in any other locality.

Mr. PERKINS. But why does the gentleman suggest that this work should be done by the Government instead of being done by the State of Minnesota, which is a rich State?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Because the results of this work extend into two or three States of the Northwest contiguous to Minnesota.

Mr. PERKINS. Why, if these investigations are valuable, do they not secure results in order to determine whether it can be exterminated and checked?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They have secured results.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman says he would like to have this investigation perpetual.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I said I would personally, and it would no doubt produce great results, but I do not wish to run counter to what the Secretary of Agriculture deems proper. Now the Secretary of Agriculture is very insistent upon this work going on. It is only a question as to the form in which this appropriation be made.

Doctor Melvin says he is very desirous of this work going on, and he can do it under the lump-sum appropriation, and probably will do it. He no doubt will do it, because, as I am informed, there is an agreement to that effect between the Department of Agriculture and the proper authorities of the experiment station of Minnesota. They have animals now in barns being investigated under the previous appropriation.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman think that if this appropriation is allowed this year it will be an end of the matter, or that next year there will be another $5,000 wanted, and this would go on for years and years?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will state to the gentleman that in case this investigation continues to prove beneficial, which it has thus far, and so acknowledged by the Department of Agriculture, and results in suppressing and extinguishing one or more of those diseases, and scientific information is given to the country of methods used, also should another year find this work unfinished and the Department anxious to proceed further along this line and deem it important to do so, would the gentleman say that it ought to be stopped for lack of this paltry sum? I am perfectly willing it should be ended just as soon as the Secretary of Agriculture says so.

Mr. PERKINS. But it seems to me if you are going to make discoveries in reference to disease, to prevent a cattle disease, you ought to make the discovery and have an end of it and know how to treat that disease.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would like to have a couple of minutes more time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota to extend his time for two minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SCOTT. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York I read from the hearings to show Doctor Melvin's reply to the specific question as to how he was getting along with this disease. He stated:

Results have been very satisfactory, and we have been able to determine that it is a communicable disease and transferable from one horse to another.

He stated also that the work would be completed in a year or two.

Mr. PERKINS. Has he found any means of checking the disease which he finds is contagious?

Mr. SCOTT. He says, "we are now studying the methods of treatment, and are endeavoring to determine in what way it is communicated ordinarily from animal to animal." The work has not been completed, but satisfactory progress is reported.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They have animals in quarantine in their barns now under investigation, horses and cattle both.

Mr. SCOTT. I would suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota after the word "expend," in his amendment, he insert the words "not to exceed."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "expend" insert "not to exceed," so as it will read, "not to exceed $5,000."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is perfectly satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Now the question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he has information as to what extent the Agricultural Department has been able to reduce the percentage of tuberculosis in cows?

Mr. SCOTT. The Department has been making no effort to stamp out tuberculosis in cattle. To the present time its endeavors have been directed wholly to investigating the extent and prevalence of the disease and the manner in which it is communicated from one animal to another. It has not attempted to stamp out the disease.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has not the Department been investigating some way to try to prevent the extension of it and cure it? They have been working at it a long time.

Mr. SCOTT. There have been investigations along that line conducted at Bethesda, Md., but no results have been published as yet.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will state for the information of the House that I was talking to one of our leading lawyers last summer at Nashville, who has a fine Jersey farm out in the country about 4 miles. He took out one evening with him one of the leading veterinary surgeons. He went out and looked at one of his finest and most valuable cows. The veterinarian said: "That cow is affected with tuberculosis." The statement alarmed my friend very much, because he was using the milk of that cow for his family, from the least child up. He immediately had the cow killed, and, sure enough, both the lungs of that splendid-looking animal were seriously and dangerously affected with tuberculosis.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. With pleasure.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know very much about tuberculosis especially, but I have understood from scientific people that if every living being on earth was destroyed, every being that had germ diseases within it, the earth would be absolutely depopulated; that there is no animal on earth in which you could not find germs of disease of some kind or other, not excluding man.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. OLMSTED having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 17055. An act to validate certain acts of the thirty-seventh legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico; and

H. R. 13077. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish four condemned brass cannon and cannon balls to the Confederate Monument Association, at Franklin, Tenn.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For experiments in animal feeding and breeding, in cooperation with the State agricultural experiment stations, including the repairs and additions to and erection of buildings absolutely necessary to carry on the experiments, $50,000; in all, $997,200.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the paragraph commencing after the word "stations," line 4, page 12, and ending with the word "experiments," line 6.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that, although it may be of the utmost importance for the Federal Government to cooperate with the State governments and agricultural colleges of the States on the question of feeding and breeding of cattle, it ought not, under any circumstances, to become a function of the National Government either to build or to maintain buildings erected by the States and owned by the States. One of the members of the committee suggests that these buildings are owned by the National Government. But I see no reason why they should be owned by the National Government if we are cooperating with the States. Under the phraseology of this paragraph I do not see where the Federal Government could be considered to own anything except the right to expend the $50,000 it seeks to appropriate.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the language to which the gentleman raises the point of order is new language and was inserted in this paragraph for this reason: In Vermont, where experiments in animal breeding are being conducted in cooperation with the State experiment station, a farm of some 400 acres has been donated to the Government of the United States for the promotion of these experiments. The farm lies near the experiment station, and the experiments are carried on in connection with the officials of that station, but they are conducted upon land owned by the United States, and the only purpose of this language is to authorize the Secretary to erect the cheap buildings that may be necessary from time to time upon that farm.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, do I understand that some philanthropic person donated 400 acres of land to the Federal Government with the proviso that it should continue the experiments provided in this paragraph of the bill, and that it should expend a certain amount of money in the erection of buildings and in the maintenance of these buildings, while, as a matter of fact, the experiments are under the control and jurisdiction of the State?

Mr. SCOTT. Part of the gentleman's understanding is right and part of it is wrong. He is right in his understanding that some benevolent gentleman has donated 400 acres of land to the United States Government. He is wrong in assuming that that donation was made with certain provisos. It was an unqualified gift without any string of any kind tied to it, and does not involve the necessity on the part of the Government of continuing the experiments now being carried on there a single day.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture be kind enough to tell the House why it is that the language which is sought to be stricken from the bill on the point of order is placed in the paragraph in connection with this language:

For experiments in animal feeding and breeding, in cooperation with the State agricultural experiment stations.

A fair assumption is that this language is intended to convey to the House the information that the State has control over the experiments which are to be made or are being made, and that the Federal Government is only to spend a certain amount of money in cooperating with the State. If that be true, there is no reason why there should be any language in the bill to provide for the construction of buildings or maintenance of buildings at the expense of the nation.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to say to the gentleman that this language which is sought to be struck from the bill was inserted at the request of the late Senator Proctor of Vermont, until his death chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; and in submitting it he gave the statement which I repeated at the beginning of my remarks this morning, that this land was immediately adjacent to the farm that had been donated, and which included this experiment station, and it was necessary to make certain small buildings.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to know how much this 400 acres of land is worth in the market?

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman from Vermont can answer that question, and I yield to him.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, this is a farm of 400 acres containing 100 acres of heavily wooded land, and within the last year was conveyed by deed, title in fee to the United States of America without any conditions whatever by Mr. Joseph Battell, a resident of Vermont.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I wanted to know what it is worth.

Mr. HASKINS. It is a farm that cut last year 150 tons of good hay. There is upon the farm, now owned by the United States, "General Gates," a Morgan stallion of the Justin Morgan breed. It has eleven brood mares; it will have four others this very year, besides a large number of fillies and colts.

Mr. DRISCOLL. You are taking all my time.

Mr. HASKINS. You shall have all the time you want. I can not say what the value of the farm is. It runs along the banks of Otter Creek and is a valuable farm. And not only this, but this generous gentleman, Mr. Battell, is ready to convey to the United States a hundred acres lying adjacent to this farm. He is a man who has plenty of money and is interested in the rearing of the Morgan horse in this country.

Mr. DRISCOLL. We have some abandoned farms in our State, and there are a great many abandoned farms in New England. What I would like to know is not whether it grew a certain number of tons of hay, but whether it is one of those abandoned farms worth practically nothing in the market and is still to cost the Government $54,000 a year to keep up? I have not always approved of the Carnegie libraries, because of the cost of keeping them up; and I wanted to know if this was a white elephant of the same kind being given to the Government, that would cost $54,000 a year to maintain. I do not know whether it is the kind of charity that we ought to accept if it is to cost $54,000 a year to keep it up.

Mr. HASKINS. This is not an abandoned farm. It is a highly cultivated farm. It has a dwelling house, two stories high, finely finished inside with cypress; a barn 51 feet by 90 feet, three stories high, costing some $15,000. They have got to have another barn and it is necessary that it be authorized in this bill.

Mr. DRISCOLL. You are taking all my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Vermont in his own right.

Mr. HASKINS. It is necessary, Mr. Chairman, that this language should be included in the bill in order to justify the erection of another barn to accommodate the number of horses that are being bred on that place.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if this is not the way that this agricultural bill has been growing from year to year—from a thousand dollars up to $15,000,000 a year? It strikes me that this particular appropriation of $54,000, whether subject to the point of order or not, ought to be stricken out on the merits.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to protract the discussion on this paragraph, and will ask the Chair to rule on the point of order if the gentleman insists.

Mr. MADDEN. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this is a continuation of a public work, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the Chair to overrule the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the Chair maintain that this is not new legislation?

Mr. MANN. The Chair has ruled.

Mr. MADDEN. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12, lines 4, 5, and 6, strike out the words "including the repairs and additions to and erection of buildings absolutely necessary to carry on the experiments."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the ruling of the Chair is good, although I presume we will have to submit to it. I do not care to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, but I do believe that the language in this paragraph is subject to a point of order. I believe there is no question whatever about the impropriety of making an appropriation calling upon the National Government to expend money for strictly State purposes. I believe that the States of the Union are qualified to erect such buildings as may be needed for the purposes indicated in this paragraph of the bill. This is the only case which has ever come to the attention of the House calling for an expenditure from the Federal Treasury for the erection or maintenance of buildings controlled, owned, and operated by any State of the Union. If this Committee of the Whole sustains the right of the committee recommending this language, it will have established a precedent which will be against the best interests of the Government.

I do not believe that this House is justified in appropriating money out of the Public Treasury to be expended in any State for any such purpose. It is true that when the House does vote to do this it is the action of the people of the United States, but I do not think that any State is asking the cooperation of the Federal Government in any such enterprise. There may be private interests in some States that care to get this money out of the Treasury of the United States to carry on their enterprises, but I believe there is no State in this country that, as such, will ask the Federal Government to pay for the construction of the buildings which it erects and in which it proposes to experiment on the question of the breeding and feeding of cattle. There can be no doubt that such legislation as this is unwise. I believe that if this is allowed to be enacted into law, every State in the Union will be justified in coming here and demanding like legislation, and I doubt not that many of the States of the Union will come if we but give them notice that they can get the legislation.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. I am no more inclined than the gentleman is to include language in an appropriation bill which would authorize or require the Government of the United States to erect buildings on State experiment stations, and I wish to ask the gentleman whether this would be satisfactory to him, if after the word "experiment" the words were inserted, "upon land owned by the United States," so as to limit the authority to the construction of buildings upon lands of the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not believe that would be a satisfactory compromise. I would rather be defeated on the merits of the question than to compromise with what I think is unfair. I think the position I have taken is the only fair position that a person can take who is disinterested and who seeks to legislate for the best interests of the country only, and any compromise such as is suggested by the chairman of the Agricultural Committee would simply mean that I was willing to accept a crumb of comfort rather than to meet defeat in advocacy of a proposition in which I believe.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I can not suffer some of the statements of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois to go into the RECORD without meeting a challenge. First, the State of Vermont has not a single dollar's worth of interest in the farm. It is owned in fee by the United States of America. Neither the State of Vermont nor any citizen in the State has a dollar's worth of interest in any of the stock upon the farm, but it is owned wholly, entirely, and absolutely by the Government of the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not doubt that.

Mr. SCOTT. I have only this to say in opposing the amendment: That the gentleman from Illinois is an able and conscientious legislator we all concede, and yet he is not the sole custodian of the legislative ability and carefulness and conscientiousness of the House. The Committee on Agriculture has considered this matter very carefully and has recommended the language in question because the committee believes it to be in the interest of economical administration in the Department of Agriculture. I trust that the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and will ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, by printing some remarks of W. D. Byrd before the South Carolina Live Stock Association.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

STATEMENT FROM THE REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.

Considerable effort has been expended toward improving the dairy conditions of the South under a special appropriation made by Congress for this purpose. Nine men have been engaged in the work in seven States. The work has enlisted the attention and good will of the farmers. Assistance has been rendered in the remodeling of old barns and the building of new ones, the construction of silos, the selection and breeding of herds, and the keeping of records of feeds and of the products of the dairy herds. Local market conditions and the sources of the supplies that are brought into the South from outside territory have been investigated.

Many farmers have been induced to keep records of their herds, so as to show the cost of feed and the amount realized from the products both before and while carrying out the suggestions made for improved methods. Such records have been kept for seventy herds, comprising 1,606 cows. The results from sixteen herds have been compiled for illustration and show an average increase of $3.75 in the monthly production of each cow. This is a striking example of the practical results to be obtained by the adoption of better dairy methods in the South.

The work has met with uniform favor. So encouraging have been the results of the Department's work that similar work is being taken up by some of the States. It is believed that after this special educational work has been well started the Department should withdraw and the States should continue it.

REMARKS OF W. D. BYRD BEFORE THE SOUTH CAROLINA LIVE STOCK ASSOCIATION.

It affords me great pleasure to have this opportunity of telling the results I have received from the dairy division of the Government, when I have been benefited, as I have in this case. I am only too glad to give the ones credit to whom credit is due.

Six years ago, when cotton was selling at 7 cents per pound and our lands were decreasing in fertility, caused from a one-crop system, I realized that to make farming pay I had to make a change; so I decided on a three-year rotation of crops, along with a small dairy.

Having no experience in the dairy business, I at once subscribed for Hoard's Dairyman, devoting as much of my time as I could to reading that and other literature on the subject. I knocked along in a way, until last winter I became very much discouraged. Picking up The State one day I saw where the Government would assist a man in my condition, signed John Michels, Clemson College, South Carolina. I at once wrote to Professor Michels, he forwarding my letter to the proper authorities, and in reply was assured that Mr. Dorman, of the dairy division, would be at my place as early as possible. He came on March 8 and found a herd of fourteen cows which were giving very unsatisfactory results, for the reason that the owner knew nothing of the work of the individual cow. During the month of March I shipped 160 pounds of butter from ten cows. On March 8 they produced 92 pounds of milk, 9.2 pounds per cow.

I was allowing the calves to suck until they were 6 to 8 weeks old. I was not feeding properly, and churning whole milk. He showed me clearly where I was losing, and having seen unquestionable results of the manure on my farm, I was anxious to continue the dairy, so was glad to get his help and take his advice. I have always found his advice profitable to me. He gave me a daily milk-record sheet to enable me to keep a record of each cow; placed me on a balanced ration as near as he could with the feed available; tested the milk from each cow, also tested the buttermilk; found I was losing 1 pound of butter per day, requiring 20 pounds of milk to make 1 pound of butter. Through his advice and convincing evidence I made the suggested changes, and my cows at once began to improve.

Those that were on March 8 giving 15 pounds of milk increased to 23 pounds by the end of the month, and the others in proportion; or, instead of getting 92 pounds per day, by March 30 I was getting 160 pounds daily. This showed a very satisfactory increase in milk production, but by testing the buttermilk I found that there was still a great loss of butter fat, so I decided to buy a separator. By its use, and by more careful attention to the churning temperature, I still further increased the amount of butter produced. On January 25 last, out of 279 pounds of milk, I made 17½ pounds of butter, requiring only 16 pounds of milk for 1 pound of butter. By stopping these leaks and by better methods we have increased the butter from 160 pounds from ten cows in March to 342 pounds from thirteen cows in January, or from an average of 16 pounds of butter per cow per month to 26 pounds per cow per month. These figures do not include the milk, cream, and butter used in my family. We are also raising the calves from birth on the skim milk, which I find is less trouble and more profitable. Mr. Dorman, testing my cows from time to time as to the butter fat, along with the milk record, I now know the work of each individual cow, which enables me to weed out all the unprofitable ones. I also hope to see my way clear to build a silo at an early day. It is very gratifying to state that Mr. Dorman has brought my herd from a losing to a paying business.

Now, gentlemen of the association, I only wish I could express myself more forcibly as to the advantage Mr. Dorman's visits may be to you:

1. He can see your exact condition and prescribe to suit your individual case.

2. You see the actual work done, which is the best way to learn how it is done.

3. You are anxious to show good results on his return, therefore you will exert every effort to make a better record. And there are numerous other reasons I might mention.

Reading dairy literature is a good thing, and I would advise every one in the business to take several good dairy papers. But personal visits by a dairy expert can advise you more accurately than one who has never seen your place can do by writing.

Now, I would like to say in conclusion that as dairying is becoming an absolute necessity to maintain the fertility of our farms, we want to make a success of the business at the same time. Anyone here wishing to get such assistance as I have had can do so, and I know if Mr. Dorman had not come to my rescue I certainly would have sold my cows for beef.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Bureau of Plant Industry: To investigate fruits, fruit trees, grain, cotton, tobacco, vegetables, grasses, forage, drug, medicinal, poisonous, fiber, and other plants and plant industries, in cooperation with other branches of the Department, the State experiment stations, and practical farmers; to continue the study and demonstration of the best methods to combat the cotton boll weevil; to study plant and orchard diseases and demonstrate the treatment of same; to study plant physiology in relation to crop production; to originate and improve crops by breeding and selection; to investigate and encourage the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice; to investigate the feeding value of farm crops and the use of fertilizers; to investigate the causes of decay in forest timber and timber used for construction purposes, and to devise means for preventing the decay of the same; to investigate the practical application in agriculture of the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen by bacteria and other micro-organisms in soils and in the root tubercles of leguminous and other plants; to cultivate and distribute these nitrogen fixers; to study and find methods for preventing algal and other contaminations of water supplies; to carry on special investigations of the conditions of grain production, handling, grading, and transit, and of the means of improving the same; to model fruits, vegetables, and other plants, and furnish duplicate models to the experiment stations of the several States, as far as found practicable; to investigate the methods of harvesting, packing, storing, and shipping fruits and vegetables, and for experimental shipments of fruits and vegetables within the United States and to foreign countries; to cultivate and care for experimental gardens and grounds, manage and maintain conservatories, greenhouses, and plant and fruit propagating houses; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the necessary improvements to establish and maintain a general experimental farm and agricultural station on the Arlington estate, in the State of Virginia, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 18, 1900; to investigate and report on the cost of growing and curing tea and the best method of cultivating and preparing the same for market; to investigate and develop the domestic production of sugar-beet seed and the best methods of increasing the tonnage of sugar beets; to continue inquiry and ascertain the progress made in the production of domestic sugar from beets and sorghum and other sugar-producing plants; to collect, purchase, propagate, test, and experiment with rare new seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; for the employment of investigators, local and special agents, agricultural explorers, experts, clerks, illustrators, assistants, student or scientific aids, foremen, gardeners, mechanics, and all other labor and scientific assistance required in conducting investigations and experiments in the city of Washington and elsewhere.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee. In the paragraph on page 14, under the title of "General expenses of the Bureau of Plant Industry," there occurs this language: "to continue the study and demonstration of the best method to combat the cotton boll weevil;"

That language includes also what is known as the farmers' cooperative demonstration work under the supervision of Dr. S. A. Knapp. Now, there is nothing in the entire paragraph indicating the amount of appropriation which will be available in the prosecution of that work. I understand informally that it was the intention of the committee that as much as $100,000 should be available for that work, but in reality it is a matter for the administration in the Department.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman from North Carolina speak louder, I do not hear just what he is saying.

Mr. SMALL. There is nothing in the language which indicates how much of the gross appropriation is to be available for the farmers' cooperative demonstration work. I say I further understand that the chairman of the committee, or perhaps the entire committee, have informally agreed that as much as $100,000 should be available. Speaking for myself, I would not be content to allow the paragraph to pass unless I knew from the chairman of the committee, speaking for the committee, or some expression of opinion from the committee, as to how much was available.

Mr. SCOTT. As the gentleman from North Carolina very well knows, the provision for combating the boll weevil has been carried heretofore as an emergency appropriation. As I stated in my opening remarks, it was the opinion of the committee that it ought not any longer to be carried as an emergency appropriation, for the reason that the boll weevil has been added to the insect pests which we have to fight against all the time.

There was appropriated last year $190,000, of which $150,000 was used by the Bureau of Plant Industry and the balance by the Bureau of Entomology. In making the appropriation for the two bureaus it was the understanding of the committee that $170,000 should be expended by the Bureau of Plant Industry and $20,000 by the Bureau of Entomology, that arrangement being made because it has been clearly demonstrated that most of the work will be carried on by the Bureau of Plant Industry for the reason that the work of the Bureau of Entomology, with reference to the boll weevil, has, in a large measure, been concluded. Acting upon the advice and understanding of the committee, I addressed a letter, as chairman of the committee, to Doctor Galloway, who will have charge of the work, stating what the wishes of the committee were in that respect, and informing him that the bill was drawn in the expectation that $170,000, or so much thereof as might be necessary, should be devoted by him to the continuation of this work. I trust that will be satisfactory to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. SMALL. With an additional explanation. I am not mistaken, I believe, in stating that what is known as the farmers' cooperative demonstration work is carried on under that appropriation.

Mr. SCOTT. It has been.

Mr. SMALL. And will be?

Mr. SCOTT. As long as in the judgment of the Secretary it is advisable to continue it.

Mr. SMALL. What proportion will be available for the demonstration work?

Mr. SCOTT. I have a letter from Doctor Galloway in reply to mine, accepting the suggestion of the committee as equivalent to a direction on the part of Congress, but he did not indicate how much of that money would be expended in the different branches of the work. I feel sure the gentleman from North Carolina and all others interested in this work may trust to his discretion in the matter.

Mr. SMALL. So the cooperative demonstration work will be amply provided for?

Mr. SCOTT. It will be amply provided for.

Mr. SMALL And out of this appropriation?

Mr. SCOTT. That is as I understand it.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I renew the motion to strike out the last word. I do this for two purposes. First, I would like to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, as well as other members of the committee, to the fact that it must be apparent, it seems to me, that they have grouped in this bill too many items under one lump-sum appropriation. I have listened with a good deal of interest to the discussion that took place on a prior paragraph, and it seems to me that some of the criticisms were just. My suggestions are, I want to say, made in the best of faith, because I have almost absolute confidence in the Secretary of Agriculture, who has charge of these expenditures, and I have equally as great faith in the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and the different members of the committee. So that I am offering no criticism in any fault-finding spirit. But now I will submit to the chairman that on each one of these items I presume it is intended to expend some money.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. On page 14, commencing with line 4, there commences a list of items that runs over to page 18 before there is any appropriation made. All of these items included between these two places in the bill are covered by this one lump-sum appropriation. I am not finding fault with any of the items.

I believe they ought to all be there. They are all right and proper, but it does seem to me that we could more intelligently legislate if there were at least not so many items grouped together. I have just counted them roughly and find, if my count is correct, that there are very nearly 200 items included between those two points in the bill. The chairman of the committee said a while ago that you could not well place different amounts after the different items for the reason that there might be some unforeseen contingencies arise that would make it necessary to expend more than had been anticipated for any particular item. I would like to call the chairman's attention to this fact. He has answered me and said it is the intention to expend some of this money for each one of these items. If some unforeseen circumstance should happen so that it would make it necessary to expend more than is anticipated for any one or for several of these items, would it not logically follow that there must be some other item or items equally, perhaps, as meritorious for which the appropriation must be cut down, if not cut out entirely? I submit that to the chairman for his consideration and the consideration of the committee, because I believe that we could more intelligently legislate without danger of leaving out of this appropriation some items that Congress might have particular reason for putting in. For instance, on page 15 of the bill, down commencing after the semicolon on line 18:

To investigate and develop the domestic production of sugar-beet seed, and the best methods of increasing the tonnage of sugar beets.

This is a very important item. As far as the seed is concerned, we have been dependent for several years upon that which has been shipped from Germany, at least, to a great extent. If we could improve the methods of producing the seed it would greatly increase the value of the sugar-beet lands, and at the same time increase the yield and decrease the price that would be necessary to pay for it, and therefore decrease the price of sugar. The Secretary of Agriculture may not particularly know just exactly the idea of Congress in putting this item in, and if it is necessary to cut something out he may cut out that item and use the money that was really intended for that item for some other item upon which there may be some unforeseen contingency happen, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] has suggested. All of which, it seems to me, is not good legislation. This item is only an illustration. The same could be said about any other item included between those two places in the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to a provision of the statute in the original deficiency act of February 27, 1906, which requires appropriations made for contingent expenses or other general purposes to be allotted before the beginning of each fiscal year to the different purposes for which they are appropriated, and I want to ask him whether or not that would not obviate all his objections, leaving to the Secretary or head of the bureau having charge of this the power, to be executed by him, in making these allotments before the beginning of the fiscal year.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the gentleman's question, Mr. Chairman, and in reply will say that if his idea is correct, then it absolutely does away with the excuse given by the chairman of the committee for not itemizing it in the bill, because he said it was desirable to let the Secretary of Agriculture have a discretionary power to use more than might be deemed at the beginning advisable for any particular item. If the law were enforced as the gentleman from Ohio suggests, then that discretion would be taken away from the Secretary.

Mr. KEIFER. But the law is enforced, if the gentleman will allow me to say, subject to an emergency that would arise that would require an alteration of the allotments, and the law is intended to have the allotments made to carry out the purposes of the appropriation.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose, then, for instance, that the Secretary of Agriculture, on account of some unforeseen circumstances, would deem it necessary to greatly increase what he intended to use for the boll-weevil proposition. In order to do that some other item included in this bill would have to be cut out, or the amount used for it in this bill would have to be lessened. This method of legislation leaves too great a discretionary power with the Department. It does more. It makes it absolutely impossible for the Secretary to determine how Congress intended to have the money distributed between the two hundred items included in the lump sum appropriated. It also establishes a bad precedent, and some time it may be taken advantage of to the detriment and injury of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I answered hastily, replying to the gentleman, when I said that it was the expectation that the Department should do something under every one of the lines included in this paragraph for general expenses. I should have said that it is the intent of that language to give the Department authority to do work along any of these lines. As a matter of fact, the Department does work along nearly all of these lines nearly every year. The Bureau of Plant Industry now has something like 700 projects for which estimates are submitted in a general way to the committee. It would be, in the judgment of the committee, impracticable and unwise for this Congress to make specific appropriations for each of these projects. It is not only the judgment of your present committee, Mr. Chairman, but it has been the judgment of every Committee on Agriculture that has had a place in this House since it became the duty of the Committee on Agriculture to prepare the appropriation bill for the support of this Department.

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman permit a question? Does the Secretary, in making estimates, make estimates as to the cost of each project, or does he make estimates not by projects, but in one item?

Mr. SCOTT. The Secretary makes an estimate for each project.

Mr. BONYNGE. Then why should not the committee, in making appropriations, make appropriations based upon his estimate for each project instead of lumping a large number of estimates together and making a general appropriation?

Mr. SCOTT. Because if the committee did that and some conditions should arise which would make it wise in the judgment of the Secretary to put more work on one project than he had intended to do he would not be able to get money enough to do it.

Mr. BONYNGE. But if the gentleman stops to think for a moment the logical conclusion of his argument would be to give him authority to carry on these various investigations and at the conclusion of the bill put in one general appropriation covering everything in the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, that is not the logic of my position, with all deference to the gentleman.

Mr. BONYNGE. It would seem to apply as much to all items in the bill as to four or five pages of the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. It seems to me there is a very clear distinction between making a lump-sum appropriation to carry on various projects in a certain bureau which are necessarily of a similar character and putting into a lump sum the work of a dozen bureaus and divisions carrying on very different kinds of work.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. If that be the object of the gentleman, then on page 18 why do you put in the appropriation for the items there? Why not go on, for that is in the same bureau as that beginning with line 7?

Mr. SCOTT. Because the committee recognizes the advisability of making the appropriations just as nearly specific as can be wisely done.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the gentleman entirely.

Mr. SCOTT. I intended to say before closing that I think there is a great deal of force in the suggestion made by the gentleman from Nebraska, that where a bureau increases and expands as the Bureau of Plant Industry has, to cover such an enormous number of projects, it would be wise, so far as possible, to group those projects and make your lump-sum appropriation cover just as many different groups as can be wisely done.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so.

Mr. SCOTT. I appreciate the suggestion of the gentleman.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman answer this question: What assurance could the gentleman give to the House that this item of investigation and development of sugar-beet seed—what assurance could the gentleman give the House that any investigation will be made or that the money that was intended to be used for that investigation will not be diverted to some other item in the bill on account of some unforeseen emergency?

Mr. SCOTT. The only assurance I can give is my faith in the discretion and judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. NORRIS. I have the greatest faith also in him, but if there is an emergency somewhere, and he uses more than was intended for that purpose, he must necessarily take it away from some item. Some item must suffer.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman from Kansas a question?

Mr. SCOTT. With great pleasure.

Mr. PAYNE. Is not the present Secretary of Agriculture more apt to divert a larger sum to the development of the seed of the sugar beet than he is to anything else in this whole paragraph?

Mr. NORRIS. Admitting that to be true, it still bears out my contention.

Mr. PAYNE. From your knowledge of his interest in that subject?

Mr. SCOTT. I think the gentleman need have no apprehension whatever that sugar beets will be neglected by the present administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask that it may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I wanted to ask the gentleman further in regard to this item for the extermination of the boll weevil. In the estimates that have been submitted by the Secretary of Agriculture is any statement made of the amount that will be used in this demonstration work at all? The reason I ask is this: This work is being done not only by the Government but by the general education board, as the chairman understands. That board takes care of the States that have not yet been reached by the boll weevil, but that will in all human probability be affected hereafter, and as soon as the boll weevil arrives in a State then the work of the general education board ceases and it is turned over to the Government.

Now, during the last year the States of Oklahoma and Mississippi have been added to the territory that is exclusively now to be provided for by appropriations from the Department of Agriculture, and necessarily the expense will be considerably larger than it was last year. Last year, as I understand it, it was $80,000. Now, the understanding, as I am informed, is that there will be $100,000 of that money set apart for this demonstration work.

Mr. SCOTT. If the gentleman will pardon me for interrupting him, I covered this question a few moments ago quite in extenso in reply to a query from the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], and I hardly like to go all over it again. Very briefly let me say to the gentleman that there will be at the disposal of the Bureau of Plant Industry this year $170,000 for the continuation of this boll-weevil work. The judgment of the Secretary and the Chief of the Bureau is so strongly to the effect that the best results are gotten through the farm demonstration and cooperative work, I have no doubt a very large proportion of that sum will be expended in that way.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I understand that. I heard the gentleman's answer to the question of the gentleman from North Carolina, but I was in hopes that there was something in the estimate of the Secretary that would indicate that at least $100,000 would be had for this demonstration work, and I was very anxious that it should go in the RECORD.

Mr. SCOTT. There is more than that. There is a letter on file with the Committee on Agriculture from the Chief of this Bureau, stating that he will expend $170,000 this year on that work.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Not on the general demonstration work.

Mr. SCOTT. I think the gentleman ought to be willing to leave that to the Chief of the Bureau and the Secretary. That is the way it has been carried before. There has never been any specific appropriation for any particular line of work, and I do not think the gentleman is justified in his present apprehension in regard to the matter.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I wanted to make it as certain as I could that this appropriation would be expended in that way.

Mr. CANDLER. Last year in the appropriation bill the amount that was intended to be expended for this purpose, according to my recollection, was $90,000. The chairman is sure there will be that much or more expended this year?

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, yes; quite sure.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to renew the motion in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question. On page 14 there is an appropriation for the investigation of farm management and farm practice. Can the gentleman give me any idea how much the Department expects to expend in respect to that work?

Mr. SCOTT. I have the figures here, but it would take some time to find them. I can give the gentleman an estimate. In a general way, I may say more money will be expended in the work than has heretofore been expended.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then on page 15 I find, "for experimental shipments of fruits and vegetables within the United States and to foreign countries." I would like to know what is the scope of the work of the Department in that regard.

Mr. SCOTT. Under that provision the Department, to give a concrete illustration, has been shipping oranges and lemons from California to the Eastern markets, for the purpose of observing the reasons why the fruit deteriorates in transit. It has reached some very interesting results, so interesting and valuable, indeed, that the fruit growers of California believe that the annual value of the fruits saved by the application of the methods advised by the Department will reach the very handsome sum of $25,000,000. The Department has demonstrated, for example, that if the fruit can be put in cold storage before it starts and cooled to the temperature of the refrigerator cars, it reaches the market in a very much better condition.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am very glad the gentleman has made that statement, and I wish to say that it has been ascertained that we can ship our peaches for seventeen days, or a longer period, and they get to New York or Liverpool in excellent condition.

Mr. SCOTT. It is a very interesting and valuable work the Department has done under this section.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Kansas a question. I see that you include in this bill "investigation of fruit, fruit trees, grain, cotton, tobacco, vegetables," and so forth. Is there a specific appropriation for the investigation of insects, and so forth, that destroy tobacco?

Mr. SCOTT. There is no specific appropriation for that purpose. It is just like the former appropriation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is the appropriation for this particular branch of the Department's work increased?

Mr. SCOTT. The general expenses are increased in this bill over last year $311,486. That, however, is only an apparent increase, because there should be deducted from it $170,000, which was carried in another item last year, and which is covered over into this item this year.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then there is no increase this year?

Mr. SCOTT. There is an increase of about $80,000 in this particular paragraph in the bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is there any provision in this bill giving the Secretary of Agriculture, you may say, a lump sum to carry on the different branches of his work if the appropriations fall short?

Mr. SCOTT. The Secretary has taken care that the appropriations shall not fall short.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But suppose they do fall short. Suppose you appropriate $500,000 to do the entire work of a Department and it falls short of the work by $100,000. Have you given him any money to cover that or will that come up in the shape of a deficiency?

Mr. SCOTT. The committee has drawn the bill very carefully this year, and has left no large margin for unforeseen contingencies.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SCOTT. I move the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 19158, the agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HINSHAW for two weeks, on account of very serious illness of his father.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9079. An act to extend to Port Arthur, in the State of Texas, the privilege of immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise;

H. R. 6902. An act for the relief of Henry Rustan;

H. R. 16471. An act for the relief of George H. Penrose;

H. R. 14772. An act prescribing what shall constitute a legal cord of wood in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 13875. An act for the relief of John V. Johnson;

H. R. 17511. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew at Parkdale, Ashley County, Ark.;

H. R. 10671. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple for certain lands of the Santee Reservation, in Nebraska, to school district No. 36, in Knox County, Nebr.;

H. R. 17510. An act to authorize the county of Ashley, in the State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, Ashley County, Ark., at Portland; and

H. R. 17512. An act to authorize the county of Ashley, in the State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, Ashley County, Ark., at Wilmot.

AMENDMENT OF STATEHOOD ACT.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17050) to amend section 18 of an act entitled "An act to enable the people of Oklahoma and of the Indian Territory to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to enable the people of New Mexico and of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," approved June 16, 1906, and for other purposes.

Mr. PAYNE. I call for the regular order.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission submitting an estimate of reappropriation for block signal investigations—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an amended estimate of appropriation for the Coast and Geodetic Survey—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for repairs to steamer Albatross—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report on Camp John Hay, Benguet, P. I., giving data as to treatment of certain tropical diseases—to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for filing appliances in the Post-Office Department and revising the estimate for printing and binding for the Treasury Department—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19470) permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Calhoun Falls, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1330), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19471) authorizing the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Trotters Shoals, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1331), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19472) permitting the building of a dam across the Tugaloo River at Hattons Ford, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1332), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ESCH, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5133) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Winnipeg, Yankton and Gulf Railroad Company to construct a combined railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Yankton, S. Dak.," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1333), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles, which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1214) to give pensionable status to Benjamin C. Welch—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (H. R. 5488) granting an increase of pension to Margaret T. Everly—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 19945) granting a pension to Thomas F. Prendergast—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. TAWNEY, from the Committee on Appropriations: A bill (H. R. 19955) making appropriations to supply certain additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908—to the Union Calendar.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 28, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 19158, the agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FOSTER of Vermont in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collating, mapping, illustrating, digesting, printing, reporting, publishing, and disseminating information on the results of these investigations and experiments. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to obtain in the open market samples of seeds of grass, clover, or alfalfa, test the same, and if any such seeds are found to be adulterated or misbranded, or any seeds of Canada blue grass (Poa compressa) are obtained under any other name than Canada blue grass or Poa compressa, to publish the results of the tests, together with the names of the persons by whom the seeds were offered for sale.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the paragraph just read. I do not know but that I would be in sympathy with a proper law to prevent the adulteration of grass and other kinds of farm seeds. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has a bill on the Calendar safeguarding garden seeds and all kinds of farm seeds substantially in the same manner as foods are now guarded and protected under the pure-food bill. The objection I have to the paragraph is that it authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to go into the markets and buy seeds from dealers promiscuously, making an examination of the seeds to determine whether they are adulterated or misbranded.

I do not understand that Congress has yet determined what seeds shall be designated as misbranded or adulterated. In the pure-food law the term "adulteration or misbranding of food" is specifically defined. In the bill reported by the gentleman from Illinois he defines what shall be regarded as adulteration or misbranding. Who is to determine in cases and under the provisions of this bill when seeds are adulterated and when they are misbranded? Of course the Secretary of Agriculture. Has there been any legislative definition of what shall be an adulteration of seeds or a misbranding of a package of seeds? None at all. It gives the broad and absolute discretion to the Secretary of Agriculture, who will make for himself such standards as he chooses, change them every day in the year if he sees fit, and the consequences are that if he shall find any seeds to have been adulterated or misbranded he is authorized to make public the result of the test, together with the names of persons by whom the seeds are offered for sale.

What will be the operation of that kind of a law? I confess it has been on the statute book for some time, but that fact does not in any degree qualify the dangerous character of the provision. A special Government agent may buy seeds of a dealer, make report to the Secretary of Agriculture that from his standpoint, in his judgment, the seeds are adulterated or that the package is misbranded. There is no opportunity provided in this bill for the man whose business may be affected to appear and protect himself. He is entitled to no sort of notice, but the Government inspector may buy the seed and make the inspection and report to the Secretary of Agriculture that the seed is adulterated, according to his official judgment, and the Secretary of Agriculture then publishes in the public press the fact that Mr. So-and-so or a certain company in the State of Virginia, New York, Illinois, or any other State in the Union is selling adulterated seed. The result may be the practical destruction of the business and the business reputation of the individual or firm without any opportunity to be heard on their part to make any defense or attempt to protect themselves in any way whatever.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think if the gentleman will attempt to define "adulteration" his objection will disappear.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would say to the gentleman that I did not mean to be captious, but I have seen in my own experience the enormous value of this provision and I sincerely hope it will stay here.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman that it is proper to enact reasonable and wise legislation to prevent frauds and protect the people against impositions. In my judgment these laws ought to be made by the several State legislatures, but in the enactment of a law to prohibit wrongful or immoral trade practices let us be careful that we do not inflict an infinitely greater harm upon the business public than there may be in the wrong that we are seeking to remedy. Here is the situation. I explained a few moments ago where any Government agent authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture may go into anybody's establishment, buy a package of seed, examine it himself, and decide himself that it is adulterated. The seller, the producer, has no opportunity to be heard, has no opportunity to explain. He reports the result to the Secretary of Agriculture, and the result is published broadcast throughout the land to the practical destruction of the business reputation and the business, even, of the seller. I insist that that is a very broad and a dangerous power to confer upon any particular officer, the head of any Department.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As I understand, the gentleman's objection begins at line 6 and ends at line 16.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My objection is to the paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There are two sentences there, and they are disconnected. The first sentence is this:

For collating, mapping, illustrating, digesting, printing, reporting, publishing, and disseminating information on the results of these investigations and experiments.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have no personal objection to that. I want to get on because I have some views that I want to express to the committee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I did not think that the gentleman wanted to strike out that, because it is very essential to the bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; I have no objection to that. I want to say now that I have no sort of sympathy with a producer or a wholesale or retail dealer who imposes upon the public by selling adulterated or misbranded seeds or other commodities, and I represent no seed institution. There are no seed producers except farmers and gardeners in the State that I have the honor to represent. It is a general principle that I am contending for. In the bill, as I said a moment ago, reported by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the term "adulteration" is carefully defined and the term "misbranding" is carefully defined—defined so there is no uncertainty about it. Every producer and every dealer in the land ought to know when he is putting up his seeds, when he is offering them for sale, what may be considered as adulterated and what may be decided to be misbranded. That is a proper, a wise provision. Men engaged in the seed business would have the opportunity to protect themselves against criminal prosecutions under it, but who on earth knows when he is safe under the provisions of this bill? There is no definition of adulteration. What dealer can determine whether seeds can be considered adulterated by a special agent of the Agricultural Department?

Mr. COCKS of New York. Would not the gentleman consider, for instance, if some other seeds were added to clover seed, that that would be adulterated?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know.

Mr. COCKS of New York. Certainly anybody would say that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is no definition.

Mr. COCKS of New York. Is it not obvious?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I say no; because when we enact laws fixing and determining that it shall be a crime to adulterate seeds we should define the term "adulteration" so that citizens of the country may know what they can safely do.

Mr. COCKS of New York. It seems to me to be self-evident.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This law covers everything, and it vests in the Department officer a discretion to determine for himself what may be adulterated. He might decide that the mixing of some other seed with clover seed would not be an adulteration. He might, on the other hand, decide it would. What I am contending for is that legislation ought to be of such a character that every intelligent man in the country may know what his rights are, so that he may know when he is obeying the law and when he is violating the law. It is unfair to a citizen, and I think my point of order is well taken.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will reserve his point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I reserve it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on this proposition. I do not desire to address myself to the point of order, because, in my judgment, the paragraph is subject to the point of order, but I wonder whether the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] has ever given himself the opportunity to examine the results of what has been done by the Department of Agriculture under this provision. Is the gentleman from Indiana talking purely from an academic standpoint or is he talking from information? Has the gentleman from Indiana ever seen any of the bulletins published by the Department of Agriculture resulting from this provision of the bill? I ask for personal information whether the gentleman is familiar with the work done by the Department. If he is, I can not hope to sway his judgment now, but if he be not familiar with the Department's work, I hope I can persuade him to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I confess I have not as thorough familiarity with the work of the Department of Agriculture on this subject as the gentleman from Illinois, but I have read carefully his bill and the report thereon, prohibiting the adulteration and misbranding of seeds, and I obtained a number of valuable suggestions in reference to the method of wisely legislating upon this subject. If this provision is adequate, what is the object of enacting the Mann bill defining what adulteration is and what misbranding is?

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, this provision of the bill is not adequate. It is not criminal legislation. There is nothing prohibitive in the provision of this bill whatever. It is purely a matter of obtaining information and furnishing it to the public. The bill which I had the honor to report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is a bill which defines the adulteration of seed as a misdemeanor, and prohibits and punishes that misdemeanor. Now, that is not the bill before the House, and I beg to call the gentleman's attention and the attention of the House to some information which has been gathered by the Department of Agriculture under this provision of the bill, which relates only to forage-crop seed, grass, clover, and alfalfa, and it does not refer to other kinds or character of seed. What has the Department of Agriculture discovered in their investigations under this provision? That a large share of the pure, choice Kentucky blue grass, the finest grass that grows, sold throughout the country for seeding purposes, is composed of Canada blue grass of cheap quality and cheap price. For instance, let me call the attention of the gentleman to this investigation. In the course of the last year in their investigation the Department of Agriculture discovered that strictly fancy Kentucky blue-grass seed, so labeled, was composed entirely of Canada blue-grass seed. Choice blue grass was Canada blue grass, fancy blue grass was 98.8 per cent Canada blue grass, fancy Kentucky blue grass was 42.6 per cent Canada blue grass, pure Kentucky blue grass was 32 per cent Canada blue grass, fancy Kentucky blue grass was 39 per cent Canada blue grass. Another sample of fancy Kentucky blue grass was 52 per cent Canada blue grass. Strictly high-grade Government-test Kentucky blue grass, so labeled, was 55 per cent Canada blue grass. Double X Kentucky blue grass contained 5 per cent of Kentucky blue grass. Does not the gentleman think it is desirable that the people and the Congress should know these facts, the results of these investigations?

Now, the result of these investigations is published as a bulletin from the Department. Nobody in the seed business is complaining about it. Many of them have reformed their methods. Canada blue grass in the market sells for $8 per 100 pounds. Kentucky blue grass sells for $17 per 100 pounds. Does the gentleman think that an honest seedsman should be placed in competition with a dishonest seedsman who, by mixing 50 per cent of $8 blue-grass seed with 50 per cent of $17 blue-grass seed, sells the whole at the price of $17 seed? The last year there was imported in this country 673,802 pounds of Canada blue grass, every pound of which was used for the purpose of adulteration, because nobody sows or plants Canada blue-grass seed by itself, and it is not extensively used for lawn mixtures. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to continue his remarks for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, every person in the country interested in the development of agriculture knows that one of the most important things in connection with the development of agriculture to-day is the planting of the leguminous crops, the most prominent of which is red clover, next to the alfalfa, probably. The Department of Agriculture under this authority has ascertained by examination of samples that a large share of the red clover which is brought into this country for sale will not grow because the power of germination has not been developed, or largely of weed seed. Good red clover has about 250,000 seed to the pound, less than that when it comes from England, and still less when it comes from South America. Some red-clover seed which has been sold in this country has 450,000 to the pound, showing the small size of the seed and the undeveloped character of the seed.

But that is not all. In one sample of red-clover seed examined by the Department of Agriculture there were 144,450 weed seed to the pound and 95,580 black plantain seed. In another sample there were 71,558 weed seed to the pound, and it runs through a large share of the samples examined by the Department, showing the enormous quantity of weed seed being sold at high prices, and the man who bought the seed and planted it could well have afforded to pay ten times what he paid for the seed in order to never have allowed it to go on his farm. We have all over the country these weed seeds being introduced through the adulteration of these forage-crop seeds.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the gentleman remember—I do not—in the definition of adulteration of seeds contained in his bill how large a percentage of weed seed per pound is allowed? The gentleman knows that it is almost impossible to produce a forage seed, clover seed, and that kind without getting some weed seed in it. How much does the gentleman allow in his bill, if he remembers?

Mr. MANN. Two per cent.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Two per cent. Now, under the provision we are considering, any officer would have authority to fix the standard. I think the standard of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKS] is that if there is any weed seed in clover seed at all it is adulterated, and therefore it emphasizes, if the gentleman please, the necessity of a legislative definition of adulteration and misbranding. Now, I confess, so far as I am personally concerned, I agree to almost everything the gentleman says. I believe with him. I think there ought to be protection against fraud and imposition, but I think the honest seed grower ought to have protection likewise. If he can allow 2 per cent of weed seed in his clover, he ought not to be subject to be held up and the seller of his seed to be published over the country as a perpetrator of fraud, as he might be.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, he is not published in that way.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. He may be.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I suppose he might be under this. What the Agricultural Department, in fact, does, is to make a test of the seed in the most careful and scientific manner now known, and their methods of making tests are acquiesced in and acknowledged to be proper by all seedsmen. They do not publish that a man has adulterated the seed. They publish the results of the tests only. The seedsmen themselves have been anxious to receive this, because the majority of seedsmen do not raise their own seed. There are very few seedsmen who raise large quantities of seed, and no seedsman who raises 50 per cent or even 25 per cent of the seed which he sells. He is anxious to be guarded against the adulteration of seeds by some one else, and we all know that as a general rule it is the man who does not wish to put his name to a thing that is most willing to adulterate it or misbrand it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow another question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If this is proper legislation, why did not the gentleman in his bill declare that whoever adulterates or misbrands seeds for the purpose of interstate commerce or interstate transportation shall be guilty of a crime? Why did the gentleman go to the trouble of carefully defining adulteration and misbranding?

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the point that the gentleman makes. There is force in it; but this bill is a bill simply to obtain information which, as it has been obtained and published, no one has complained about. The bill which I have reported into the House does a great deal more than that. It proposes to punish people who deliberately add weed seed or dead seed or other seed for the purpose of adulterating seed, or who deliberately misbrand seed, as some people do. The gentleman understands that seed raised in different portions of the country, of the same kind, have very different values. Now, that is a criminal statute to that extent. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] and myself would both agree that in enacting any statute creating a misdemeanor we should be exceedingly careful in defining what the crime consists of, or what the act forbidden consists of, and that we attempt to do in the bill which has been reported into the House. But this bill simply obtains information. Under this provision of the bill, I say to the gentleman frankly, I asked the Department of Agriculture last year to collect throughout the country samples of vegetable and flower seeds which were being offered for sale at the corner groceries. We have been told in this body repeatedly that the seeds which the Government sent out were of poor quality, but the seeds which the seedsmen worked off on the people were of excellent and fine quality.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to strike out the last word.

I do not make this motion for the purpose of discussing any provision of this agricultural bill. I listened yesterday with a good deal of interest to the enumeration of measures recommended in the last message of the President of the United States by our very worthy and distinguished minority leader [Mr. WILLIAMS], whose leadership I have always followed without hesitancy and with confidence; but I am compelled, Mr. Chairman, by reason of the convictions that I have to enter my earnest protest and most respectfully dissent to one of the measures that he pointed out that is advocated by the President and about which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] spoke as follows: "One more clause in the President's message meets with my unqualified approval. It is this:"

> Numerous bills granting water-power rights on navigable streams have been introduced. None of them give the Government the right to make a reasonable charge for the valuable privileges so granted, in spite of the fact that these water-power privileges are equivalent to many thousands of acres of the best coal lands for their production of power. Nor is any definite time limit set, as should always be done in such cases. I shall be obliged hereafter, in accordance with the policy stated in a recent message, to veto any water-power bill which does not provide for a time limit and for the right of the President or of the Secretary concerned to fix and collect such a charge as he may find to be just and reasonable in each case.

This is one of the measures that our minority leader pointed out that he cordially and unqualifiedly indorsed and "applauded," and it is to that measure that I shall address my remarks in the few minutes allowed me under the rules of the House governing debate at this time. It is but natural that the indorsement given this measure by our minority leader carries great weight with it.

I do not believe there is any question of authority or power between the Federal Government and the State governments on which the lines of demarkation are more thoroughly established and recognized than that in reference to the navigable streams of our country. I do not believe that the measure suggested by the President and indorsed by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] falls within the delegated powers of the Federal Government. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that at this particular time, when an impulse is pervading this whole country in reference to the improvement of our waterways and the development of water power as the only relief that can be given to the people of this country in the matter of transportation, because the capacities and the facilities of the railroads of the country are insufficient, that at this particular time of all other times in the history of our Government, this great movement for the improvement of our waterways and the development of the water powers should be inaugurated and prosecuted with a full recognition of the broad and constitutional limitations of the rights of the States and the Federal Government. The President has contributed his full share to this desirable movement, and I was glad to hear the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] say that we ought to have for this purpose an appropriation of $50,000,000 per annum.

In my humble opinion, the suggestion made by the President of the United States to require a common carrier or other corporation engaged in interstate commerce to be licensed in Washington is not near so far-reaching in its evil effects as for the Federal Government to undertake to assume control of the navigable waterways of this country contrary to the limitations of the Constitution. I know, and I will refer to them if I have the time in these short remarks, that there may be certain conditions or collaboration of work between the Government and individuals, where the improvement of navigation is in view, that a different rule would apply or may prevail; but the pronouncement of the President is sweeping against all conditions and asserts the unqualified power of the Government to impose, as a right, a rental charge on water powers. If the Government has a right and power to demand and collect a rental charge for the use of a water power—where the Government has never expended a cent to create that power—then it necessarily follows that the Government has a greater interest in our navigable waterways than that only of navigation. The unbroken line of decisions, from the establishment of our Government down to the present day, must be admitted to be this: That each State has the exclusive jurisdiction over the navigation of the waters lying within its territorial limits, and may therefore pass such laws regulating their use as it may deem wise, subject only to the supreme power of Congress to interfere for the purpose of preventing any obstruction or hindrance to navigation.

The State owns the fee to the bed of the navigable stream and the properties of such streams, and the State surrendered or delegated to the Federal Government the supreme right to use and control the navigation of these navigable streams. All other interests, functions, and properties in a navigable stream, whatever they may be, such as water power, water supply for domestic uses, and so forth, are held and exercised by the State, subordinate to the right that the Government has in navigation and navigation only. Therefore I say that any improvement made by a State or under the authority of the State must be in harmony with this principle. If such an improvement be made by the State, the Federal Government has the right to say what effect such improvement has on the navigation of the stream, and for this reason the consent of the Government ought to be secured. Neither can an improvement or other building be placed on that navigable stream without the consent of the State.

It will be recalled that the great trouble in successfully operating our Government under the Articles of Confederation was the inability to control and regulate commerce between the colonies. When our Constitution was framed, and this trouble was provided for under Article I, paragraph 8, clause 3 of the Constitution, called the "commerce clause," from which the authority comes for the Government's supreme control over the question of navigation in our navigable streams, the wisdom of our fathers must be apparent when they caused the several States to vest in the Federal Government the regulation of commerce over the navigable rivers of the country. We ought to hesitate before adopting any policy that tends even to contravene this wholesome and wise principle.

In Pollard v. Hagan, 44 United States, page 229, the relative rights of the United States and the State in the matter of navigable waterways is clearly declared:

> This report of eminent domain over the shores and soils under the navigable waters for all municipal purposes belongs exclusively to the States within their respective territorial jurisdictions, and they, and they only, have the constitutional power to exercise it. To give to the United States the right to transfer to a citizen the title to the shores and the soils under the navigable waters would be placing in their hands a weapon which might be wielded greatly to the injury of State sovereignty and deprive the States of a power to exercise a numerous and important class of police powers, but in the hands of the States can never be used so as to affect the exercise of any natural right of eminent domain or jurisdiction with which the United States have been vested by the Constitution.

In this connection I will refer to only a few of the large number of United States Supreme Court decisions sanctioning the views I express in these remarks:

Kaukauna Water Power Company v. Green Bay and Mississippi Canal Company (142 U. S., 254); St. Anthony Falls Water Power Company v. Water Commissioners of St. Paul (168 U. S., 360); Wilson v. Blackbird Creek Marsh Company (2 Pet. U. S., 245); Lake Shore Railroad Company v. Ohio (165 U. S., 365); United States v. Billingham Bay Boom Company (176 U. S., 211); Levy v. United States (177 U. S., 621); Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S., 46–87).

Mr. WILLIAMS. May I be permitted to interrupt?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman, or does the gentleman not, admit that in order that one of these bills furnishing water power to a private corporation shall be placed in a navigable stream it is a prerequisite that the authority of the United States shall be granted?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, the gentleman consents it is a prerequisite that authority of the United States shall be granted. Then does he not think that that authority ought to be so exercised as not to give to an industrial corporation, free of charge, and without any compensation, a very valuable right?

Mr. RICHARDSON. My answer to that clearly and positively is this: Where natural waterfalls exist in a navigable stream—and they exist in many places in our country—where the Government has not expended one dollar to create one ounce of water power, you contend and I deny that the Government has the right to demand or charge any citizen or corporation a rental for that water power after the citizen or private corporation has expended all needful money to utilize the natural, unharnessed electric energies of that natural fall.

I submit in this connection the opinion of General Mackenzie, Chief Engineer of the United States Army, prepared in discussing this subject on February 23, 1906, daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, first session Fifty-ninth Congress, pages 2891 and 2892:

> In connection with legislation of this kind, careful consideration should be given to the question of limitations of the power of the Federal Government over navigable waters. By virtue of its power to regulate commerce Congress may exercise control over the navigable waters of the United States, but only to the extent necessary to protect, preserve, and improve free navigation. The Federal Government has no possessive title to the water flowing in navigable streams nor to the lands comprising their beds and shores, and hence Congress can grant no absolute authority to anyone to use and occupy such water and land for manufacturing and industrial purposes. The establishment, regulation, and control of manufacturing and industrial enterprises, as well as other matters pertaining to the comfort, convenience, and prosperity of the people, come within the powers of the States, and the Supreme Court of the United States holds that the authority of a State over navigable waters within its borders and the shores and beds thereof is plenary, subject only to such action as Congress may take in the exercise of its powers under the Constitution to regulate commerce among the several States.

And, in this connection, I take the liberty of referring to an extract from a letter written by Secretary of War W. H. Taft to the President, of the same date of the letter of General Mackenzie, in which he says:

> It is, of course, in the interest of the public that improvements of this kind should be encouraged, and in streams in which there has been no expenditure of money to create water power it does not seem to me necessary to extend the policy of demanding compensation for such a slight use of Government lands as this privilege.

I deny that where the Government has never spent a dollar to create a water power that it has any right to go in and fix charges, and the references above made clearly sustain my position.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman's time be extended ten minutes.

Mr. SCOTT. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if five minutes would not suffice? I am very anxious to get along with the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Perhaps I could, but ten minutes is a very limited time to discuss this important question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Alabama says the Federal Government "goes in there" in order to grant these rights. Isn't the gentleman a little bit inaccurate in that statement? Does not the Constitution of the United States send the Government in there by the fact that it gives the Federal Government jurisdiction over navigable streams? The gentleman from Alabama will note that the President's message refers to nothing but navigable streams.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It does not say that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not contend that the rate should necessarily be paid to the Federal Government. The Secretary of War, in fixing the conditions, and Congress in fixing them, might very well, if it saw fit, prescribe that the pay should go to the State. To that I should have no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will notice the phraseology of the President's message—and it means a great deal, because he knows how to use the English language to express his meaning as well as any man I have ever read—"any water-power bill"——

Mr. WILLIAMS. On a navigable stream.

Mr. RICHARDSON. On a navigable stream—for the reason, I contend, that nobody has a right to charge for that water power except the State. The State owns the fee of all of the bed of the river, it controls other properties connected with the riparian rights, and it is absolutely supreme, and the wisdom of our fathers in framing the Constitution is shown by putting in this paragraph of the commerce clause of the Constitution; the wisdom is demonstrated more particularly in the control given over navigable streams than in any other feature that I know of. While the commerce clause gives to the Government the right "among" the States to regulate commerce, that is all that it gives the Government. The State does not surrender its control of the bed of the river; it does not surrender other properties connected with the riparian interests; it only surrenders to the Government the navigation and the right to control navigation and the right to prevent it from being obstructed—it grants an easement—nothing more or less.

I say it is an important matter in this country to-day when this great movement is being inaugurated, and I regret to hear our minority leader say that he applauds and cordially indorses this proposition which I believe is as complete an invasion of the reserved rights of the State as any that ever was suggested on the floor of this House, and utterly undemocratic.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The gentleman from Alabama being on the committee which reports out dam bills, I would like to ask him if he knows whether that committee has reported a dam bill during the present Congress, or during the last part of the last Congress, that did not contain the provision which the President asked for, namely, allowing the Government to fix such regulations as it saw fit? I refer to the general dam bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will answer the gentleman by asking another question. Has the gentleman known of any bill to come from that committee that offered to provide for any charges?

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; no definite charges have been fixed, but the right has been reserved for the Government to impose charges if it saw fit.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think not. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] that where there is a collaboration of work, where the Government comes in and says to the individual, "I will cooperate with you; I am looking to the navigation and you are looking to the development of water power; you are contributing by building the dam, and I will contribute so much in another way"—I do not pretend to say that under those circumstances the Government has not a right to enter into terms. But that is collaborative work, I contend, and it is applicable especially throughout the South. I know it is so in my own State. As the President says, it is worth all of the coal mined, and if it is so valuable as that we ought to enter into the great movement so auspiciously inaugurated by the President for the use of our waterways with a great deal of care. Why, how easy it is get a stream declared to be navigable.

I recall now in my experience on the bench that a man was indicted for gambling on Sunday in a ferryboat in the middle of the river while the river was up and very high. They put in a plea, which was the truth, that when the river went down there was no water there at all for at least six months in the year, yet it was a navigable stream. We all understand that. There may be a navigable stream under those circumstances, and then, when these natural falls occur, does any man say that when their power may be used in promotion of enterprise and industry and thrift to advance our prosperity, to run our cotton mills and electric cars, that the President and the Federal Government has a right—the State never having surrendered its reserve right over that stream—to make a charge, to place a tax burden upon that power? And for what? To reap where it had not sown—never a dollar. What right has the Government to do it? Not certainly on the basis of sovereignty, because that is with the State. Upon what basis does our minority leader contend that such right is given to the Government under such circumstances to burden enterprise with such a charge and make the people pay for it?

It behooves us to look at this matter practically and make a practical application. It is useless to hold up the ordinary "scarecrow"—a monopoly. I assert without hesitancy that the "monopoly" will follow when you break down the constitutional limitations that safeguard these great tributaries that God dedicated to the use of the people who have the good fortune to occupy the lands through which they flow. The people, I tell you, Mr. Chairman, are not alarmed at this cry of greedy monopolies seizing and appropriating these great energies that have laid dormant and run to waste for unnumbered years of the past. We know, especially in the States of the South, what these water powers mean as allies of our future growth and prosperity. We have seen these great electric energies running to waste for years, while we well know if they were utilized, which they could be under a liberal policy, they would run all the spindles of all the cotton mills of the South now and that would come to us in the future—they would run every wheel of industry in our State.

Electric railway lines propelled by this power would traverse our States, giving impulse to prosperity and wealth. Knowing these things and with such an experience we are not passive upon the suggestion of a policy that will fetter, hamper, and prevent the development of our water powers. The States reserved these rights for the individual benefit, comfort, and convenience of the people of the States. These rights that belong to the people of the States in navigable rivers are of the class of "police rights," and to encroach or infringe upon them by the Federal Government is as much a violation of the Constitution as to deny the State the right to pass criminal laws and provide penalties for the violation of the same. It would be equally excusable to deny, invade, or circumscribe the right of the State to provide for and protect the health of its people.

Under the contention of our minority leader [Mr. WILLIAMS] the Federal Government can, with equal right and propriety, require a rental charge of the sawmill that is located on the banks of a navigable stream. With same complacency a charge could be placed on the fish trap placed by the enterprising owner of the banks on one of the navigable rivers. It could demand that a water meter be used by all water companies that use water for domestic purposes from these navigable streams, so as to graduate or determine the amount the Federal Government is entitled to for using the water of these navigable streams that belong to and are owned by the Government. We have heard of vast coal beds that have been developed under the beds or bottoms of navigable rivers.

Of course, under the theory advanced by the President, the United States would have a right to collect a toll or rent charge or royalty off the coal mined, notwithstanding the fact that the fee of the bed of the stream belongs absolutely to the State—a property and a right that the State never delegated to the Federal Government. These are simply a few of the many practical wrongs that the people would be subjected to. And in the meantime our water powers would remain as they are now and just as they were when they fell from the plastic hand of nature—untouched, undeveloped, with millions of dollars daily running to waste.

The chiefest and most willing policy of the Federal Government should be to stimulate and encourage these water-power developments, not hinder them, for they mean increased prosperity. They mean the employment of thousands of unemployed laborers, who, if they remain unemployed, will soon become violators and disturbers of the peace. They mean larger population. I said in the beginning of my remarks that if the Government saw proper, in the interests of navigation, to enter into a collaboration or cooperation with individuals or private corporations for construction of dams or other works, where the Government and the corporation each contributed money for the building of the work, and the resultant benefits, then the question of what return in the way of charges the Government might be fairly entitled to is entirely a different matter from that announced by the President.

I read now, Mr. Chairman, from remarks of that great man whose death is more to be deplored as having occurred at this time than any other period of our history, because he stood earnestly for all the limitations of the Federal Constitution and for the true rights of the States. I refer to our own grand and distinguished deceased Senator, John T. Morgan. He wrote in the last years of his life one of the grandest pamphlets on this very question relative to the watershed of the Mississippi River and the rights that the people have, in the tributaries that belong to them, and to nobody else, and that they control. I read from him this paragraph:

> If the taxation of the people for this purpose is doubled or quadrupled by such expenditures, they will get the benefit, and they never refuse the burden when the expenditure is necessary to their general welfare and is secured against the greed of monopoly. Not only is it true that free navigation of the water courses is secured to the people individually and collectively beyond the power of opposing monopolies and combinations to deprive them of these natural rights, but they are the only efficient rights and powers vested in the people that enable them to resist and control the monopolistic power that is now in the hands of the railroad companies to fix the cost of all transportation. Such considerations, which will be more especially pointed out, not only justify, but they require Congress to take up the great subject of improving the navigation of the water courses that are parts of the grand system of commercial intercourse included in the watershed of the Mississippi River.

Mr. Chairman, I fully realize that this is a question of vital importance. We know that the President in furtherance of this momentous movement for the improvement of our waterways—the President of the United States has invited the governors of all the States and other leading public men and citizens to meet him with the Inland Waterways Commission at an early date in this city to consider the most practicable and useful plans for the improvement of the waterways of our country. Of course, we all realize that the development of water power will be an important factor in that assemblage of able and patriotic men.

The President, I think, is entitled to commendation for bringing these gentlemen together to confer with him and the Waterways Commission. The people, I confidently believe, are in hearty sympathy with every movement looking to the improvement of our waterways, for it is directly from such improvements and the building of good roads that the masses of the people realize and appreciate direct benefit. We should strongly rebuke any trend of public opinion that benefits and rights belonging to the States in connection with our national resources should be appropriated and used for the purpose of getting all we can out of them for the Republic as a whole. This theory is utterly repugnant to the theory and spirit of our representative form of government.

If our rivers and waters can be so used, then the coal and the mountains and other properties will soon follow. Such theories promote and insure a consolidated Government. I refer here again to an extract from the pamphlet written by the deceased senior Senator from Alabama, John Tyler Morgan, where he says:

We are at the beginning of the improvement of our great internal system of navigation, and the greatest care is needed to establish its proper adjustment, so that its usefulness shall keep pace with the growth of the country, and its results shall be one of the chief glories of the Republic.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

Mr. SCOTT. How much time does the gentleman from Mississippi desire?

Mr. WILLIAMS. About five minutes.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object to the gentleman having five minutes, but I wish to serve notice at this time that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi I shall be obliged to object to any discussion that does not bear directly upon the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, there can be no doubt in the mind of any man seeking merely the public good and public right, independently of any desire for local legislation, of this general proposition, that whenever any sovereignty, State or Federal, is required to issue a charter or a license or a consent, in order to confer powers upon individuals or corporations, it is the duty of that sovereignty in the interests of the people so to condition the grant of that power as that it shall redound to the interest of all the people, and that utilities of vast value should not be gratuitously granted to individuals or corporations and perpetually alienated from the people or the States or the Government.

Now, it is admitted—and of course I regret very much that in laying down any general law or any rule of conduct I should be compelled to come athwart any desire for legislation in the gentleman's district or anywhere else—but it is admitted that this power to erect dams in navigable streams can not be exercised by anybody except by an act of Congress. Now, then, if it require an act of Congress to permit any man to put a dam in a navigable stream, then two things follow: Congress should so exercise the power in making that grant as, first, to prevent any harm to the navigability of the stream itself, and, secondly, so as to prevent any individual or any private corporation from securing through the act of Congress any uncompensated advantage or private profit.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman allow me, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. You contend that the Congress has a right to put a tax upon a dam or require a rent?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman admits himself, Mr. Chairman, that nobody can put a dam in a navigable stream without the consent of the United States.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Of course, I admit that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And that act flows not from the act of Congress, but from the very conditions of the Constitution itself. I can not put a spade in the Mississippi River, I can not do a thing to interfere with that river, I can not even put a bridge across it without the consent of the United States Government. Now, if Congress has a right, if Congress alone has a right to charter these people to do this thing, then Congress has a right to condition that permission in such a way that in the opinion of Congress the grant of the right shall redound to the interest of the public.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If you put a tax on a dam, have you not the same right to put a tax upon a bridge?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Congress has, if it chooses to exercise it and if it were in the interest of the general public to do so. It is not to the interest of the general public to do that and Congress never does grant the right even to put a bridge across a navigable stream without doing it under such conditions prescribed by general law or by a particular act as, in the opinion of Congress, will redound to the general benefit, and shall not constitute solely a private advantage.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Mississippi may be extended.

Mr. POLLARD. How long?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Ten minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just one moment on that. Now, Mr. Chairman, I was saying here yesterday that this part of the President's message met my individual approval and I contradistinguished it from many other things which I designated as things that I knew met with general Democratic approval, but I will go further now and say that I can imagine nothing more undemocratic, whether in a city or a State or the Federal Government, than granting public utilities without any compensation to the public. In my opinion in every city of this land and every State and in the Federal Government, wherever any right redounds in profit to the grantee by reason of the license of the Government, the people ought also to get some profit out of the granted right. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask one question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama first.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Could a corporation go there and do anything on that navigable stream without the consent of the State?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not without the consent of Congress either.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, the State.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I am not talking about what the State ought to do. If I were speaking of a State legislature, I would also say that the State ought not to grant any such right as that without compensation, or at least time limit or conditions.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is the question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I am talking now of the Congress of the United States, about liberties and emoluments and profits granted by the National Legislature.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not think there are very many Members of this House who will disagree with the gentleman as to what ought to be done, providing the right is conceded. I do not agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] in his answer to your question when he said that the Government had the absolute right to consent to the building of a dam or other so-called "obstructions" when the building of them interferes with the navigability of the stream. It gets the power under the commerce clause of the Constitution to control that. Now, does the gentleman contend that if something should be constructed, such as a dam, or a mill, or any other site that does not interfere with interstate commerce, or the navigability, rather, of that stream, the Federal Government would still have power in the matter?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I contend that no man has a right to interfere by any sort of constructive work in a navigable stream without first getting the consent of Congress. That much the gentleman admits. I remember that in my own State when the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad, in order to make a fresh-water harbor at the terminus of that railroad, when it would have been admittedly of great value to everybody as well as to that railroad, was prevented by the Federal authorities from proceeding without first getting Federal consent.

Mr. TOWNSEND. They were prevented because there was an interference with the navigability of the stream.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a minute. No; it would have been a benefit to navigation. Wherever consent is predicated as a prerequisite, then the right to accompany that consent with conditions goes as a necessary incident.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired. Unless objection is heard, the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Alabama will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES]?

Mr. SCOTT. For the purpose of making a request.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. It seems to me that the general bridge bill shows that Congress has already protected the interests of the Government in the matter recently under discussion, and I ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD that act.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The act is as follows:

An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters.

Be it enacted, etc., That when, hereafter, authority is granted by Congress to any persons to construct and maintain a dam for water power or other purposes across any of the navigable waters of the United States, such dams shall not be built or commenced until the plans and specifications for its construction, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such map of the proposed location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, have been submitted to the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers for their approval, or until they shall have approved such plans and specifications and the location of such dam and accessory works; and when the plans for any dam to be constructed under the provisions of this act have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War it shall not be lawful to deviate from such plans either before or after completion of the structure unless the modification of such plans has previously been submitted to and received the approval of the Chief of Engineers and of the Secretary of War: Provided, That in approving said plans and location such conditions and stipulations may be imposed as the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War may deem necessary to protect the present and future interests of the United States, which may include the condition that such persons shall construct, maintain, and operate, without expense to the United States, in connection with said dam and appurtenant works, a lock or locks, booms, sluices, or any other structures which the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers at any time may deem necessary in the interest of navigation, in accordance with such plans as they may approve, and also that whenever Congress shall authorize the construction of a lock, or other structures for navigation purposes, in connection with such dam, the person owning such dam shall convey to the United States, free of cost, title to such land as may be required for such constructions and approaches, and shall grant to the United States a free use of water power for building and operating such constructions.

SEC. 2. That the right is hereby reserved to the United States to construct, maintain, and operate, in connection with any dam built under the provisions of this act, a suitable lock or locks, or any other structures for navigation purposes, and at all times to control the said dam and the level of the pool caused by said dam to such an extent as may be necessary to provide proper facilities for navigation.

SEC. 3. That the person, company, or corporation building, maintaining, or operating any dam and appurtenant works, under the provisions of this act, shall be liable for any damage that may be inflicted thereby upon private property, either by overflow or otherwise. The persons owning or operating any such dam shall maintain, at their own expense, such lights and other signals thereon and such fishways as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall prescribe.

SEC. 4. That all rights acquired under this act shall cease and be determined if the person, company, or corporation acquiring such rights shall, at any time, fail to comply with any of the provisions and requirements of the act, or with any of the stipulations and conditions that may be prescribed as aforesaid by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War.

SEC. 5. That any persons who shall fail or refuse to comply with the lawful order of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, made in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a violation of this act, and any persons who shall be guilty of a violation of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, and every month such persons shall remain in default shall be deemed a new offense and subject such persons to additional penalties therefor; and in addition to the penalties above described the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may, upon refusal of the persons owning or controlling any such dam and accessory works to comply with any lawful order issued by the Secretary of War or Chief of Engineers in regard thereto, cause the removal of such dam and accessory works as an obstruction to navigation at the expense of the persons owning or controlling such dam, and suit for such expense may be brought in the name of the United States against such persons, and recovery had for such expense in any court of competent jurisdiction; and the removal of any structures erected or maintained in violation of the provisions of this act or the order or direction of the Secretary of War or Chief of Engineers made in pursuance thereof may be enforced by injunction, mandamus, or other summary process, upon application to the circuit court in the district in which such structure may, in whole or in part, exist, and proper proceedings to this end may be instituted under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States at the request of the Chief of Engineers or the Secretary of War; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to navigation created by the construction of any dam under this act, the cause or question arising may be tried before the circuit court of the United States in any district in which any portion of said obstruction or dam touches.

SEC. 6. That whenever Congress shall hereafter by law authorize the construction of any dam across any of the navigable waters of the United States, and no time for the commencement and completion of such dam is named in said act, the authority thereby granted shall cease and be null and void unless the actual construction of the dam authorized in such act be commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of the passage of such act.

SEC. 7. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved as to any and all dams which may be constructed in accordance with the provisions of this act, and the United States shall incur no liability for the alteration, amendment, or repeal thereof to the owner or owners or any other persons interested in any dam which shall have been constructed in accordance with its provisions.

SEC. 8. That the word "persons" as used in this act shall be construed to import both the singular and the plural, as the case demands, and shall include corporations, companies, and associations.

Approved, June 21, 1906.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I gave notice a few moments ago that I should be obliged hereafter to object to discussion pending the consideration of this bill which was not directed to the bill. In connection with that notice I should like now to ask unanimous consent for general leave to print upon the bill for five legislative days following the conclusion of the consideration of it.

Mr. MANN. The committee has no jurisdiction to give that consent. You will have to ask that in the House.

Mr. SCOTT. I recall now that that request can not be made in the committee, but I shall make it when the House sits this evening. As to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, which has been reserved against the paragraph by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER]——

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] stated his point of order the Chair did not catch it. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Indiana might state his point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The point of order, Mr. Chairman, is that the paragraph contains new legislation. It is broader than any general act of Congress. It authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to use a portion of the appropriation that is carried in the bill for purposes not authorized by law. That is a general statement of the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the point of order will apply against this paragraph, and in support of that view I wish to read to the House an opinion given on the 12th day of January, 1906, by the then Attorney-General of the United States, Mr. William H. Moody, bearing directly upon this point. I wish to read this communication for another reason also. A great many of the attacks—not this attack, but a great many of the attacks—which have been made upon this bill during the last three days have displayed such profound and abysmal and apparently invincible ignorance of the law governing the Department of Agriculture, that I believe the House may well take a few minutes to listen to an exposition of that law by one whose position at the time this opinion was rendered, and since, gives that opinion very great weight. The letter is addressed to the Secretary of Agriculture, and reads as follows:

OPINION OF ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, January 12, 1906.

The SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE.

SIR: The agricultural appropriation act of March 3, 1905, under the subhead "Botanical investigations and experiments," provides (33 Stats., 861, 869):

"The Secretary is hereby directed to obtain in the open market samples of seeds of grass, clover, or alfalfa, test the same, and if any such seeds are found to be adulterated or misbranded, or any seeds of Canada blue grass (Poa compressa) are obtained under any other name than Canada blue grass, or Poa compressa, to publish the results of the tests, together with the name of the persons by whom the seeds were offered for sale."

Which is the language under consideration.

In your letter of December 2, 1905, you say that in pursuance of the above provision you have purchased samples of the various seeds mentioned, tested the same, found a number of the samples to be adulterated, and intend—subject to my opinion as to the legality thereof—to publish the results of the tests, together with the names of the persons by whom the seeds were offered for sale.

You say, however, that "it has been suggested that the Congress did not have the power to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to go into the open market and purchase samples of seeds, to test the same, and to publish the names of the persons by whom the seeds were offered for sale, regardless of the fact that the seeds may have been sold in the State in which they were raised, and were never at any time shipped from one State or Territory to another."

If the provision in question were a regulation of commerce or police, there would be some force in this suggestion. But the statute can not, I think, properly be regarded as a commercial or police regulation. It does not prohibit or restrict the sale of misbranded or adulterated seeds. It simply provides for the dissemination of information in regard to those matters. It is true the effect of the information so imparted may be to lessen the sale of misbranded or adulterated seeds; but that is not sufficient to transform a measure intended for the education and enlightenment of the public into a regulation of commerce or police. Such a view would prevent the Government from publishing any information whatever upon the subjects of agriculture, manufacture, and commerce, because the tendency of all such information is to promote or restrict those pursuits.

So far as the statute in question is concerned, the sale, shipment, and transportation of the seeds mentioned remains entirely untrammeled. It is yet for Congress, in the exercise of its power over interstate and foreign commerce, and for the States, in the exercise of their police powers, to regulate and control this matter within their respective jurisdictions. A bill was introduced at the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress (H. R. 9669) and reintroduced at the present session of the Fifty-ninth Congress (H. R. 4480), which in terms prohibits the introduction into this country and the interstate shipment of adulterated and misbranded seeds, and their sale in the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States, and makes a violation of the act a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment. Here, of course, is regulation, and for that reason it is confined to subjects within the jurisdiction of Congress. But the provision in question in nowise regulates, it simply educates and enlightens the general public as to the fraud that is being practiced upon them.

It is to this part of the opinion I request the attention of certain gentlemen who are not upon the floor of the House.

The Department of Agriculture was established "to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word, and to procure, propagate, and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and plants." (Act May 15, 1862, ch. 72, sec. 1, 12 Stat., 387; sec. 520 Rev. Stat.) In pursuance of the general policy thus indicated, Congress has, from time to time, authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to make investigations and experiments and publish information in regard to the various branches of agriculture, to purchase and distribute valuable seeds, to publish statistics concerning the cotton crop, to investigate the various diseases of animals and report as to the means for their prevention and cure, to investigate meteorological conditions, and distribute weather forecasts, to investigate the adulteration and false labeling of foods, drugs, beverages, and condiments, and report the result in bulletins of the Department, etc.

It is now too late to question the authority of Congress to establish the Department of Agriculture and authorize such investigations, experiments, and publications. If not expressly granted, it must be taken to be an implied power—one inherent in the sovereignty of the nation. Its exercise in no way conflicts with the reserved powers of the States, but tends to facilitate their action upon such matters, and is necessary to the due execution of the powers expressly granted to the General Government. It would be a narrow view that would prohibit Congress from disseminating useful information.

The investigations, experiments, and publications so authorized are not limited to the domain of interstate and foreign commerce; but, it will be observed, when Congress proceeds to regulate and control the sale, shipment, or transportation of any such articles, it confines its legislation to the interstate or foreign field, or to places under its exclusive jurisdiction.

In the present case, Congress has not, as already pointed out, attempted to regulate the sale, shipment, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded seeds. It has simply directed the Secretary of Agriculture to do what any individual may do. A leading magazine is at the present time engaged in exposing the fraud and deception practiced upon the people in the sale of certain patent medicines. No one would think of suggesting that such exposure amounts to a regulation of commerce or police by the magazine, because it does not possess governmental powers; but the fact that Congress does possess governmental powers and may make regulations of commerce or police in regard to matters within its jurisdiction, can not transform a measure for the dissemination of knowledge into such a regulation.

Doubtless but for the fact that Congress has directed the name of the seller of the misbranded or adulterated articles to be published, no question would have arisen in respect to this legislation; but that fact in no way alters the character of the legislation. It still remains a measure for the dissemination of useful information in regard to seeds, the publication of the name of the seller being only an incidental matter. It is true the seller may in some cases be innocent of any intentional deception. Still he has sold misbranded seed, and the publication goes no further than to state that mere fact. Besides, the question as to what information shall be published about these investigations and experiments is entirely for the determination of Congress.

I see no constitutional objection, therefore, to your carrying out the mandate of the law.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM H. MOODY,
Attorney-General.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that in view of the opinion that has been expressed, the point of order will not lie against this paragraph.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I confess that I am not as familiar with the organic act creating the Department of Agriculture and acts supplementary thereto as I might be, but I am enough of a lawyer and parliamentarian to know the difference between the power of Congress under the Constitution and the authority of the Committee on Agriculture under the rules of the House. The Attorney-General held that an act in form like the provision now under consideration was within the constitutional power of Congress. I have no disposition to take issue with the Attorney-General upon that question now or at any other time, but the question for the Chair to determine is whether there is any statute authorizing the Committee on Agriculture to report a bill which the Attorney-General says Congress has the power to enact. Now, that is the proposition, and I think I can dispose of the question of order satisfactorily.

Mr. MANN. There is no question about its being subject to the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think there is no doubt that it is subject to the point of order, but I can dispose of the point of order satisfactorily. The committee will realize that when an item of legislation is proposed, one of peculiarly beneficent character, and a Member of the House suggests that the legislation ought to be put in proper form and ought to contain limitations to prevent abuse in its execution, he is met with the argument that it is a good piece of legislation, that its purposes are beneficent, but I do not admit the validity of that kind of an argument in this matter. I believe all laws ought to be put in proper form. The ordinary and usual limitations ought to be placed on all kinds of legislation to prevent abuse in the administration of laws. I do not like to see such irresponsible and unlimited discretion vested in a Department officer as is carried in this provision. It is admitted now in relation to forage seed, particularly clover, that it is impracticable for any man on a farm to raise seed absolutely free from weed seed. The farmers of Indiana produce a good deal of clover seed.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who made such an able argument in favor of this provision, admitted that the bill he reported prohibiting the adulteration of seed confesses that the commercial standard of purity should not be above 98 per cent. This bill does not provide even that. The Department of Agriculture has the right to say that if one-tenth of 1 per cent is weed seed the whole bulk can be declared to be adulterated; that it may be denounced as misbranded, and that the Secretary may publish to the world that an individual or dealer that sells that kind of seed is guilty of fraud. That illustrates the force of my objection. I want Congress to say that in the law. I want Congress to fix the standard, and to make it a practical standard. I am not charging the Department of Agriculture with having abused this power. It may have been beneficently and wisely exercised, but I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is the duty of a legislative body to surround all laws with reasonable limitations and safeguards, so as to prevent their abuse in the hands of an unwise administrator—a corrupt administrator, if you please. If there should be an improper administration of this law and criticism should arise, against whom would it be directed? First, perhaps, against the Department of Agriculture, and then against Congress for not having surrounded the power with such safeguards as might have prevented the abuse. That is the point I am undertaking to impress upon the House in the enactment of this legislation. I believe the States most generally do have laws preventing fraud. I believe they ought all to have laws preventing adulteration and misbranding. I am not defending frauds in the seed business or any other kind of business, but I am to some extent not exactly the champion, but the advocate of intelligent and safe methods in enacting legislation that affects the rights and the property of the people of the country.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I want to ask if under this provision a man's name might not be published and his business ruined, even though he had acted innocently and without knowledge that the seeds he sold were adulterated or misbranded?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Most certainly, and there is a great amount of discretionary power contained in every agricultural appropriation bill, and I think necessarily; but where it affects the reputation and the business standing and the property and the liberty of the citizen, then reasonable safeguards ought to be adopted.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. MANN. Considering the circumstances and the value of this provision, which has been generally admitted throughout the country in the past, will not the gentleman be willing to withdraw his point of order and then help me soon to get up my bill in the House, where the matter will be settled, and this provision can then go out of the bill hereafter?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman is perhaps not exactly a mind reader; he may be under the influence of that mental force that is called telepathy. I was intending to conclude my brief remarks with that kind of a statement, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. The radiations from the gentleman's mind permeate everywhere. They even got through my thick skull. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I thank the gentleman for the implied compliment. Mr. Chairman, I think this discussion is not useless if it serves to call the attention of the Department of Agriculture, and I hope it will, to the criticisms made of the bill, so as to secure a more careful administration of it. I hope, in the course of the years, that legislation of this character will be better safeguarded; and in the hope that we will have a more rational and intelligent and comprehensive law upon this general subject within a short time, I now withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a standard for the different grades of cotton, calling to his assistance for that purpose expert cotton classifiers, by fixing a standard of middling cotton, and, using the same as a basis, establishing a standard of nine different grades, to be designated middling fair, strict good middling, good middling, strict middling, middling, strict low middling, low middling, strict good ordinary, and good ordinary, which shall be the official standard of cotton classifications. And the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to prepare in practical form the standard of said grades and furnish the same upon request to any person, the cost thereof to be paid, when delivered, by the person requesting the same, and certified under the signature of the said Secretary and the seal of his Department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I am thoroughly familiar with this item in the bill. Just before the adjournment of the last session of the Fifty-ninth Congress I introduced a bill providing for the standardization of cotton classification. I did so for the purpose of provoking during the recess of Congress a discussion of the merits of the proposition by all parties at interest—the consumer, the producer, and others interested in the cotton trade. At the beginning of this session of Congress, on December 5, 1907, I reintroduced substantially the same measure (H. R. 65), and subsequently, on the 6th day of January, 1908, I introduced H. R. 11839, being the same as H. R. 65, with six lines added thereto, and with the exception of these lines last added the item in this bill conforms substantially to the provisions of the bill as introduced by me on December 5 of last year. This is the last bill introduced:

A bill directing the fixing of a standard of cotton classification.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, directed to fix a standard for the different grades of cotton (calling to his assistance for that purpose three expert cotton classifiers), and in doing so he shall first fix a standard of middling cotton and, using same as the basis, shall proceed to fix a standard for four grades of cotton above said basis and four grades of cotton below said basis, giving careful consideration alike to the interests of the producers and spinners of cotton. When said standard has been fixed by said Secretary of Agriculture of the nine different grades of cotton as herein provided, to be designated middling fair, strict good middling, good middling, strict middling, middling, strict low middling, low middling, strict good ordinary, and good ordinary, same shall be, and is hereby, declared the official standard of cotton classification. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to prepare, in the most practical form, said standard of cotton, and on request shall furnish same to any farmer's institute, union, or association, or to any cotton spinners' association, or to any agricultural school or college, or to any cotton exchange dealing in bona fide sales of cotton for future delivery, in each instance the cost for furnishing said standard to be paid by the institute, union, association, or exchange requesting same, when delivered by said Secretary, certified under his signature and the seal of his Department. The Secretary of Agriculture, after said standard of cotton has been prepared, shall, upon request of cotton producers at any cotton market center, appoint an expert cotton classifier, who shall class any lot of cotton submitted for that purpose, and shall receive therefor a fee of 5 cents per bale, to be paid by the party requesting said classification.

Since the introduction of the bill the first time, I have received hundreds of letters from men in all lines of the cotton trade about the bill and yet I beg to assure the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that I have heard no opposition to the purpose sought to be accomplished by the bill from any person, regardless of the line of cotton industry in which he might be engaged. Mr. Chairman, the end sought to be accomplished by my bill, the provisions of this paragraph being excerpts therefrom, has long been desired by the thoughtful men engaged in the cotton trade.

The advantages of uniformity of cotton standards has been recognized, and how it was to be brought about has engaged the attention and thought of interested parties for many years.

It needs no argument to prove that it would be beneficial to the trade, both consumers and producers of cotton, if cotton which classes as "middling" cotton at one market center in the United States should mean the same thing, should be of the same character, and should be so recognized and accepted at every other market center in our country.

It is an historic fact that nearly thirty years ago at a convention held at St. Louis, Mo., where representatives of the cotton interests had assembled, it was decided that it was very important and desirable that the standards of cotton of all the markets should agree. Subsequently experts were appointed for the purpose of carrying into effect this determination. These experts assembled in New York for the purpose of preparing a standard of the different grades of cotton. Standards were made, and types of same were furnished to the various parties at interest, but for some unknown reason the standards so determined upon and prepared were not adopted by the trade. Why, no one has ever known. This information I state upon the authority of Mr. Henry G. Hester, the very capable superintendent of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange.

In a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, speaking of the desirability of a uniform standard of cotton classification, Mr. Hester, who is one of the world's greatest cotton experts, used this emphatic language:

This I do know: Every fair and impartial man interested in or connected with the cotton trade—planter, merchant, broker, exporter, spinner, or mill man—agrees that uniform classification of American cotton the world over is desirable and would result to the advantage of all concerned.

Again, speaking on the same line, he says:

We need uniform classification all the world over, and why it has not been secured is one of the existing anomalies.

In a letter to Chairman Scott, the president of the New Orleans Exchange, Mr. W. B. Thompson had this to say on the subject:

I am in receipt of your favor of the 10th instant inclosing H. R. 11839, a bill by Mr. BURLESON of Texas, providing for an official standard of cotton classification, requesting my opinion thereof and inviting any suggestion I might wish to make. I beg to thank you for your consideration and to say in reply that I am of the opinion that an official standard will be beneficial, and I commend the bill. The provisions of the bill seem to cover the subject thoroughly, and I have therefore no suggestions to offer. The proposed standard will simplify the problem of classification in so far as the markets of the United States are concerned, and to that extent will be beneficial. An international standard would solve the problem entirely. This conclusion, however, can not be reached except by agreement, but I believe if properly urged such an agreement is possible.

Mr. Chairman, I am confident, and I base my opinion upon statements made to me by leading cotton experts in this country, that if we can intelligently provide a standard of cotton classification which is accepted by the trade throughout America that other countries interested in American cotton will be forced to its adoption.

As bearing on the same subject the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture received the following letter from the secretary of the New York Exchange:

NEW YORK COTTON EXCHANGE,
New York, January 22, 1908.

Mr. CHARLES F. SCOTT,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I beg to call to your attention the following resolution adopted to-day by the board of managers of the New York Cotton Exchange:

Resolved, That the board of managers of the New York Cotton Exchange approve of the principle of bill 65 as presented to them on December 5.

Resolved also, That the board disapprove of the addition to bill No. 65 as presented in bill 11839, consisting of the last six lines, as follows:

" * * * The Secretary of Agriculture, after said standard of cotton has been prepared, shall, upon request of cotton producers at any cotton market center, appoint an expert cotton classifier, who shall class any lot of cotton submitted for that purpose, and shall receive therefor a fee of 5 cents per bale, to be paid by the party requesting said classification," for the reason that no one would be responsible for the grade as given by the classer having a Government certificate or for any loss arising from any error he might make in classing. At the present time each shipper is financially responsible for any error, and in addition in New York the New York Cotton Exchange has a fund which guarantees against and pays for any error which may be made by its classification committee.

Yours, respectfully, A. B. GWATHMEY, Jr., Secretary.

The last six lines, to which reference is made in this letter, are not embraced in the paragraph in this bill, but in connection therewith I desire to say that I believe it would be a distinct advantage if they could have been added. But, Mr. Chairman, in order that all objections might be removed against the taking of this very desirable step forward in the promotion of the interest of the cotton trade I have acquiesced in their elimination.

Mr. J. R. MacColl, the president of the Conference of Growers and Manufacturers of Cotton, held at Atlanta, Ga., last October, has this to say in response to a letter from Chairman SCOTT:

Replying to your favor of the 10th inst., I believe it would be advantageous to the cotton industry to have the Government establish nine grades of cotton, as suggested in Mr. Burleson's bill, provided the use of them is left entirely optional.

Mr. MacColl was recently the president of the New England Cotton Manufacturers' Association and is one of the largest and most intelligent cotton manufacturers in our country. On the same subject Mr. S. B. Tanner, one of the most progressive cotton spinners in the world, who is at present the president of the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association, had this to say by way of reply to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture:

THE AMERICAN COTTON MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION, N. C.,
January 16, 1908.

Hon. CHARLES F. SCOTT,
Chairman, Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your favor of the 10th, I beg to say that I believe an official standard of cotton classification would be welcomed by the cotton manufacturers and the entire cotton trade, as it would afford a perfectly satisfactory means of settling disputes in regard to shipments or deliveries of cotton.

Yours, truly, S. B. TANNER, President.

The producers of cotton in their organizations, and to me by letter in numerous individual cases, have given their cordial approval of the bill, expressing the earnest hope that it might become law. Thus you see, Mr. Chairman, the farmers who grow cotton, the manufacturers who consume cotton, and even the speculating element have all considered this proposition, and, marvelous to say, for once are all in accord and all join in giving it thorough approval.

Now let us consider for a moment what good will result from the adoption of a uniform standard of cotton classification. In the first place, it will do away with the difference which now undoubtedly exists in the grades of cotton at the different cotton market centers in the South. To-day "middling cotton" may mean one thing in Atlanta and an entirely different thing at Savannah, only a few miles removed. As a matter of fact, the different buyers of cotton have different standards for the different grades of cotton.

In fact these differences in the grades of cotton are so marked, or I should say the difference is so material, that frequently market quotations are seven-eighths of a cent or 1 cent different for the same grade of cotton in places only a few miles removed from each other. If we can have an item of this kind continued in this bill and effect an intelligent standardization of cotton, there will be uniformity brought about, and not alone uniformity of grade but also uniformity in price for the same grade of cotton throughout the cotton region, allowing always, of course, for cost of transportation. It will tend to simplify the situation. It will enable the manufacturer to understand, when he sees a quotation of "middling" cotton, spot, at Atlanta, that substantially, allowance for freight carriage being made, the same quotation will exist at Galveston or Savannah, whereas now he is frequently confused by reason of the fact that at one point middling cotton may be quoted at 10¼ cents and only a hundred miles away from there so-called middling cotton may be quoted at 10⅞ or 11 cents a pound. Furthermore, there may be, and in fact is, one standard of cotton used in the New York Cotton Exchange, where cotton is speculated in, and an entirely different standard for the same grades of cotton used in the New Orleans Cotton Exchange.

Mr. Chairman, I have had extensive correspondence with a large number of persons about the bill from which the provisions of this item were taken. I have corresponded, and the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture has corresponded with the presidents and superintendents of the different cotton exchanges; with the presidents of the cotton manufacturing establishments North and South, and again I assure the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that there has been a uniform expression of approval from all these sources for a reform of the character which this paragraph provides. Now, for the information of my distinguished friend from New York, I want to read a letter from the superintendent of the New York Cotton Exchange, a gentleman who has been connected with that exchange for nearly forty years, a man thoroughly familiar with every line of the cotton industry.

I have read from other letters which the chairman has received, but I select this letter and emphasize it because it clearly and succinctly states the good ends we seek to accomplish by the embodiment of the item in the bill to which the gentleman objects. The letter is addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture:

NEW YORK COTTON EXCHANGE,
New York, January 14, 1908.

Hon. CHARLES F. SCOTT,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 10th instant is received, inclosing H. R. 11839, a bill introduced by Hon. A. S. Burleson, of Texas, providing for an official standard of cotton classification and asking my opinion thereon.

I am very strongly in favor of a uniform standard of classification for cotton throughout the United States. At present there is a woeful lack of uniformity, owing to the variety of standards in use at the several port and interior markets of the South. This lack of uniformity is confusing in that it produces irregularity in the prices prevailing at these markets, the same grade being quoted frequently as much as one cent per pound lower at some markets than at others. This irregularity is a source of annoyance to sellers and to buyers alike and is the occasion for frequent arbitrations to determine the exact classification. It is also a fact that buyers for both foreign and domestic account have their own standards, which standards are used as a basis for their purchases.

In connection with that statement about "frequent arbitrations" I desire to state that I have every assurance from those interested as consumers of cotton that they are heartily in favor of this step in order to escape these contentions which are constantly arising. When I first drew this bill it was submitted to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING], who joined with me in its introduction. His name was signed to the bill which was introduced and about which this letter was written, but for some reason the parliamentary clerk struck off the name of Mr. Lovering and it was not continued on the bill. If this bill can go through, these frequent arbitrations to settle differences, these various recurring frictions, these controversies which are now constantly arising between the buyer and the seller will, in a large measure, be prevented or eliminated. The buyer will then be buying by the same standard the seller is using when he makes his sale and no room for difference will arise.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am not familiar with the cotton grades, but are there nine grades of commercial cotton?

Mr. BURLESON. There are eleven grades of cotton, and have been on one of the exchanges about nineteen or twenty so-called half or quarter grades. I provide for nine here, because the highest grade of cotton is "fair," and I will here state that I never saw a bale of "fair" cotton in my life and it would be a totally useless expense to standardize it. The lowest grade of cotton is "Ordinary," a nonspinable grade, and for this reason was not embraced within the bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The designation of the various grades in the bill are the commercial designation of those grades, are they?

Mr. BURLESON. It is the same designation that has long been in use by all persons engaged in the cotton trade throughout the world. Now, Mr. Chairman, if we can have a provision of this kind continued in the bill it is confidently believed that many of these controversies that arise between the buyers of cotton and the sellers of cotton can be avoided. Now I read further from Mr. King's letter:

As a confirmation of the variety of prices resulting from a lack of uniformity in grades, I give you the official price for the grade of middling cotton yesterday at the several markets:

Ports—
Galveston	11⅜
New Orleans	11⅜
Mobile	11⅛
Savannah	10¾
Charleston	10⅞
Norfolk	11⅛
Interiors—
Houston	11⅛
Little Rock	11⅜
Memphis	11⅜
St. Louis	11⅜

This shows a variation of ⅝ cent per pound between the lowest and the highest markets, or $437.50 per hundred bales. Of course, the grades not being uniform, this money difference does not exist.

Mr. Chairman, of course it does not exist—but by market quotations it apparently does—and this creates great confusion. If the same standard for middling cotton was used at all points it would undoubtedly bring the price at the different markets for the same grade of cotton into unison—the one with the other. In fact, then the market quotation for a given grade of spot cotton would be uniform throughout all the market centers, due allowance being made, of course, for cost of transportation from each market point.

He further says in his letter:

The effect of the adoption of this measure will be helpful to the entire cotton trade of this country.

It will do away with the irregularity between the grades at present existing.

Will put all cotton markets in unison with each other.

Will largely do away with the existing difference between the price of contracts and the price of middling cotton.

Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the superintendent of the New York Exchange that the standardization of the different grades of cotton will do away with the existing differences between the price for futures fixed in New York and the market price of spot cotton. I think these marked differences are occasioned by certain arbitrary rules fixed by the exchange, but this I will discuss at some future time. The adoption of a standard under the provisions of this item might result in forcing the disposal of a lot of very low-grade cotton, now undoubtedly held in the warehouses in New York for the purposes of tender on future contracts. If so, it would remove one of the causes which in my opinion contributes to the depression of the price of futures below spot cotton, but one very potent factor of depression, the arbitrary fixing of difference in value between the different grades, to remain regardless of the commercial value thereof, will not be effected by any action that could be taken under this paragraph. This, in my opinion, is the source from which this difference principally arises.

Mr. King then, in conclusion, says:

Will enable growers to familiarize themselves with the standard grades and obtain the market value for their cotton.

Will result in a uniform contract on all cotton exchanges.

Yours, truly,

WM. V. KING.

Mr. Chairman, I hope it may result in a uniform contract on the two exchanges. This the members of these two institutions could accomplish by agreement now whether this item is retained or not. They will enter into such agreement if it is to their mutual benefit, otherwise not.

Undoubtedly if the uniform standard can be brought about it will be to the great benefit of the cotton grower. It will, as Mr. King says, enable the farmer to familiarize himself with the grade of his cotton before he offers it for sale.

As it now is the producer of cotton in nine cases out of ten is in absolute ignorance of the particular grade of cotton that he carries to market, and frequently he is victimized by the deception practiced by the cotton buyer who offering him a particular price for his cotton upon a middling basis and having bought it, when he comes to pay for it classes it a grade lower than it actually is.

The farmer can not protect himself from imposition now, but it will be a simple matter, easy to do, when he has provided himself with the means of classing his own cotton. When the standard has been fixed, the Secretary of Agriculture, for three or four dollars, will furnish the types of the nine grades of cotton to anyone who will pay the price thereof. The farmer may not be able to carry in his memory the characteristics of a particular grade of cotton and the difference between the characteristics of the different grades, but he undoubtedly can, when he has the different types in hand, take them and by placing them beside samples of his own cotton determine exactly the grade of each bale. This I confidently believe will be worth hundreds of thousands of dollars to the cotton producer each year.

With this paragraph continued in this bill, for a mere trifle, the Secretary of Agriculture can furnish to any cotton farmer who will pay its cost the official standard of the different grades of cotton, and as was suggested on the floor the other day, any farmer who brings his cotton to the market can take his standard, and find it easier to determine the particular grade of each bale of cotton than it would be to match a piece of ribbon.

This standard of grades of cotton can be secured and kept at the farmers' warehouse, where he stores his cotton, and every farmer can know exactly what his cotton is, whether it is "middling"—above or below—he can see for himself, by comparing the sample of his own cotton with the various types making up the standard, just what grade his own cotton is, and thus arming himself with the information as to its true value, can protect himself against imposition when he offers to make sale of it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I feel that the importance of the benefits that come from this provision is such that the point of order ought not to be insisted upon, especially when every interest connected with cotton, in fact all the diverse interests in cotton, are united in its support. The manufacturer, the consumer of cotton, is for it; the producer, the grower of cotton, is for it, and the speculative element is in favor of it. There is no difference of opinion anywhere as to the merit of the proposition. This is the one matter of legislation relating to cotton upon which the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Lovering, and I are in thorough accord. The cost to the Government is to be insignificant because the cost of the standard is to be paid by those asking for it. The paragraph was embodied in this bill without any increase of the aggregate appropriation provided for under this particular bureau. It is going to add but little to future appropriation bills, because under the terms of the item every standard which is provided must be paid for by the person securing it at its actual cost to the Government. I do earnestly hope, in view of the reasons I have now stated, that the gentleman from New York will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. Chairman, one word further. I notice that after the superintendent of the cotton exchange had written the letter which I have read, he attached to it a memorandum addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, in which he said:

NEW YORK, January 14, 1908.

DEAR SIR: If necessary, I will appear before your committee and supply any further information required on behalf of this excellent bill. Only give me a few days' notice in advance.

Yours, etc., WM. V. KING.

Hon. C. F. SCOTT, Chairman, etc.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I have fully explained the item in the bill against which the point of order has been raised is in substantial conformity with the provisions of that bill as introduced by me, I hope that the gentleman from New York will not make the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] has said with respect to this very important provision in the bill, I think it not out of place for me to submit a few statements for the further information of the House, for I violate no committee secret when I call attention to the fact that the provision is in the bill upon my motion and at my insistence in the committee. The amendment is the gist of a bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] looking to the standardizing of cotton grading. The provision does not go quite as far as might be wished, but it is all that it was thought the committee would allow at this time. It is the first step in the right direction, and if its operation proves satisfactory and beneficial, as I have every reason to believe it will, I am confident further legislation will be had which, in effect, will compel the adoption of the official standard, both by the cotton trade and the two great cotton exchanges, and which will provide suitable penalties for the violation of the provisions of this amendment. The proposition as it now stands carries no penalty for the violation of its provisions, but it is my belief that in a measure it will be self-enforcing. For example, if in a market there are several cotton buyers catering to the cotton trade, the fact that one buyer grades according to the official standard made by the Department of Agriculture will so strongly appeal to the farmer—the seller—that other buyers will be forced in self-defense to use the standard, and to this extent the provision will be self-enforcing, in the smaller markets at least.

As the trade now stands nearly every firm doing a cotton business has its individual definition and idea of grades. The New York Cotton Exchange is now using some thirty-odd different grades for delivery on contract, though after April 1 eighteen grades will be effective upon this exchange, and it has often happened that the market has been broken and prices of cotton forced down through the difference in definition of grades. The adoption of a national standard would go far in the direction of assuring a fair deal to both buyer and seller at the hands of the cotton exchange, and if the exchanges and big cotton firms refuse to adopt such a standard as is provided in this amendment compulsory legislation will become necessary.

In the cotton-growing States it is a common thing to find in little towns only a half dozen miles apart a difference in price for cotton, ranging from one-eighth to one-fourth a cent per pound, due to the difference in grading. Such a condition works to the great injury of the cotton producer, and the small buyer suffers a like injury when he comes to sell to the larger firms. This causes an endless confusion, which will be obviated to a great extent by the establishing of uniformity of grades throughout the country, so that the cotton buyer in Galveston, Tex., as well as the buyer in Columbia, S. C., may have an exact idea of what is meant by "strict middling," "good ordinary," "ordinary," and that the terms in the one place have a like meaning in the other, and, of course, this applies with more force to the smaller towns and dealers. But this is not the greatest benefit that is to accrue. The provision is educational in its character. It is intended to teach the farmer himself, the cotton grower, to know the meaning of the various grades, so that when he brings his bale of cotton into the market he may take the sample of it, compare it to the standard promulgated by the Department of Agriculture, and protect himself against any disposition on the part of a buyer to gouge him in the trade.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman how this standard is to be prepared.

Mr. LEVER. I shall be very glad to give that information to the gentleman, and I happen to have a statement prepared for me by the Department of Agriculture as to how this provision will work, and I take pleasure in reading it:

The Department now has in its employ a man who is thoroughly familiar with cotton grades and cotton marketing conditions. This man, with two others, selected to represent the cotton interests, will be employed for a period of about thirty days at the proper time of the year in examining the cotton at the principal markets, and selecting bales representing the different grades required by law. These bales will then be forwarded to some central point, probably Washington, where the committee above named will select proper samples representing the various grades and prepare a set of official standards which shall be approved and sealed under the seal of the Department. These will then be duplicated, as the demands require.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is, these standards will be made up of cotton?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; of the actual cotton.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Something like a sample?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; representing the different grades of cotton as they come into the markets; and then any individual, any farmer, any farmers' union or association, any agricultural college, any buyer, has the privilege of asking of the Department these samples, and the Department, upon the individual paying the small cost of making up the samples, will furnish him with them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to ask another question. Are these bales of cotton uniform in character—that is, the cotton in the bale?

Mr. LEVER. Usually so; yes, almost uniformly so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Well, suppose that the cotton does not correspond, that is, that one part of the bale will not correspond with some of these standards and the other part will.

Mr. LEVER. Of course the Department of Agriculture would get such bales as represent the different types, and the gentleman will find that there are very few bales of cotton where there is a difference in grades in the bale. That kind of cotton comes upon the market only in very small quantities in the close of the cotton season.

Mr. JONES of Washington. So no trouble would be anticipated from that source?

Mr. LEVER. No; I have no fears as to that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. They do have these samples in a good many parts of the country, as the gentleman states, and they come in and classify the cotton by the grades; but that is not official.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Now, Mr. Chairman, the whole intent of this provision is to bring the cotton producer and the cotton buyer—the cotton trade—to a recognition of the same standard of grading as a guide to all. The farmer may know from his own eyes by seeing the official standard whether he is getting a price for his cotton warranted by its grade. This he can not do at present. He is not familiar with the grade. He does not know whether his cotton is an "ordinary" or "good ordinary." He must take the word of the cotton buyer as to that, and to that extent he is at the mercy of the buyer, whose experience in grading gives him a great advantage in the trade. But when the farmer takes his own sample and matches it with the official standard in the office of the buyer, he will have little difficulty in reaching a conclusion as to whether he has "ordinary," which may be selling at one-half a cent a pound less, or "strict middling."

In other words, the adoption of this provision puts the farmer on terms of something like equality with the buyer when a trade is to be made, and if he does not get the prevailing price for his cotton, it will not be due to the fact that he is at a very great disadvantage with the buyer. By giving him these standards by which to compare his own cotton, I confidently believe that millions of dollars will be saved to the Southern cotton grower each year, and in addition to this I believe it will make him more careful in the types of cotton he plants, the manner in which he gathers it, gins it, and markets it, and thus work a great benefit to him in a collateral way.

It is fortunate for this proposition that everyone interested in the cotton trade is favorable to it—the manufacturer, the cotton exchanges, the buyers, and the farmers themselves, through their organizations, have spoken in no uncertain terms. I have here letters from the Farmers' Union of the South, which is perhaps the most thoroughly representative organization of the farmers, and also a number of letters from the officials of the Southern Cotton Association, and all expressing themselves in hearty accord with the end sought by this amendment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the gentleman not believe that this proposition will involve or lead to a General Government inspection of cotton?

Mr. LEVER. I most emphatically think not; and I doubt if the Representatives of the cotton States in Congress would agree to a proposition looking to a general Federal inspection of cotton.

Mr. BURLESON. There will be no occasion for it.

Mr. LEVER. As the gentleman suggests, there will be no occasion for it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me suggest this to the gentleman. There may be disputes respecting the grades to which cotton belongs, because I assume that it takes an expert to determine. There are qualities that will classify grades, length of fiber, or color, or something else—I do not know what—and samples will be sent continually to the Department at Washington for information until it will be found convenient to locate a Government expert with a cotton laboratory in every commercial cotton center in the United States, and it seems to me that that is a necessary result of this kind of legislation.

Mr. LEVER. With all deference to the judgment of the gentleman from Indiana, I do not anticipate any trouble along that line. Disputes may arise, but would adjust themselves without having to be referred to Washington.

Mr. MADDEN. There is a movement and provision in this bill seeking to establish an official standard of grains, and this official standard is proposed to be established in the various inspection ports of the States throughout the Union. Does the gentleman think that the establishment of that official standard of cotton grades as proposed in this bill will result in the creation of State inspection boards to grade the cotton up in accordance with the official standard created under this bill?

Mr. LEVER. That would be a mere matter of opinion; but, as a matter of fact, I do not think that the States would have anything to do with it at all.

Mr. BURLESON. In reply to that I will state that the States will have nothing to do with this proposition at all. It can not possibly have that effect.

Mr. LEVER. Not at all. I do not know whether there would be any objection to it, in fact it might be a most excellent idea to have the States create such boards as are suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, but this proposition does not anticipate that. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a most important proposition. It vitally affects one of the world's greatest crops. It is the confident belief of its friends that it will work a great benefit to the cotton trade. It establishes uniformity in grades. It brings about uniformity in prices throughout the country. It puts all cotton markets in unison as to grade and price, freight charges being considered; it makes a uniform contract for all cotton exchanges, and it will drive from the warehouses all low-grade cotton now used to depress prices and to aid speculation; it will help the manufacturer of raw cotton; it will aid the cotton buyers, small and large; but above all, it brings to the farmer, the cotton grower, the means by which he can get a just price for his product. It places him on more of an equality with the buyer, who at present has every advantage; it gives him a guide in the sale of his crop; it assures him a fair trade; it gives him the means of knowing the exact grade of his cotton, and to that extent puts him in position to demand the price corresponding to that grade. It means an undoubted benefit to the cotton farmer and will work a general good to mankind wherever this great product of the South is used. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask for a ruling. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request, as I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING] wishes to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING] for five minutes.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Chairman, I can not imagine anything but a good result will come from the passage of this measure. For a long time both the producer and the consumer have been at war with each other just on this very subject of standards, and for the Government to fix a standard for the grades of cotton will solve many perplexing questions. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] seemed to think that it would involve Government inspection. I think not. The basis of this classification will be simply this: Every broker or cotton merchant who buys or sells cotton will have a set of these samples, and the buyer and seller will decide all controversies by these samples. It never will be put up to the Department to decide a single question. All that is asked is that they shall furnish standards of the different grades of cotton. For a good many years individuals have sought to fix upon the cotton market a grading or classification of their own, some using letters and some using numbers, but they have always fallen back upon the old designation of "middling" standard, and starting with that and going above and below, usually from "fair" above to "low ordinary" below.

Now, that is all they will be asked to fix. Being a manufacturer, I should at once buy a set of those samples. Every broker would buy them, and I am under the impression that the ginners and the producers in the South would have them. It would have the effect to do away with a considerable amount of friction and to bring the consumer and the producer more nearly together in settling their disputes. I sincerely hope that this measure will be allowed to go through.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I doubt very much whether this provision will accomplish all that those who advocate it proclaim. There has been so much misunderstanding of the functions of exchanges in general, and of the Cotton Exchange in New York in particular, shown on this floor during this session, that when I found this provision in this bill it excited my suspicion at once. Careful examination of the provision, however, discloses that it will merely provide for a standardization of cotton through a governmental agency. If the producers of cotton in the country believe that a classification by the Government will be of benefit to them, while I have some doubt as to the propriety of the Government entering upon work of this character, I shall not interpose an objection that would prevent it. That it will, however, in any way harmonize or make uniform the prices of cotton in the various cotton markets is too preposterous to discuss. I need only call attention to the fact that various railroad and industrial stocks that are listed upon the various stock exchanges of the country vary in prices on the same day in different parts of the country.

The grade of the cotton is not the only thing that enters into the determination of the price of cotton in one part of the country or another. The question of supply in a locality, of the demand at that particular place, of special reports that may be available at one point more quickly than at another, and a thousand other elements all combine to make the price of cotton in the New York market vary from the price in the New Orleans or the Galveston or some other market.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the gentleman to say that it would have no good effect at all?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I did not say that.

Mr. LOVERING. I would say to the gentleman that it is not expected that it would correct all prices and put them all on a level at all places. There are so many things that enter into the price of cotton—the carriage and wear of it, and all sorts of things.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was speaking particularly in reference to the claim made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] that these variations of price in the different markets of the country would be eliminated if this standardization were adopted, and that prices would be uniform in the different markets. I say that is too preposterous to discuss.

Mr. LOVERING. The chief value attached to it is to enable them to settle disputes between buyers and sellers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am coming to that in a moment.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to one question? Are the nine different grades in this paragraph all of the grades now used in the cotton markets and on the cotton exchanges?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are not. But there is nothing in this provision that will prevent those who desire to buy and sell cotton to buy and sell upon any terms or under any contract upon which they may agree.

Mr. MANN. I understand, but still nearly all of the cotton is sold in cotton markets of some sort. Does the gentleman know what grades are omitted from this bill that are in use?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There were prior to the 1st of January of this year on the New York Exchange, if I am informed correctly, thirty-one grades.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman is mistaken. There are eleven grades of cotton, and the New York Exchange seeks to make more by providing for quarter and half grades.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was going to explain the half and quarter grades. But in all there were thirty-one.

Mr. BURLESON. Thirty, as I understand it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Thirty. On the 1st of January of this year the exchange eliminated what were known as "fully" and "barely" grades, so as to reduce the number of grades to about twenty.

Mr. MANN. A year ago, or such a matter, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported into this House a resolution for investigation by the Bureau of Corporations in reference to dealing on cotton exchanges.

That investigation has not yet progressed to the point of final report, and we are not informed—at least I am not, and the public are not—of the results of that investigation. I suppose the President has been informed orally by the Commissioner of Corporations. Does anybody know whether the investigation which has been made goes to the point of doing away with all but nine grades of cotton?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am informed that the investigation, so far as it affected exchanges, is practically complete; so far as it contemplated cotton growers and ginners and persons engaged on the other side of the controversy to the exchanges, it has not been begun.

Mr. MANN. Of course it is very important.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What the result of the investigation is I have not been informed.

Mr. BURLESON. With the permission of the gentleman from New York, I can answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois. Since the introduction of the resolution to investigate the New York Cotton Exchange——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman gives too much credit to the New York Cotton Exchange. I say it ordered that investigation, and the investigation was not confined to the New York Exchange.

Mr. BURLESON. The authorities in control of that institution have, for reasons satisfactory to them, taken steps to eliminate all save eighteen of their so-called "grades," by taking out a portion of the half grades and quarter grades, thereby reducing the number of such grades by twelve. There were thirty grades, I think, at the time the resolution of investigation was introduced by me. As a matter of fact, there are only eleven grades of cotton. The bill introduced by me and this item provides for all the grades of cotton that are dealt in by manufacturers of cotton. The two grades that I have left out and not mentioned in this item are "fair" and "ordinary." "Fair" is the highest grade of cotton; and whereas I was born in a cotton country and have been engaged in growing cotton all my life, I never saw a bale of "fair" cotton, and I doubt whether the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING], one of our largest consumers of cotton, ever saw a dozen bales of "fair" cotton during his long career as a manufacturer. It would be useless to provide for that grade under this item, as there is practically none of it. "Ordinary" cotton also is eliminated. "Ordinary" is an unspinnable grade of cotton. The grades that I mention, which I seek to standardize, are the grades in general use that have been generally bought by the trade by those names for many years, and those designations we retain in this bill. It would be a useless expense to provide for a standardization of the other two grades.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman permit this suggestion. It is not the purpose of this bill to fix or affect the price of cotton, but it is just like establishing weights and measures by the Government, to get a standard, so that everywhere when "good, ordinary" is spoken of, or "middling" cotton is spoken of, there will be a standard of comparison, and everybody will know what is meant. It will not mean one thing in one place and another thing in another place. The Government has established a standard of weights and measures. Until that was done there were different yardsticks. The Government has not said what was a bucket, and we do not know what a bucket is, but we have established the half bushel, the gallon, the quart. This simply gives the Government standard, so that in New Orleans, Savannah, Atlanta, New York, all will have the same standard, and while a certain article sells at 11½ for "middling," the Galveston price, say that it shall be 11½ at Houston, when a man goes to Houston he will find this "middling" does not mean the same there as it did at Galveston. I think the measure will certainly be a benefit to the spinner and the producer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], of course, misapprehends what I was saying. I did not contend that this provision will affect the price. I said that the statement of his colleague, that it would make the price uniform in the different markets, with due respect to him, was a preposterous proposition. I think also that the gentleman drew upon his imagination——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that I may have some more time for myself.

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman drew to a considerable extent upon his imagination when he said that it was as easy to match cotton as pieces of ribbon. If he meant it is easy to match cotton, that was a good simile. If he meant that it was not easy to match cotton, that it is difficult to match cotton, the gentleman has stated what is accurate. I have no doubt the gentleman has had the same experience that I have had. I have been given samples of ribbon at times to match, and my success has been so poor that I would not attempt to match cotton.

The fact is that these quarter and half grades were established upon the exchanges because the classifiers, men against whose integrity there has never been any complaint, have differed so radically as to whether cotton should be in one grade or in another grade, after elaborate discussion and investigations these various divisions were made to avoid contentions between parties to transactions. I do not wish to engage at this time in a discussion either as to the benefits or proper functions of exchanges, either cotton exchanges or grain exchanges, or other exchanges. I know that it is common in this House to hold up men engaged in business on the exchanges in the great commercial cities of the country as a class detrimental to the welfare of the country.

Anybody who has given any consideration at all to these exchanges and to their proper functions is well aware that if the cotton exchanges were abolished and the grain exchanges were abolished there would be complete disaster to the cotton and grain producers of the country. At some other time, after some more of the gentlemen interested on the "producing" side of these commodities have given expression to their views, I hope to take a little time to give an elementary course of instruction as to the purpose, value, necessity, and advantages of exchanges, particularly of the New York Cotton Exchange. I am sure that my friends from the Southern States will be so completely astonished to be informed of the good that the people in New York are doing and have been doing for the benefit of their States that they will keep silent hereafter upon this question.

Mr. Chairman, I have made some inquiries about this provision. Among the men engaged in the business of buying and selling cotton upon the exchanges there are what might be termed different factions. All do not agree as to just what the exchanges should do or the manner in which they should be conducted. But after inquiry of all the various interests that transact their business upon these exchanges, I have been unable to find that there is any serious opposition to this provision. So, in order to show our friends in the cotton-producing sections of the country that I am not hostile to the interests of the producer and in order to convince them that those who are marketing their crops year after year at an advantage to them desire to promote their interests, I shall not insist on the point of order to this provision. I shall be glad to do what I can to have it enacted into law, in the hope that it will allay the fears and silence the unreasonable criticisms that have been indulged in here from time to time about men whom I, with others from my State, have the distinguished honor to represent on this floor. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain, at such points as he may deem expedient, laboratories for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the nature, quality, and condition of any sample, parcel, or consignment of seed or grain, including rent and the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to report upon such samples, parcels, or consignments, from time to time, and the reports so made shall serve as a basis for the fixing of definite grades, such grades when so fixed to become the official standards for the grading of grains, and also for the issuance of certificates of inspection when requested by the consignor or consignee of any grain entering into foreign commerce.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against a portion of lines 16 and 17 of the paragraph, the words against which I reserve the point of order being the following:

Such grades when so fixed to become the official standards for the grading of grains.

I reserve the point of order at the suggestion of a member of the Committee on Agriculture. This language is new; it never was contained even in the agricultural appropriation bill before. There is no law authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to fix official standards for the grading of grain. It is new legislation. In my judgment, the authority contained in this paragraph to fix the official standards of grain will inevitably lead to Federal inspection of all grains produced for the markets. I do not see how it can be otherwise. It may be that Federal inspection would be a wise policy. I am not here to say that it would not. It may be that if a proper bill should be reported to the House providing for Federal inspection of grain under proper safeguards that it would receive my support. But this is an appropriation bill, and this phrase that I object to, which confers authority upon the Secretary of Agriculture to fix an official standard, contains no kind of limitation, no safeguards. It is a dangerous provision in the form in which it is now offered, and it ought not to be enacted without most thorough and careful consideration.

Now, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to grade grains and fix the official standards. Who is to determine whether a particular quantity of grains measures up to a particular standard? How can it be determined? It requires the services of an expert. I understand the Agricultural Department makes a chemical analysis of the grain. It determines, from the chemical contents, respecting the amount of moisture, and one thing and another, what particular grade a certain quantity of grain belongs to. In any dispute between the producer, the seller, and the buyer, respecting the matter of grade, resort must be had to an expert. A sample of the grain might be sent to Washington to be investigated or analyzed by a Government expert, and a report might be sent out to determine the particular dispute. In the course of time it would be found, much to the convenience of the country, to establish laboratories and Government experts in all the grain markets in the United States. I say I think this legislation must, of necessity, lead to General Government inspection if this provision remains in the bill. Inside of ten years, and probably inside of five years, in every city of any size in the grain-raising areas there will be Government experts, with Government laboratories, to inspect all grains that are brought to market.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I apprehend that the gentleman is aware that a very strenuous effort is being made in this Congress now to have the United States Government establish the inspection of grains. Hearings have been had in the Senate before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and before the same committee of the House; both sides have been presented, and it appears from these hearings that the great States from which grain is mainly exported, like Minnesota and Illinois, have very elaborate State inspection laws. This would be but a duplication of what is done by various States in the inspection and grading of grains.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That may be true, and it may be true that Federal inspection would be the best in the end.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not agree to that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But I will not argue that question now. The legislation, when this comes up, ought to go before the proper committee, be thoroughly investigated, and when it comes up for consideration in Congress there ought to be time and opportunity for its thorough and complete discussion.

Mr. BARTLETT. I merely made the suggestion to the gentleman as one reason why he should insist on his point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I thank the gentleman from Georgia for the suggestion, but I certainly feel that this provision can not safely be allowed to remain in the paragraph.

Mr. COCKS of New York. What is the proper committee, in the gentleman's judgment, to consider a subject of this kind?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think the Agricultural Committee is a proper committee. I hope I did not, in the course of my remarks, reflect on the ability or the competency of the great Committee on Agriculture. I meant when I said "the proper committee" the proper committee under the rules of the House. This may be an interstate question, and the Speaker, who assigns the bills, would assign anything relating to interstate commerce to that committee.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will permit me a correction, the Speaker does not assign all bills to the proper committee, because there is a contention that one bill has gone to the Judiciary Committee when it ought to have gone to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. [Laughter.]

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with my friend from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] altogether, although I confess I do partially. The gentleman, in the first place, was in error when he says that the Secretary of Agriculture or his experts make a chemical analysis of the grains. That is not true. They make a physical analysis of the sample of grain which comprises the moisture contents of the grain, the amount of damaged kernels there is in the sample, the amount of dirt and foreign matter, and its weight per 100 kernels or per bushel. That is the only analysis the Department makes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my friend from Indiana also says that if this clause is left in the paragraph it will be sure to lead to Federal inspection of grain. I am frank to say that if I really thought that was the case I would join him in an effort to cut it out. But I do not believe it is true.

Mr. Chairman, the truth is that throughout the United States in the grain-growing sections there is no uniformity of method of inspecting and grading our grain. Every grain terminal has its own standard and its own methods for grading the grain. There is no such thing as uniformity. Not only that, but there is a great deal of fraud being perpetrated by some of these terminals in their dealing with the producer.

To illustrate, I will take the State of Minnesota. It is not confined to Minnesota, but I mention this State because I have some data here which comes from the State inspector of grain. In that State they have a State inspection of grain, and these figures are submitted by the secretary of this grain association.

According to this report they find that the great elevator terminals have a habit of buying grain at a certain grade. Take corn as an illustration. Corn is graded at No. 2, No. 3, and No. 4, or as rejected or condemned.

Mr. HACKNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POLLARD. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HACKNEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has any doubt about this provision being subject to a point of order?

Mr. POLLARD. I have doubt.

Mr. HACKNEY. I want to say that if the gentleman from Indiana does not make the point of order I will make it. We have wasted two hours to-day on points of order that amounted to nothing.

Mr. POLLARD. I hope the gentleman will not do that. The gentleman is not any more interested in this bill than I am. I yielded to the gentleman from Missouri for a question, and not to make a point of order.

Mr. HACKNEY. I will ask the gentleman to discuss not the merits of the matter, but whether or not it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, have I the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. POLLARD. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] reserved the point of order, and I will address myself to the merits of the proposition. I do not care to take up the time of the House. I am a member of the committee; I was a member of the subcommittee that drafted the bill, and I do not believe I have used five minutes of the time of the House since we took up this bill. I think I am entitled to be heard on a proposition for which I was responsible for its coming into the bill, on its merits.

I want to continue, Mr. Chairman, along the lines I have begun. As I say, corn is graded as No. 2, No. 3, No. 4, or it is rejected. At certain of these grain terminals the elevator men sometimes have the habit of running the grain into their elevators, putting it into different bins—No. 2 into one bin, No. 3 into another, No. 4 into another, and so on. When that grain goes out into the cars, a car is placed at the foot of the elevator and two spouts are run into the car. One spout comes from a bin that has No. 2 corn in it and another spout comes from the bin having No. 3 corn. The corn is blended, and the result is when that corn is sold it is sold as No. 2 corn, and the farmer who sold his corn gets paid only for the No. 3 corn.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POLLARD. Yes; but I have very little time.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, we will get the gentleman more time. This is a very important subject. There are a great many people interested in this subject, and it ought to be fairly treated. Does the gentleman wish to convey to the House the information that corn inspected into an elevator as No. 2 is inspected out or loaded out in the shape of Nos. 2 and 4 and sold as No. 2?

Mr. POLLARD. That is sometimes done.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the gentleman any specific instance that he can cite.

Mr. POLLARD. I have some figures here which I will be glad to read to the gentleman which I think will answer his question. The article reads as follows——

Mr. MADDEN. Who was it written by?

Mr. POLLARD. It was written by H. S. Bolley, of the North Dakota State Agricultural College. Discussing the subject under consideration, and quoting from the State grain inspector, he says:

That such abuses exist is a matter of almost universal knowledge among our farmers, who have been systematically robbed, but in addition to the facts presented by our farmers and in corroboration thereof, I call to your attention the official report of the chief inspector of grain of the State of Minnesota, showing the total receipts and shipments of grain for the year ending August 31, 1901, from which I quote:

"No. 1 hard—receipts, 341,567 bushels; shipments, 1,000,434 bushels. More than three times as much No. 1 hard wheat was shipped out in those three years than was taken in.

"No. 1 northern—that is a very good grade of grain—receipts, 10,070,414 bushels; shipments, 16,900,917 bushels.

"No. 2 northern—receipts, 7,341,594; shipments, 3,978,000.

"No. 3 spring—receipts, 1,355,000 bushels; shipments, 444,000."

Then he carries it on down further, and it goes to show that in this instance there was a great quantity of grain received which was graded when it went into the elevator as No. 1 and No. 2, and when it was shipped out three times as much was shipped out as No. 1 as was received in. Now, what conclusion can the gentleman draw?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Where were these elevators located in which the grain was inspected and out of which it was shipped?

Mr. POLLARD. Minneapolis.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman has reference now to the shipments made by farmers into the elevators at Minneapolis?

Mr. POLLARD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Or into the elevators at the stations on the railroads?

Mr. POLLARD. These are the elevators at the grain terminal at Minneapolis. I could continue this to some extent——

Mr. McMORRAN. I assume in making this statement that the gentleman intends to be fair.

Mr. POLLARD. I certainly do.

Mr. McMORRAN. In making the statement of the amount of grain received and shipped out of these elevators, has the gentleman any record showing the amount of grain on hand when they commenced to receive the grain?

Mr. POLLARD. The statement here is complete for the grain handled in those three years.

Mr. McMORRAN. There is no elevator that I know of in the western country but what has more or less grain on hand at the opening of the season.

Mr. POLLARD. That is true. This statement is complete. It covers all the grain handled by these elevators during the period named.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman put these figures into his remarks?

Mr. POLLARD. I will.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield to me and allow me to make this statement, that from the Duluth elevators, for three months in 1906 there were received 201,267 bushels of No. 4 grade and none shipped of that grade. There was received 116,021 bushels of "no grade," and none were shipped of that grade. There were received 50,742 "rejected," and none was shipped of that grade.

Mr. POLLARD. I would rather the gentleman would get recognition——

Mr. McMORRAN. I want to say it is evident an attempt has been made here to show there is fraud practiced upon the farmers by the elevators at the terminals. You attempt to show that grades received as No. 4 and rejected never went out of the elevator as No. 4.

Mr. SCOTT. As such grades.

Mr. McMORRAN. What reason was there in your mind why it should go out as No. 4?

Mr. SCOTT. I have always supposed and the report from which I gathered it said it went out as a better grade.

Mr. McMORRAN. But if you are familiar with the grain business you must understand that when grain is graded as No. 4 it is inferior. Now, there is a possibility of improving that grade by spending a certain amount of labor upon it and making it a higher grade.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not mean to dispute with the gentleman if he states that is the fact.

Mr. McMORRAN. Would that be illegitimate?

Mr. SCOTT. Not at all.

Mr. McMORRAN. If the grade could be changed by cleaning the wheat, I can not see why that can not be legitimately done.

Mr. SCOTT. If that was done, but if they change it by mixing poorer with the better wheat I should think that would hardly be fair.

Mr. McMORRAN. If the gentleman is at all familiar with elevators, he knows—in every elevator in the country I am familiar with—when grain is received, by putting a certain amount of labor and machinery upon the grain it may be improved to a higher grade.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is that true of rejected wheat?

Mr. McMORRAN. I have seen rejected wheat graded No. 2. There was a lot of dirt and seed in it, and when the dirt and seed is cleaned out it can grade to a higher grade and——

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield to the gentleman to make a speech.

Mr. Chairman, I might continue the discussion along that line, but I think I have said enough to indicate clearly the point I had in my mind. Now, it shows one side of the question. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the question from another point of view. I have here a letter written by Mr. Robert A. Patterson, chairman of the European International Committee on American Grain Certificates. This letter was addressed to the President of the United States and it covers a very important matter and gives a very decided statement of this whole question. It says:

YOUR EXCELLENCY: I am instructed by the European International Committee on American Grain Certificates to communicate to you the following facts:

There has been for some years past a general consensus of opinion among European buyers of grain that the operation of the present system of certificating grain for export is increasingly unsatisfactory, and that whatever may be its merits for the purposes of domestic trading, it no longer gives to European buyers the confidence and protection which is necessary in a trade where the only guaranty for reliable quality and condition in exchange for buyers' money is a paper certificate. Formerly buyers, in buying from the United States of America, were able, as they still are in their dealings in grain with other exporting countries, to recover from shippers any damage they sustained owing to defects in quality or condition; but since the introduction of the certificating system this is no longer possible. Even after its introduction, indeed until comparatively recent times, it was seldom found that any serious abuses arose, and trusting to their belief in the reliability of the grading system, buyers were willing to continue trading with America on less favorable terms than they demanded elsewhere; but whether from the increase of individual competition, or, what is probably more important, the rivalry between the other ports, and their smaller and more recently established competitors, there seems little doubt but that the standard of grading has been lowered, either temporarily, or in some cases permanently, in order to attract business from interior points, and we in Europe feel that the burden of such departure from the more reliable and stricter method in force formerly, has been borne chiefly by European importers, who, being far away, have no power of protecting themselves against errors, or worse, in the grading methods of recent years. The result is that American grain suffers as regards price when in competition with grain from other countries.

ROBERT A. PATTERSON,
Chairman European International Committee on American Grain Certificates.

The whole article is an elaboration of the poor condition of grain which reaches the foreign market, and it suggests that unless there is improvement in the quality of American grain that goes to the foreign ports there will result a discrimination to the extent of a boycott against American grain. Now, when the President had his attention called to this matter he sent one of the experts to Europe to investigate these conditions. He was over there for a long time. This report covers a period from November, 1906, to June, 1907, and is prepared by Mr. E. E. Boerner, special agent plant industry, grain standardization.

Now, this gentleman was sent over there, and he says that he inspected the corn in 88 steamers, from which 216 samples were taken and analyzed, and 66 other cargoes were reported upon by reliable persons and 54 samples submitted, making a total of 154 cargoes personally seen and reported upon and 270 samples analyzed. Now, there is a great deal of this report, all of which I should like to read, but the lack of time prevents me from doing that and I should——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. POLLARD. I should like to ask unanimous consent to continue my remarks for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to continue for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. POLLARD. I should like to ask unanimous consent, also, Mr. Chairman, to insert this whole matter in my remarks. I will only read a very small portion of it to bring it before the committee and the ideas I desire to get before them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

In order to continue the work done by the Bureau of Plant Industry last year of making a study and reporting on the condition of American export grain arriving at European ports, the writer spent from November 1, 1906, to June 6, 1907, in Great Britain, Ireland, and Continental Europe. Twenty-five of the principal ports were visited from one to sixteen times each. The corn in eighty-eight steamers was inspected, from which 216 samples were taken and analyzed. Sixty-six other cargoes were reported upon by reliable persons and 54 samples were submitted, making a total of 154 cargoes personally seen and reported upon, and 270 samples analyzed. The work was confined chiefly to corn, and especially those cargoes from Baltimore and New Orleans, samples of which had previously been examined for moisture weight per bushel, percentage of sound and broken grains, shriveled corn, damaged kernels, and the percentage of the various colors present. Samples of the cargoes were taken and a careful study was made of the condition of the grain in the various holds, as to the odor and the amount that was heating and hot, if any, and the cause of the damage ascertained as nearly as possible. Of the 1,434,432 bushels of the heating and hot corn which was seen and reported upon, only 708 bushels were thought to have been caused by sea water, all the rest was the result of the corn not being in proper condition at time of loading—that is, not dry enough or not clean enough to stand the voyage. One or more samples were taken from each hold of the boat. The samples were always taken from the best corn, or the least damaged corn in the hold. Sometimes when a sample of the cool corn was taken for the analysis, another sample of the hot corn, when present, was also taken for a moisture test. The samples taken were analyzed for damaged kernels, and the amount of dirt and foreign material and the percentage of moisture was determined.

In the table it will be seen that in nearly all cases the amount of dirt and foreign material found in the samples personally taken in Europe is much greater than in the samples of the same grain analyzed at Baltimore and New Orleans.

As to the damaged kernels the percentage also runs higher in the European analysis, because of the increased amount of heat-burned kernels in some cases, and in many cases, where the corn was cold, the increase in Europe was due to the moldy kernels which had become affected on the way over. This was particularly true of the Baltimore shipments when the corn contained over 18 per cent of moisture.

In comparing the moisture content of the corn coming from New Orleans it will be seen that the percentage of moisture found in Europe compares very favorably with that found in New Orleans.

I would say, in connection with that, that this particular sample of grain was inspected before it left New Orleans by an expert from the Department of Agriculture. When it reached the other side of the water the same grain was inspected again, showing that the moisture content of the grain in the two inspections was practically the same.

Very often the European test was a little lower, but the difference was so small that in many cases it may have been because the sample was not of exactly the same portion, and in others, where the grain was heating, the difference can undoubtedly be attributed to the loss of moisture of the hot corn, it being given off as steam. That hot corn does give off its moisture the writer has had ample evidence. During the discharge of some of the cargoes of hot corn the steam from the corn was escaping from the hatches in such volume as to obscure from vision the objects behind it.

It was also indicated by the number of complaints of the importers in every port visited, that they were losing money on the hot corn because of its short weight as well as the lower price they had to accept for it. It will also be noticed that the tabulated sheets show a larger proportion of heating, hot, and damaged corn in the New Orleans shipments examined than in those from Baltimore. While this was true, my observations were that the New Orleans corn, generally speaking, was not so seriously damaged when in a heating or hot condition as that from Baltimore or other Atlantic ports. The reason for this, I think, was that the New Orleans corn generally contained considerably less moisture.

Besides the corn included in the tabulated list many thousands of bushels were seen in storage at different points that was hot and damaged. Much of this was said to have been in fair condition at time of discharge, but began to heat soon after being landed. Besides these lots seen many more thousands of bushels were reported as landing in good condition, but on being transshipped became badly damaged before arriving at its destination, and as most of the corn arriving at the principal ports is transshipped, this is the basis of many serious complaints.

That the present method of dealing with the foreigner is having a detrimental effect upon the quantity of American grain consumed in Europe there can be no doubt. During the many talks the writer had with the importers in the twenty-five ports visited he was everywhere told that if the importers could have any assurance of the grain being what it is purported to be by the inspection certificates they could deal much more extensively in it than they do now; one order for a full cargo was reported to the writer as being canceled because of the damaged condition of two other cargoes which had arrived just previously. Most of the corn is imported to be used for animal feeding, much of it for distilling purposes, a considerable quantity for starch making, and some for human food, for all of which purposes, when dry and sound, the American corn is preferred to the harder corn of South America, southern Europe, and Asia.

During the past season considerable American corn was imported into northern France for seeding purposes, but when it arrived there the importers had germination tests made and found it to contain from 4 to 40 and 60 per cent sound and healthy kernels, and this was certified as "sail grade" corn. To give an idea of what effect grain arriving in Europe in a damaged condition is having upon the grain trade there, I quote part of the speech of Mr. O. Friedeberg, of Hamburg, which was made before the assembled representatives of the various corn trade and miller associations of Great Britain and continental Europe in London last November. Mr. Friedeberg, in part, said:

"The present inspection in the United States is very bad, and is getting worse and worse every year. Enormous losses have been made by German traders almost persistently, and this can not be permitted any longer."

Colonel Montgomery, of Liverpool, at the same meeting said, in part:

"I think at the very outset of the proceedings of this conference I may assume that there are two points upon which we are unanimously agreed: First, that the conditions under which business in grain has been conducted between Europe and the United States and Canada has been unsatisfactory—sometimes very unsatisfactory; and, second, that the present system is illogical in the extreme. The 'certificate final' terms are entirely one-sided. The buyer in Europe agrees to pay cash for the grain he buys and to raise no question as to the quality of it, provided an individual in America known as an inspector certifies it to be what the seller represents it to be. The inspector is thus constituted the arbitrator between the seller in the States and the receiver in Europe. He may or may not be competent; nevertheless he is constituted the sole judge of quality, and his decision is binding upon the buyer, without any recourse whatever."

That the American grain is arriving badly and the present system of dealing with the European grain trade is unsatisfactory is further evidenced by the numerous consular reports on the subject, and, from my own experience I feel that I can safely say that the consuls are very conservative in their reports. My experience has been that the European importer does not offer any serious objection to the grain unless it is quite badly out of condition, and much of the grain classified as sound in the tabulated statement would be classified as "No. 3," "No. 4," and "no grade" if it were to be reinspected in America, in consequence of the dampness, softness, or heating of the grain, or the odor present. The writer remembers some cases where the importers said that the corn in certain ships was in good condition and that they were satisfied with it, and upon going to the ship immediately afterwards the corn was heating throughout; it was not discolored, but it had a decided musty smell and did not run without being shoveled when it was being discharged.

In many other cases the importers reported the corn as not being damaged, but when examined by the writer it was found to be damp and soft and more or less affected with fresh green mold.

In Europe a board of trade certificate as to grade, age, and quality of grain is considered absolute and admits of no equivocation or misstatement of facts, and this is particularly true of American grain certificates, since some of them have printed on them the words "Official grain certificate," which conveys to their minds that the American inspection of grain is controlled by the Federal Government. A few cases of bad inspection within the past year, however, have shaken their faith in this belief. Take one case in point. On April 9, 1907, Mr. Shanahan wrote me that he had had a report that some corn had been loaded into the steamship Glenarm Head, at Port Arthur, Tex., in a heating condition. When the steamer arrived at Belfast the writer went there and saw it. All the corn which was loaded at Port Arthur was very badly damaged. The importers, however, had had advice of its condition at time of loading and refused to accept the draft, thus leaving the corn on the hands of the exporters. This shipment was widely discussed throughout Europe and had a strong tendency to create a feeling among the European dealers that all American exporters and inspectors were dishonest and unfair.

Besides corn, much wheat, barley, and oats are also arriving in Europe in an unsatisfactory condition, but for lack of time no analyses were made of any of the samples in Europe. A few steamships containing wheat were inspected, however, and samples obtained and forwarded to Washington for analysis.

A sample of the wheat in the Steamship Aldgate, which arrived at Hamburg January 5, 1907, contained 27.40 per cent of sound wheat, 35.10 per cent of defective wheat, and 37.50 per cent of actually damaged wheat. It had a very musty odor, also traces of rye, oats, weevil-cut grains, and dead weevil. There was said to have been 72,000 bushels in the cargo; all of it was hot. This was certified "No. 2 hard winter wheat, new crop." Galveston inspection, November 12, 1906.

A sample from the Steamship Inchkeith at Leith, Scotland, January 18, 1907, showed 33.58 per cent of sound wheat, 26.62 per cent of defective wheat, and 42.80 per cent of damaged wheat. This wheat was very musty and contained traces of durum wheat, hard spring wheat, white winter wheat, oats, and rye. There were said to have been 88,000 bushels in this cargo. This wheat was certified "No. 2 hard winter wheat, new crop." Galveston inspection dated November 28, 1906.

The wheat in the steamship Mascocoma was seen discharging in Rotterdam, May 18, 1907. There were 120,000 bushels in this cargo, and all of it was hot and damaged. A sample of this wheat was taken by Mr. Shanahan April 15, 1907, as it was being loaded at Port Arthur, Tex. This sample tested 9 per cent of sound wheat, 58.50 per cent of defective wheat, and 32 per cent of damaged wheat. This sample had a musty and heat-burned odor. There was 2 per cent of rye and a trace of corn, and it was very smutty. This was certified as "No. 2 hard winter wheat," Port Arthur inspection.

Detailed analyses of samples secured from cargoes arriving in Europe from the Gulf and Atlantic ports are given in the tables below; also reports on the condition at the time of discharge of the corn of some of the cargoes, samples of which had previously been analyzed at Baltimore and New Orleans, but which cargoes were not personally seen by the writer. The reports of the samples of the corn coming from Baltimore and New Orleans are each separated under their respective headings, while those from the other ports will be found under the heading "Miscellaneous shipments." The tables are further divided so as to group all the samples of each grade separately. Under the heading "Sample No." are the sample numbers of European reports.

This is from E. G. Boerner, a special agent of the Department of Agriculture, who was sent abroad to investigate the condition of American grain when it reaches its destination in foreign ports.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there anybody who can guarantee grain sent across the ocean aboard a ship to any port——

Mr. POLLARD. That is the meat of the whole cocoanut——

Mr. MADDEN. I simply wanted to know if there is anybody who could guarantee that grain leaving an American port would be found to be absolutely perfect in any port, and whether the inspection standard fixed by the Federal Government under this proposed law would guarantee the perfection of the grain when it reached Liverpool or London?

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad the gentleman asked that question, because it brings the real point at issue directly before the committee. The facts are, Mr. Chairman, if grain, no matter whether it is wheat or corn or rye or oats or any other kind of grain, if it has no more moisture contents than it should have when it goes into the hold of a steamer, will reach the port of destination in prime condition, as has been demonstrated from time to time where the grain has been analyzed for moisture contents.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for one moment?

Mr. POLLARD. Just for a question.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there any way by which the gentleman can guarantee that the moisture will be taken out of the grain if this standard of grain is to be fixed by the Government?

Mr. POLLARD. No, sir; there is not. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is unquestionably true. The object of this clause in this bill is to do this. There is no uniform method for grading grain to-day, and it is also true that the grain exchanges of the country, the grain exchange of the State of Indiana, the grain exchange in Kansas City, and the exchanges of various other large commercial centers, are writing to the Department of Agriculture, asking them to fix a standard so that there will be a uniformity, and that they will know when they start a shipment of grain abroad it will not have too much moisture in it.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman says there is nothing the Government could do to take the water out of the grain?

Mr. POLLARD. I did not understand the gentleman's question if I said that.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what he said.

Mr. POLLARD. There certainly are devices now on the market and in use by all the large grain terminals, where they can eliminate from grain the excessive moisture that is in it, and they can reduce that moisture content to a proper figure where it can be safely sent across the sea and arrive there in good condition.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to furnish to the committee any of these letters from grain exchanges, asking the General Government to fix the standards of grain?

Mr. POLLARD. Fixing the standards? Yes. My friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] must understand that I am not advocating a Government inspection of grain. That is a different proposition entirely. I am advocating the creation of a standard.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's statement was that the Department of Agriculture had letters from grain exchanges wanting the Government to make a standard for grain.

Mr. POLLARD. Here is a letter written to the Secretary of Agriculture by Mr. Henry L. ——

Mr. MANN. I do not want letters from individuals.

Mr. POLLARD. Who for several years has been director of the Grain Dealers' National Association and served a recent term as president.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has a letter from an individual. Of course he has the right to read it.

Mr. POLLARD. How can you get a communication from a grain exchange unless it comes from an individual? The exchange can not write a letter.

Mr. MANN. Gentlemen have different notions about that. The exchange can write a letter.

Mr. POLLARD. Through an individual.

Mr. MANN. Through an officer.

Mr. POLLARD. That is what I am reading.

Mr. MANN. Through an officer. The gentleman is not reading such a letter. He is reading an individual opinion of somebody who at some time has been an officer of something.

Mr. POLLARD. I can satisfy the gentleman on that point. The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY,
Washington, D. C., March 28, 1908.

Hon. E. M. POLLARD, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. POLLARD: In accordance with your request for information relating to the desire on the part of the grain interests of the country for more definite and uniform standards for grain grades, I submit herewith a copy of the "Grades of grain adopted by the Uniform Grade Congress held in Chicago, Ill., December 11, 12, and 13, 1906, under the auspices of the Grain Dealers' National Association." While the subject has been covered fully in this pamphlet for all classes of grain, I beg to call your attention especially to the grades for corn, beginning on page 7, for the reason that corn is the cereal with which most work has been done along this line. Corn has also shown a greater need of uniform usage and treatment in inspection and grading than any other class of grain. I also beg to call your attention to the resolutions adopted by that congress beginning on page 11. On pages 13 and 14 you will find a list of the delegates to this congress and the commercial bodies and grain inspection departments, both State and commercial, that were represented.

This congress was the result of an agitation covering a period of several previous years among the grain interests for more definite specifications for grain grades and the recognized need of such grades throughout the whole country. These delegates were representative grain men. The grades as promulgated by this congress were urged for adoption in all grain markets of the country east of the Rocky Mountains. Sufficient influence was brought to bear against their general use by those who profited most by the elasticity in the present system to nullify the work of the congress for the time being.

The influence of the work being carried on in the Department of Agriculture through the grain standardization investigations is beginning to be felt, and is tending toward a better understanding of the values in grains and a more honest and intelligent grading of them, and the possibility of smoothing out misunderstandings and trade jealousies, so far as they have a bearing on the grading of grain, looms large. Inquiries are being made of different grain markets by the producer and small shipper of grain in the country as to the proportion of the factors of value that should enter into the different grades, and while in most markets there is a tentative agreement among the members thereof as to what these factors and proportions should be, yet confidence has not yet advanced to the point where the authorities in any one market or group of markets feel that they can afford to fix definite grades, mainly from lack of confidence in competing markets. Such inquiries are also coming to this office, and I quote below some parts of letters that come from men high in the councils of the grain business, and which show the general trend of thought along this line.

Mr. Henry L. Goemann, who for several years has been a director of the Grain Dealers' National Association, and served a recent term as president, under date of December 13, 1907, writes as follows:

"I predict that it will be only a few years until the corn business is done on the basis of moisture percentage, and prices made accordingly. I do not think that any market can afford to ignore the grading of corn by moisture percentage, the point being what will be the proper per cent for the various grades. I will appreciate it very much if you will give me your views as to what you think the percentage ought to be for the grades of 2, 3, and 4 corn."

Under date of March 18, Mr. C. B. Murray, superintendent of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce and Merchants' Exchange, writes as follows:

"In our grain-inspection service we are introducing one of the moisture testers. Our inspectors desire to know what has been accepted or adopted in recognition of the percentage of moisture for different grades of grain, as, for instance, taking corn for No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, No. 4, the percentage for these distinctive grades, also what percentage is recognized as standard with reference to dirt and broken grains. Any information that you can furnish on these lines which will serve as a guide in our inspection work will be greatly appreciated."

Under date of March 27, 1907, the following was received from Kansas City, Mo.:

"We would like to have your advice in reference to kiln-dried corn for export. What should be the maximum per cent of moisture in kiln-dried corn to carry safely? We desire to dry some corn, and want it to be absolutely safe in its carrying qualities, and yet we do not want to dry it to a point where it would meal readily. Have you any experience in drying? Awaiting your early reply, we remain,

"Yours, very truly,

"HALL-BAKER GRAIN COMPANY."

These letters and the work of the Uniform Grade Congress show, I believe, that the grain interests generally are groping for and working toward something of a tangible nature in the shape of fixed and definite factors and percentages of factors upon which to base the grades of grain, and that if some central competent authority should fix those grades upon a rational and practicable basis they would be adopted without much question and serve to better conditions relating to grain inspection and grading in this country, to encourage the farmer to produce better grain and to take better care of it when it has been produced, and thereby raise the standard of our grain crops, while conditions as they exist to-day undoubtedly militate against such a desirable condition.

In this connection I also quote below extracts from a letter addressed to the honorable Secretary of Agriculture, under date of January 18, 1908, by Mr. J. M. Brafford, secretary of the Indiana Grain Dealers' Association, and which letter I can say without much fear of contradiction voices the sentiment of the majority of producers and country shippers of grain throughout a large part of the United States, in so far as they show a desire to bring about logical, stable, and uniform grades of grain in all markets.

"Resolved, That we, the members of the Indiana Grain Dealers' Association, now renew our devotion to the cause of uniform phraseology of rules and impartial inspection of grain, with the necessary legislation to accomplish the same.

"We further commend the action of the Grain Dealers' National Association in moving in the right direction in December, 1906, when it organized what was known as the 'Uniform Grades Congress.' We appreciate fully the splendid work of Secretary Courcier in compiling the information showing that over 300 different grades and classifications of grain were in force in twenty-four leading markets of the country, thus forcibly demonstrating the necessity for such revision of existing conditions as will bring about logical, stable, and uniform grades in all the markets of the country.

"Therefore, in view of the manifest disposition of many of our great markets to perpetuate existing conditions, thus depriving the producer and shippers of a voice in the determination of their rights and interests, and the service of an impartial arbiter, we appeal to the national association to continue its labors with Congress for such legislation as will put the supervision of grain inspection under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture and accomplish this important purpose."

The points at which grain-testing laboratories are at present established are Baltimore, New Orleans, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Duluth, and New York, and were so located in order to give the Department opportunity for study of the subject upon a basis of the greatest range in climatic and general conditions, and were established at those points upon application in each case from the commercial bodies by which the grain business is carried on. In order to carry out further the work that has been begun it is desired to establish additional grain-testing laboratories at Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, Buffalo, and Philadelphia. This will give the greatest range in general and varying conditions in which to study this important question. The commercial institutions in each of these markets have asked that laboratories be established at those points.

Very respectfully, JOHN D. SHANAHAN,
Crop Technologist, in Charge Grain Standardization.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. I ask that the time of the gentleman from Nebraska may be extended for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will say that I will have no objection to the gentleman continuing, unless it is the purpose of the gentleman from Kansas immediately after he stops to move to close debate on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Nebraska be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. In this connection the gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD certain documents. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. POLLARD. If the gentleman is going to insist upon the point of order, I do not care to take up the time of the House discussing the merits of the question further than to say this: All in the world this clause will do if it remains in the bill—and I was in hopes the gentleman would not insist upon his point of order—all it will do will simply be to authorize the Secretary to create a standard, fix a standard for the grading of corn, wheat, and other grains. It does not empower him to enforce it. There is nothing in the law that makes it mandatory to obey it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Nebraska is aware of the fact that under the existing law the Secretary of Agriculture does not have power to fix the standard—that all the report the gentleman read was to urge this House to give the Secretary that power?

Mr. POLLARD. I have not read to show that he had.

Mr. MANN. The report the gentleman read was not the law and does not give him the power.

Mr. POLLARD. I will agree that the Secretary has no power without Congress gives it to him.

Mr. MANN. But the existing law is not according to this paragraph of the bill. The gentleman talks of the paragraph as if it were in the law: "Such grades, when so fixed, to become official standards for the grading of grains." That is not the current law.

Mr. POLLARD. I understand that.

Mr. MANN. That is a very important distinction, I should say.

Mr. POLLARD. I want it understood that this is new matter.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to the fact that, eliminating the provision to the paragraph to which the point of order is directed, there is abundant authority in the Secretary to procure samples of grain, make his investigation and analyses, and report the results. These results shall be used as a basis for fixing a standard. He has already got that authority. What I object to is making the standard and fixing the official grain standard of the country.

Mr. MANN. Would not the gentleman from Indiana be satisfied to make the law as it now reads?

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. POLLARD. I can not yield to my friend; I want to make one observation, and then I shall close. I shall not ask the committee to indulge me further. My proposition is this: If this clause is permitted to remain in the bill, the Secretary of Agriculture will publish a standard, but there will be no authority lodged in his hands to enforce that standard and compel anybody to grade by that standard; and the result will be that the grain exchanges all over the country will come under it. Why? Simply because the moment a standard is created every grain exchange will want to have the reputation of grading its grain according to the official standard. They are all wanting that the Department shall indicate to them what basis they shall use in creating a standard, how much moisture contents there shall be in No. 2 or 3 wheat or corn. Now, my proposition is this: That if we put this into the bill the result will follow exactly as it is to-day in other commodities. No merchant will pretend to sell 34 inches of cloth for a yard. Thirty-six inches constitute the yard. I believe the result will be the same in this respect. You will have a standard, the same as your yardstick, and no grain dealer could afford to have his grain graded on any other basis except that recognized as the official; and if this measure is passed it will do more than anything else to prevent Federal inspection of grain.

And I am free to say that unless something of this kind is done, it will be only a very short time until there will be put through this House a law providing for Federal inspection of grains.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Believing that this provision will necessarily result in Federal inspection and believing that when the question of Federal inspection is taken up for consideration it ought to be accompanied and surrounded with such safeguards as will secure accuracy and trustworthiness, I intend to insist on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order for a minute?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois want?

Mr. MANN. I do not want to make terms with the gentleman after he has been given so much time, but I only want a minute.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will yield a moment to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not that power. The gentleman has the power to make his point of order, and I have the power to move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. This same matter was ruled out on a point of order last year.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas, chairman of the committee, desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SCOTT. I do not care to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] moves that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in fifteen minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, last year I raised a point of order upon the same language that has just been stricken out of the bill. The striking out of that language has in nowise affected the Department in making the investigation which it desires to make and which the country desires to have made. The only effect that I know of that it had anywhere was that when the Chicago Board of Trade, which believes in the investigation, asked to have one of these grain laboratories established at Chicago, they were told by some of the impudent and impertinent officials of that Department that there could be no laboratory established at Chicago because Mr. MANN had opposed the provision on the floor of the House. Of course that did not meet the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture; it did not meet the approval of Doctor Galloway, the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry; nor was it true. It was an impudent, impertinent, and false statement made by some man who ought to know better and who ought to be disciplined, though I have never followed up the matter any further than to call the attention of the Secretary of Agriculture to the matter and ask him if that was the view of the Department of Agriculture, and even if it had been the fact that I had opposed a certain measure, if it was the policy of the Department of Agriculture to attempt to discipline the Members of the House for expressing their views in the House. I received a very prompt response from the Department, stating that, in the first place, that was not the attitude of the Department, and, in the second place, that the criticism was entirely unjust, because the debate which was carried on on the floor, in which I took part, was not directed at all to the question which the Department was investigating.

Mr. SCOTT. It is hardly necessary, and yet I desire to say to the gentleman from Illinois and to the House that the statement he has just made is information which comes to members of the Agricultural Committee for the first time, and there is no member of the committee who would not fully agree with him in his condemnation of such action.

Mr. MANN. Without question the Department of Agriculture fully agrees with me. The Secretary of Agriculture fully agrees with me; the head of the Bureau of Plant Industry fully agrees with the proposition. Undoubtedly, if they had been able to locate the exact individual who made the statement, he would have been disciplined. Each one of them denied making the statement, although the officials of the Board of Trade of Chicago informed me that the statement had been made to them. That is neither here nor there.

That caused me to look up another subject, which we are now investigating in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I venture to say that the appropriation which is made for this purpose and the work which is now being carried on by the Bureau of Plant Industry in determining the moisture content of grain, and thereby helping to fix the standard of grain, is of inestimable value to the country.

There is a great controversy going on in the country as to whether the National Government or the local government shall fix the standard for grain. The local governments, the grain commissions, wherever located, the boards of trade, and the grain exchanges everywhere are extremely anxious that the Government shall proceed with its investigation and furnish the information which it is furnishing. But they do not desire the General Government at this time to undertake to fix the standards of grain, because it may be news to my agricultural friend from Nebraska that the standards of grain vary from year to year.

The standard of wheat this year may not be the standard two years from now, or a year from now. The wheat in different years, the corn in different years is of itself of different grades, and No. 2 wheat this year may not be No. 2 next year.

It is usual, in Minnesota for instance, to fix the standards of wheat at the beginning of the wheat season. In the fall of the year, when the wheat begins to come in, they fix the standard for the ensuing year, basing it on the actual conditions of wheat, and standard No. 2 wheat of one year may not be precisely the same as No. 2 wheat of the next year. It would be impracticable for the Government to fix these standards in this way. It is not impracticable to furnish information of great value to the country on the subject.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is only fair for some one to reply briefly to some of the statements that have been made by both the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. POLLARD] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT]. The gentleman from Nebraska states that the elevators at Minneapolis grade No. 2 and No. 4 corn into the elevator and grade the two combined out as No. 2 corn. He says that the farmers of South Dakota justly feel aggrieved at being, as they call it, swindled. I do not know what the character of the inspection is at Minneapolis, and therefore I can not deny the truth of the gentleman's statement, but I do know that the State from which I come has an inspection system that would not allow that character of inspection. The inspection system in Illinois provides that every particle of grain coming into the State, of every kind, shall be inspected by men of long years of wide experience. Each one of these inspectors becomes such after a number of years' service in minor capacities. Each one of the men acting as an inspector of grain can tell beyond question the grade of every kind of grain that comes into the market. Each inspector is required to give a bond of $100,000, and if he makes a mistake of grading the corn into an elevator and grading it out differently, the difference in the grade between going out and coming in is charged against the bond of the inspector. I know of no case where any such robbery as the gentleman from Nebraska has indicated ever occurred in the inspection of grain in Illinois. I believe that the standard of grain as inspected through the board of inspection in the State of Illinois has never been questioned anywhere.

I have no objection to some such law as this item provides for, for I believe that it would be infinitely better to have a standard fixed by the Federal Government upon which to base the inspection of a uniform kind than to have a haphazard inspection; but I do not wish the gentleman from Nebraska to leave the impression on the membership of this House that the inspection conducted in the State which I have, in part, the honor to represent is of the character and description given by him.

Mr. POLLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. POLLARD. I want to state that this statement I made ought to be considered as a general statement, and that I would not confine it to Minnesota. The statement is made as a simple illustration of what is done all over the country.

Mr. MADDEN. I take exception to the gentleman's statement.

Mr. POLLARD. That is the fact in the case.

Mr. MADDEN. I take exception to the statement so far as it relates to Illinois. I do not admit that the general statement made by the gentleman from Nebraska applies in any sense whatever to Illinois or to the men who are dealers in grain in that great State. The gentleman from Kansas said that a large quantity of grains of various grades were inspected into the various elevators in Duluth, and that none of those grades were shipped out. He left the impression that while there may have been other grades shipped out, none of these were shipped out. So it is fair to assume that the grain that was graded into the elevators still remains in the elevators.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman permit me to make a brief statement there?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. I did not make the statement which the gentleman has quoted on my own authority. It is part of a report of a committee of the North Dakota Bankers' Association, made by John L. Cabel, chairman, and published in the Fargo, N. Dak., Forum on Friday, November 23, 1906, and gives the receipts of all grades and shipments of all grades of wheat at Duluth. I read only the receipts and the shipments of the three lower grades, of which large quantities were received and none shipped out, merely to supplement the statement made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. POLLARD].

Mr. MANN. That matter was very fully explained before our committee, and I think very satisfactorily explained, to the utter discomfiture of the gentleman who made the statement.

Mr. SCOTT. I made it not on my own responsibility, because I do not know anything about it.

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman did not make the statement when he first made it as he now makes it. He simply made a bald statement that so many bushels of grain of various grades were shipped into the elevators and that no grain of these grades were shipped out, leaving the impression that other grades were shipped out, but he did not say so. Therefore the fair assumption must be that no grain of any grade was shipped out from the elevators referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEDE. Mr. Chairman, I was not on the floor when the statement was made by the gentleman from Kansas, and I know nothing about it, but I do know something about the published statement in reference to the elevators at Duluth. In that statement no reference was made to the grain consumed by the flour mills at the head of the Lakes. Therefore the statement is false. In many instances the grain comes in in a dirty condition and is cleaned, and perhaps it does go out by a little different grade, but if the farmers would get the dirt out of their grain they would be paid for the same grade as that which goes out. Making due allowance for the consumption of wheat in the flour mills, just as much wheat goes out of the elevators at Duluth of similar grade as comes in, and all statements to the contrary are false, I care not who may make the statement.

The Clerk read as follows:

For official traveling expenses; for telegraph and telephone service; for gas and electric current; for forage, ice, postage, and washing towels; for express and freight charges; for the purchase of chemicals, materials, office, field, and laboratory supplies, fertilizers, office fixtures, fuel, apparatus, machinery, tools, and other implements, and repairs to same, horses, vehicles, horseshoeing, and harness; for rent and repairs in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and for all other necessary expenses, $896,266.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by making the total $901,566.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment increasing the total appropriation for the general expenses of this bill $5,300 is made for the purpose of enabling the Department of Agriculture to investigate the diseases affecting rice in Southern States, and not only that, but to enable the Department of Agriculture to make investigations with a view of finding a rice resistant to certain diseases affecting that crop, and also to enable the Department of Agriculture to make investigation of the different varieties of rice grown in this country with a view of getting the best type, a type of rice that will produce a larger yield and be more suited for consumption. Mr. Chairman, ordinarily I would not offer this amendment, because the bill comes to the House with a unanimous report of the committee, but this matter has been called to my attention through a petition of the rice growers of South Carolina since the bill was reported to the House and after there was no opportunity given me to call this matter to the attention of the committee when the bill was in the committee. The amendment, if adopted by the House, will mean a great deal to the rice growers of South Carolina in enabling them to combat the great disease which threatens the rice industry of that State. Not only that, but it will enable the Department to carry on experiments in Louisiana and in Texas, and from the statement of the official in charge of this work it will enable the Department to carry on investigations with a view of introducing rice growing into the State of California and even into the State of Washington, where already the industry is beginning to take hold. It is a very small amount of money compared to the enormous magnitude of this great industry, for rice with us is one of our staple food crops. We have it on the table morning, noon, and night, at breakfast and at dinner, three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, and I sincerely trust that although the chairman of the committee is against me on this proposition—naturally so—the membership of the House will permit the proposition to go through in order that these investigations may be undertaken.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman designate the phraseology in the item that would permit of the investigation he suggests in his amendment?

Mr. LEVER. I will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the general authority carried in this Bureau for general expenses would cover that. I do not put my finger on it now. I think the language, "to investigate fruit, fruit trees, grain, tobacco, cotton," and so forth, gives full authority to do this work.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing in the item under consideration that suggests any such work as that carried by the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. That is very true, and I recognized the force of the criticism of the gentleman yesterday in respect to this weakness of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am very glad to hear a compliment from some member of the committee that my position was well taken.

Mr. LEVER. I do not say it was well taken, but I see some reason therefor.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, even the modified qualification I am willing to accept.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. He suggests an increase of this appropriation will enable them to make experiments in rice culture in California, Washington, and in Texas. There is nothing in the paragraph, as I understand it, limiting the experiments that are to be made in those three States.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to my friend from Mississippi that the Department of Agriculture will make investigations wherever they find it necessary, even in Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I just want to suggest to the gentleman that I have been endeavoring to have the Department make these experiments in the State of Mississippi, and I do not want the RECORD to show to the Secretary that it was the intention of the House that these investigations should be limited to the three States named.

Mr. LEVER. I presume, Mr. Chairman, if the chairman will permit me a second, that the gentleman from Mississippi has found the Department can not make these investigations because of a lack of funds.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I am sorry to say I have found that to be the fact.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to differ with my colleague on the committee, but the committee considered very carefully the amount of the fund that is to be placed at the disposal of the Department for the purposes designated under the Bureau of Plant Industry, and I am quite sure the amount carried in the bill is sufficient to meet all reasonable demands on that Bureau.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit? Can the gentleman designate what is the occasion for this increase in this item of some $300,000 over the amount appropriated last year for this Bureau's service? Last year, I believe, the amount carried was $584,780, and this year the item carries $896,266. It seems to me to be a tremendous increase in one year's appropriation.

Mr. SCOTT. That is very easily explained, and I did explain it, as a matter of fact, in my opening statement in bringing the bill upon the floor. Previous to this year we have carried a provision for continuing the boll-weevil work as an emergency item and have appropriated under that item $190,000 each year. A greater part of the work has been done under the Bureau of Plant Industry, that Bureau having expended last year $150,000. This year we believe that still more ought to be done under that Bureau, and so we have taken $20,000 from the amount of the boll-weevil fund which was last year expended by the Bureau of Entomology and added that to the amount available this year for the use of the Bureau of Plant Industry. That accounts for an increase of $170,000 in the first paragraph, only an apparent increase, as the gentleman will see. Another increase is of $10,000 for additional funds for the introduction of foreign seed and forage plants; so that the actual increase in this Bureau is about $80,000 instead of some $300,000, as it appears on the face of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. LEVER) there were—ayes 35, noes 53.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do this for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee how much the Secretary of Agriculture estimates would be necessary for the items included in this particular paragraph for official traveling expenses, and so forth?

Mr. SCOTT. There was no separate estimate submitted for that paragraph, or rather for the items included in that paragraph.

Mr. BONYNGE. What amount had the committee in mind in making this appropriation to be used for these purposes?

Mr. SCOTT. The committee made no specific appropriation, and could not have done so, as the gentleman I think very well understands, for these different items of expenditure.

Mr. BONYNGE. No; I understood the gentleman to say yesterday that the Secretary did make specific estimates for different projects, and if that be true and there have been some specific estimates for all these different projects, you must have added to these estimates, it seems to me, some special amount to cover these items included in this paragraph before you were able to make your appropriation for the grand total for these different subjects covered in the four preceding pages.

Mr. SCOTT. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Colorado that the estimates were sent down to the committee with a lump-sum appropriation covering all general expenses of the Bureau, exactly after the fashion shown in this bill.

There was an estimate, which is now on the desk before me, from the Bureau of the amounts the Bureau expects to expend in all the various projects, and in the committee room every item of these estimates was carefully scrutinized and examined into. The committee did not make a list of all those various items.

Mr. BONYNGE. How did you arrive at the total, then?

Mr. SCOTT. We arrived at the total by taking the total which the Secretary had submitted, and taking such action upon it as our judgment dictated, after having considered all the different items in the bill based upon previous expenditure.

Mr. BONYNGE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to be in the attitude of criticising the gentleman's committee as to the manner in which the bill has been prepared. I have never had any experience in the preparation of a general appropriation bill, but it does seem to me that if Congress is to retain control of these appropriations we ought to have specific information as to the amount appropriated for specific purposes, and with any items such as are covered in the particular paragraph under discussion it would have been easy to ascertain, judging from what the expenses have been in the past, how much will be required for the next year for these specific purposes, and that amount could be stated in this bill. That, I understand, to be the rule followed by the other committees in making their appropriations.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does he consider this a highly scientific service?

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is mistaken in thinking that other committees report specific sums for items like this.

Mr. SCOTT. It is obviously impossible to do it.

Mr. BONYNGE. Perhaps not for this specific purpose.

Mr. MANN. For this character of expenses.

Mr. BONYNGE. If the gentleman will permit me for one moment. We have four pages, commencing back at page 14, covering some 200 projects, and from page 14 down to page 18 there is no appropriation until you get to the end of the first paragraph on page 18. In all there are some 200 projects covered by the appropriation of $896,266. Now, it does seems to me that without unnecessary limitation, upon proper discretion on the part of the Secretary, that we could have more specific information as to how much of this large sum of $896,266 is to be used for some of these 200 different projects. As the matter stands, of course, it is not to be expected that the Secretary of Agriculture would, but he could, without violating any provision of this bill, appropriate all of the $896,266 for official traveling expenses, for telegraphing and telephone service, and so forth. That is not to be anticipated, but we ought not to pass legislation the language of which is capable of such a construction.

Mr. LAMB. May I just have a word right there?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, please let the oldest man in experience on this committee and the youngest in years just say this: There are seven hundred projects in this very Bureau we are now considering. To estimate by detail for each one of these projects would fill a book as large nearly as that one you have lying on your desk there.

It is impossible to do what you seem to think, my friend, ought to be done, and it is not done in any other committee that gets appropriations in this House. It is too large a matter to consider in a committee and put in this bill. We considered, as the chairman very well stated, each item carefully in making up these estimates. We have the estimates sent us by the head of this Department, Secretary Wilson, and we have gone over them carefully. It does seem to me it is hypercritical for these gentlemen here to take this time, for three or four days, criticising the action of this committee, when I tell you frankly and candidly, my friend, that it is the best considered and most conservative bill that has been presented to this Congress in the ten years that I have been on the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. And it ought to be able to stand criticism.

Mr. SCOTT. We have no objection in the world to criticism.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the point suggested by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] undoubtedly has a great deal of force to it. It would be far better if it were possible to differentiate more particularly the different items of appropriation in this and other bills. But as to the last appropriation in this paragraph immediately preceding the total sum of appropriation, those are incidental expenses, and there is no appropriation bill brought into this House that attempts to segregate incidental expenses from the main expenses connected with the same use of the money.

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg to challenge the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I will take care of you in one moment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope you do.

Mr. NORRIS. Following the gentleman's suggestion, I would like to ask him in respect to the paragraph beginning with line 21, on page 7, and ending at the top of page 18—does not the gentleman think that the items included in that paragraph ought to be followed by the amount that is appropriated for the items in that paragraph?

Mr. MANN. I do not.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the gentleman from Colorado contend that in each one of these separate items, either in the paragraph or in any other paragraph, it is necessary to have the amount stated, either at the end of the paragraph or some other place? The amount should be stated without going through four or five hundred others before you secure the total.

Mr. MANN. There is not an appropriation bill that passes this House—not one, including the appropriation bill reported from the Committee on the Post-Office—that makes this specific appropriation for traveling expenses. There is not a single appropriation bill reported into this House—not one, including the appropriation bill reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads—that covers the cost of telephone and telegraph purposes, and for the cost of gas and electric current. What does the post-office appropriation bill provide? "For traveling expenses," including certain other things, "not to exceed $4 a day," including the service and the general compensation, I state to my distinguished friend.

Mr. NORRIS. Nobody contends——

Mr. STAFFORD. I challenge that statement, if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. MANN (continuing). Or for telegraph or telephone expenses.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has made a statement——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield for a second, I will give him an opportunity to be heard. It is not possible to make these appropriations otherwise. The amount paid for traveling expenses and the amount paid for telegraph service and gas and electric current—all these depend upon what is done. It would be possible to make a separate appropriation for these different services to be rendered if it were not a fact, which is the fact, that the same officials in the Bureau of Plant Industry, through their service in connection with these different services, are provided for in this paragraph. They are not segregated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended.

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of the statement of the gentleman that I have challenged—that the post-office act did not segregate the traveling expenses apart by themselves, but included in that item salaries as well—I desire to direct his attention to a copy of the act and to the item for traveling expenses of post-office inspectors without per diem, which reads:

For traveling expenses of inspectors without per diem, and of inspectors in charge, expenses incurred by inspectors not covered by per diem allowance, and traveling expenses of the chief post-office inspector, $70,000.

There is an item that limits the appropriation to a specific amount. I will read further to the gentleman another item in the post-office appropriation bill:

For rent, light, and fuel for first, second, and third class post-offices, $3,000,000.

Mr. MANN. A $3,000,000 appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is true; but no omnibus purposes included or given in the item. Every one of the items contained in the post-office appropriation bill is limited by the amount that is required for the stated respective services. I challenge the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I read from the post-office current law—the gentleman has the bill—and the same language is in the present bill:

For per diem allowance of inspectors in the field while actually traveling on official business away from their home, their official domicile, and their headquarters, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, not to exceed $4 a day.

Covering both the per diem expenses and the traveling expenses, and so all through the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. And stating the amount appropriated for that purpose, in this particular, $325,000.

Mr MANN Three hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, in the bill before the committee we have no such limitation at all.

Mr. MANN. Not nearly as specific as the items in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why, there is no limitation whatever in this bill as to the amount that may be expended for the respective services. All through this bill there are no particular specifications, not any limitation as to the amount of expenditure. It is all left to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, to spend as much as he sees fit for any one of the numerously designated objects, provided it does not exceed the total.

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly; and the gentleman's bill carries items where the same thing could be done.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask my friend to point out where it does.

Mr. MANN. It is not practicable there and it was not practicable here to use all this fund for traveling expenses. The gentleman knows prefectly well there would be nobody to travel if they used all this fund for traveling expenses.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Post-Office Committee could join all these items together and make one total appropriation, but we segregated the amounts which may be expended for these respective items. Now, I arose here not for the purpose of captiously criticising the work of the committee, but merely to point out some features that I think are open to fair criticism, as compared with the arrangement made by another committee. I wish to compliment and congratulate the chairman of the committee for the care, attention, study, and research in preparing this bill, but I think that there is some meritorious reason for pointing out the fact that there might be some limitation on these expenditures.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, nobody is more willing than I am to admit the shortcomings in the bill now before the House. I do feel warranted, however, in suggesting that in respect to the matter of lump-sum appropriations the present committee is simply following the unbroken precedents that have prevailed from the day the first appropriation was brought in by the Committee on Agriculture down to the present hour. It may be that this present committee is mistaken, but if so it is in good company, because every Agricultural Committee of this House for twenty-one years has done the same thing. And I submit that it would be impracticable to make a very great change in the direction suggested by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] or the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. To defend the action of the committee in bringing in lump-sum appropriations to carry forward the work of the Department of Agriculture embarrasses me nearly as much as it would to be asked to demonstrate that the shortest distance between two points is a straight line. If the statement of the fact does not carry conviction, I do not know how it could be demonstrated.

Now, as I said, I am perfectly willing to concede that there are imperfections in this bill, but I believe that if the gentlemen who have devoted so much energy and zeal and enthusiasm to picking flaws in the bill had expended a little modicum of time and intelligence, first, upon the study of the great Department for which this bill is intended to provide, and, second, upon the meritorious features of the bill, their criticism might perhaps have been robbed of some of its barbs.

I venture to call their attention to the fact that this bill has been reduced in volume from sixty-nine to forty-five pages, in comparison with the bill presented before the House last year, a reduction that was made by the elimination of unnecessary or redundant phraseology, a reduction which did not change in any degree the scope of the work or the character of the work that is being done by the Department, but which did very greatly simplify the bill and certainly has made it more clear and more easily understood. I believe no fair-minded critic who compares the present with any preceding bill will deny that this bill is clearer in language and more logical in arrangement than any of its recent predecessors; and yet it is more mercilessly attacked on these very points than any other has been. I appreciate honest and fair and candid criticism, and will endeavor to profit by it, but I do feel that much of the criticism of this bill is wholly unwarranted.

Mr. LEVER. I suggest to the chairman that the members of the committee would be very much pleased to have these gentlemen point out just how we can remedy the features of which they complain.

Mr. SCOTT. They have not taken very much time in pointing out the meritorious features of the bill.

Mr. BONYNGE. In the paragraph beginning with line 17, on page 16, reading—

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a standard, etc., for the different weights of cotton.

You have undoubtedly in mind some specific amount that you expect the Secretary of Agriculture will be authorized to expend for that purpose, have you not?

Mr. SCOTT. Only in a very general way. The Chief of the Bureau, when talking about that, said he thought it could be done within $5,000.

Mr. BONYNGE. You probably had $5,000 in mind when you made up your total for this specific purpose, had you not?

Mr. SCOTT. No; not for that specific purpose, except in the most general way. If the gentleman will look over the record of this Department for every year, he will find that there are sums returned to the Treasury, unexpended balances, because it is impossible to forecast the exact expenditures for all of these projects.

I hold in my hand a copy of the hearings that were held before the Committee on Agriculture, a book of nearly a thousand pages, which reports the testimony taken by the committee to inform itself as to all of the details of the items carried in this bill. It was a report made up after five weeks of daily hearings, and, with all due modesty, speaking for the other gentlemen on the committee and not for myself, I assert that no bill was ever brought on the floor of the House which has had more careful, painstaking, and patriotic consideration than has this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing and glad to accord to the Committee on Agriculture and to the chairman of the committee all the credit that they are entitled to, and it is very considerable, for the splendid work they have done in preparing this bill. I take it, also, that the chairman and other members of the committee will appreciate the interest of other Members of the House who do not happen to be on the committee in the subjects covered by this important bill. It happens sometimes that one Member of the House is interested in one particular project and another Member in some other project. It would be a matter of great service to Members who have not served on the committee if in the bill presented by it some information could be given to them so that all might know the relative amounts that are to be expended on the different projects which affect different sections of the country.

I appreciate full well, Mr. Chairman, that it would be absolutely impossible to take up each particular project alone and by itself and appropriate some specific amount for that special project. But it does seem to me that there is some line that could be drawn that would give us more definite information than is to be contained in these four pages that we have just completed reading. We have in these four pages two or three hundred different projects, some affecting one section of the country, others that affect another section of the country, and not only for our information but in order that the Secretary of Agriculture may know how much relative importance Congress places on the different projects it does seem to me that it would be possible for the Committee on Agriculture to have given us a little information dividing this lump sum of $900,000 into three or four different sums, making a specific appropriation at least at the end of each of the paragraphs that are contained in the four pages.

Now, in making this observation, Mr. Chairman, it has not been made by me in any desire to be captious or hypercritical. I appreciate the fact that the gentleman from Virginia has spent a great deal of time and labor on this bill. It has been well spent. I do not think that anything I said in reference to the suggestions I made called for any remark from him that I was attempting to be hypercritical in my observations on this section. My observations were prompted, Mr. Chairman, not from the desire to be captious or hypercritical, but because I am deeply interested in the projects covered by the section of the bill just read, and as a Member of the House I feel I am entitled to know the amount intended to be expended by the different projects.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I would like to offer to this section. After the word "dollars," in line 6, page 18, insert "$10,000, or such sum as may be needed, to be immediately available, for the purpose of combating the boll weevil in Oklahoma."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I shall be obliged to make a point of order on that, or I will reserve it, if the gentleman wishes.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman is going to insist on the point of order, it will be unnecessary for me to burden the House with my remarks. If there is any opportunity to persuade him not to insist on the point of order, I will make a statement.

Mr. SCOTT. I shall be obliged to insist on the point of order.

Mr. CARTER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER. I am in hopes the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order. The Department of Agriculture was not aware until recently of the inroads made by the boll weevil in Oklahoma. All of their funds had been allotted to other States prior to their knowledge of present conditions in that State.

The boll weevil entered Oklahoma from the Texas border, and has gradually worked its way across the State until it practically covers all the cotton-raising region. Fully 40 per cent of the crop was destroyed by this pest last year, and unless something can be done to ameliorate conditions the entire crop may be destroyed this year. My amendment does not propose an additional appropriation, but simply requires that $10,000 of such appropriation be made available at once.

I have numerous communications from S. A. Knapp, special agent in charge of this work, recommending this amendment. I will read from such communication. This is an extract from a letter written on February 18:

We greatly regret that our appropriation is so exceedingly small for the amount of work which is being carried on that with present funds it is impossible to furnish any more men. The calls for this work throughout the cotton States are much more than we can meet.

We are trying to arrange so that a small portion of our next year's appropriation shall become immediately available, and if this can be done, the situation in Oklahoma will be relieved at once.

In another communication of the same date he states:

My State agent, W. M. Bamberge, writes me very strongly in regard to boll-weevil conditions in your State, but it is impossible for me, with the funds at my disposal, to remedy matters.

I sent a man out two different times through your State last year to ascertain to what extent the boll weevil had invaded the Territory, but probably he did not strike the right parties, because I was not aware of the situation until recently.

We make our arrangements in October and November for the campaign of the ensuing year; consequently it is difficult to make changes at this time. Our emergency appropriations are used only in boll-weevil territory. All work done in States outside of the boll-weevil infested territory is by private contributions.

I suggest that $10,000 in the present appropriation bill be made immediately available, and I would use as much as is necessary in Oklahoma, so as to relieve your people and save the crop of 1908.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if conditions were settled in our State it might not be necessary for this amendment, but in our State the rent system is in vogue, and almost every man who cultivates land rents from some Indian landlord. His future is unsettled, and in many instances these renters move every year, making the combating of this boll-weevil pest much more difficult. In addition to this our State is in desperate straits for funds, for the reason that about one-half of the lands in Oklahoma, which in a new country are always the greater part of property value, are nontaxable.

If you will remove these restrictions upon the taxation of lands and put our State upon an equal footing with other States, then it will not be necessary to continually ask Congress for appropriations.

The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture has reserved a point of order against this amendment. If there is any chance to persuade him to refrain from invoking this point of order, I should like to continue this discussion, but if he insists upon his point of order there is no need to pursue this discussion any further and burden the committee with a long-winded speech.

Mr. SCOTT. I shall be obliged to insist upon the point of order.

Mr. CARTER. Then I ask leave to extend my remarks and have printed in the RECORD certain correspondence in regard to this matter.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
STATE OF OKLAHOMA, FIRST LEGISLATURE,
Guthrie, February 4, 1908.

DEAR SIR: In the interest of our section of the State, and of the entire State as for that matter, and in order to call your attention to something that will materially assist you, especially in all the counties lying on Red River and on the Washita River, I wish to call your attention to the importance of having the Department of Agriculture provide for an experiment station to combat the Mexican cotton boll weevil. This weevil reached the section of Colbert, south of the Red River and east of Colbert, about three years ago, and has grown so destructive that cotton can not profitably be cultivated under the present methods by the farmers in that section; and it has continued to go north until it has reached as high up as Atoka, and has reached Tishomingo. They appeared on my farm the first time last year.

By reason of the habits of the boll weevil it is more destructive and active in bottom lands, and a station should be established somewhere on the Washita River near or around the last year's damage area, either at Teller, Tishomingo, or Russett, but not farther north or up the river than Mannsville. From this station as headquarters the work could be extended eastward and westward, and, in fact, every direction, to combat this plague.

Ten thousand dollars—and it ought to be made twenty-five thousand—spent now will be worth more than an annual expenditure of $200,000 three years hence, because from Mannsville eastward and on Red River it has proven a great plague to the farmers.

I believe the Tishomingo Commercial Club would readily respond to the desire of the Department in the matter of securing suitable farm lands, which should include bottom lands as well as high lands, to make their experiments and to demonstrate proper cultural methods to combat the boll weevil. I do not care especially to benefit my town in this matter. I am more interested in the work my tenants on my farm would do and the tenants in all that section of country. A station established at any location where one should be established will be satisfactory to me, but I think it would prove quite an assistance to yourself in a political way to secure a station somewhere in your district; and you would be the proper man to make the effort, because there is more cotton raised in your district than all the other districts in the State, or nearly so, as the Chickasaw Nation produces about half of the cotton in the State.

I write you this because I feel that you will see the importance of it, and because, if properly worked out, will enable you to do your district some real, genuine good. Secretary Wilson will heartily cooperate with you, if you will but call his attention to the facts and conditions which exist. I will gladly assist you in any recommendation necessary to bring about an assistance on the part of the Agricultural Department.

Yours, sincerely, WM. H. MURRAY.

Hon. C. D. CARTER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

FEBRUARY 10, 1908.

DEAR SIR: Herewith I hand you letter of Leo Harris, member of Oklahoma legislature from Carter County, in which he requests five additional men to assist in fighting the boll-weevil plague.

In support of Mr. Harris's request I will state that this pest made material inroads in the cotton-raising industry of Oklahoma last year, and if something is not done, and done quickly, I fear that the next few crops will be almost entirely destroyed.

I sincerely hope that you may be able to grant this request.

Yours, truly,
C. D. CARTER.

Mr. JAMES WILSON,
Secretary Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

FEBRUARY 20, 1908.

MY DEAR SIR: I wish to call your attention to the situation in Oklahoma relative to the boll-weevil pest. It seems that the Agricultural Department were not aware, until recently, of the inroads made by the boll weevil in our State. If something is not done to protect the farmers of southern Oklahoma, the cotton crop will be almost an entire failure this year. I have a letter from the Agricultural Department in which it is suggested that an item of $10,000 in the appropriation bill being considered by your committee be made immediately available, part of same to be used in suppressing the boll weevil in Oklahoma.

I shall be very glad to have an earnest consideration of this proposition.

Yours, very truly,

——— ———.

Mr. CHARLES F. SCOTT, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MARIETTA, OKLA., March 1, 1908.

Hon. C. D. CARTER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, the members of the Marietta Commercial Club and citizens of Love County, respectfully urge upon you as our Representative in Congress, the necessity of having at least five additional special agents from the Department of Agriculture assigned to Oklahoma to fight the boll weevil.

The damage from this pest in Love County alone during the year 1907 is conservatively estimated at $150,000. As a result of this great damage many of the best farmers have left this county. We need immediate help from the Government to educate our farmers to use cultural methods and thus raise a fair crop in spite of the boll weevil.

Wherefore we petition you, our servant in Congress, to aid us.

Signed:

ARDMORE, OKLA., Monday, March 2, 1908.

Hon. T. P. GORE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am very much interested in the passage of the bill you have introduced for the appropriation of $30,000 for fighting the boll weevil in Oklahoma and will do all I can to aid you in this direction. In view of the fact that the weevil has been industriously working on this side of the Red River for three years and the situation has been entirely neglected by the Government until last November, it should be arranged that this money if appropriated be expended in Oklahoma under the direction of a special agent or officer appointed for the purpose, as the conditions are different than elsewhere and can not be understood and acted upon promptly and intelligently from Washington. We must have quick, vigorous, and honest work in order to get results, as the situation is daily growing more serious. Under the present method, I know of instances where farmers have received instructions as to fall plowing in February. This is a fair criterion of the way red tape ties up important work.

The Government appropriated $250,000 for the carrying on of the boll weevil fight in Texas and this money was handled through the bureau directly. I was then engaged in commercial club work in Texas and am fairly conversant with the way the work was carried on there. The fact that many counties have never been benefited thereby, and some of them are even seeking to get a portion of the time of Special Agent Bamberge right now indicates the impotency of the method pursued. Cooke County, Tex., the home of Senator BAILEY, has just sent a request of this nature to the Senator.

If your measure can be made effective on passage and the whole of the money spent in Oklahoma under intelligent direction, such as would be the case if Special Agent W. M. Bamberge were put in charge, great good could be accomplished and a record made which has never before been reached in the work. The tenant farmer makes this a harder proposition than in other States and makes it necessary that the work shall be intensive and carried on along lines which fit local conditions.

I note in Washington dispatches that Dr. S. A. Knapp has written Mr. CARTER about the necessity of an appropriation for the work, and says that he has only just become aware of the seriousness of the invasion. This sounds strange when, as a matter of fact, I wrote a personal letter to Doctor Knapp, in Lake Charles, on September 30 last, being joined by Congressman CARTER and other prominent citizens, detailing conditions and praying that Mr. Bamberge be sent here. That he appreciated the gravity of the case at that time is shown by the fact that my request was granted and Mr. Bamberge was sent here instead of to South Carolina, as had already been arranged, and began his work on November 1, making weekly reports to his superior detailing conditions as he finds them. He has personally visited eleven counties, has ninety post-offices on his list, and has spoken at over 150 schoolhouses.

Doctor Knapp also says that as many as three counties are infected. To my knowledge the weevil is already in the following counties: Le Flore, McCurtain, Latimer, Pushmataha, Choctaw, Pittsburg, Atoka (where the weevil has been for three years and the 1907 crop of cotton was but half that of 1906), Bryan, Hughes, Coal, Pontotoc, Johnson, Marshall, Love, Grady, Carter, Murray, Garvin, Stephens, Jefferson, Comanche, Jackson, and Tillman, and it is only reasonable to expect that it is in Greer, Kiowa, and Caddo counties. This will indicate to you something of its spread. It is also probable that it is very strong all along the valley of the Canadian.

As I have said before, this is the great agricultural portion of the State—in fact, the richest—and your success in passing this measure will mean everything to farming and business interests wherever cotton is grown. If I can be of service to you in this direction at any time, I will endeavor to come to Washington at such time as you may suggest to assist in giving you all the facts you may need in arguing the case before the committee or in presenting it on the floor.

Again thanking you for your interest in behalf of the people and pledging you my heartiest cooperation, I am,

Sincerely, yours,
H. G. SPAULDING, Secretary.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend some remarks in the RECORD; to print a brief statement.

Mr. SCOTT. Is it on this bill?

Mr. BENNET of New York. It is on the Forestry Service.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if this is general debate on any particular subject.

Mr. BENNET of New York. It has relation to the Forestry Service.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The following is the matter referred to:

NEW YORK BOARD OF TRADE AND TRANSPORTATION,
New York, February 19, 1908.

At the monthly meeting of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation held this day the committee on forests submitted the following report, and it was unanimously adopted:

To the New York Board of Trade and Transportation:

In pursuance of a report made to this board June 4, 1908, on a bill before Congress for the purchase of a national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachian Mountains, and also in pursuance of a report made April 26, 1906, upon a substitute bill then before Congress for the purchase of a national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and also for one in the White Mountains, of New Hampshire, the forestry committee begs leave to say that both of these reports were indorsed and the creation of such forest reserves was recommended by this board.

The forestry committee now wishes to state that a substitute bill for both of the above-mentioned bills is bending in the Senate "for acquiring national forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and White Mountains," the area of the former not to exceed 5,000,000 acres and that of the latter not to exceed 600,000 acres.

In relation to the creation of such forest reserves by the National Government, it may be of no little interest to state that the area of existing national forest reserves west of the Mississippi River embraces nearly 100,000,000 acres, while there is no national reserve east of the Mississippi, the only public reserve of any consequence being that belonging to the State of New York, embracing about 1,500,000 acres, the creation of the State reserve being almost exclusively due to the work of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation.

Among the essential objects sought by the creation of these two national reserves is the protection of the headwaters of the most important rivers of five of the New England States, and practically the headwaters of the chief rivers in the South, east of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio River, thus, in a measure, assuring the integrity of the great river systems of these two sections of our country.

The protection of the watersheds under consideration is absolutely necessary to the conservation, as well as to the future development, in a large degree, of the internal navigation and commerce of these five New England States and of nine of the Southern States, as well as of the mining and agricultural industries of the latter, and also of the vast and increasing manufacturing interests of both of these sections.

Even as it is, the partial stripping that has been made of the forest cover of the White Mountain regions has imposed a very heavy annual tax or burden upon the cost of many goods made upon streams fed by their watersheds, the enforced substitution of steam as a motive power for water power, now so uncertain and irregular, costing each year hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The continued deforestation of these wooded reliefs can not, therefore, fail to work correspondingly to the disadvantage of the great manufacturing and of all other industries dependent upon the proper flow of their rivers and tributaries. When competition between the most advanced nations has not only reached a stage unprecedented in the history of the commercial world, but gives every indication that it will grow more severe owing to the forceful and intelligent leadership of those engaged in this mercantile rivalry, no advantage, either acquired or natural, which any section of the country possesses should be sacrificed or needlessly wasted.

These observations have a special application to the region watered by the river system of the Southern Appalachians. Raising such a large proportion of raw cotton, one of the most valuable gifts of nature to mankind, with a native population peculiarly adapted to its successful cultivation, a favoring climate, and with water and electric powers practically unlimited, if wisely conserved and applied, its manufacturers should in time be able to wrest from the nations of Europe the cotton trade of the peoples and nations inhabiting the countries and islands washed by the Pacific Ocean, and now constituting more than half the population of the globe. Great as it is at present, it is insignificant, as to what it must be when the East awakens from the lethargy of its ancient civilizations and enters upon the march of western progress.

With such advantages, which further the prosperity of the whole country and which are, among others, to be conserved, acquired, and guaranteed by the preservation of these watersheds forming the subject of this report, your forestry committee submits for your action the following resolution:

Resolved, That the New York Board of Trade and Transportation most heartily indorses the proposition to create the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains reserves, and requests the committee on forests of this board to urge the passage of such one of the pending bills as in its judgment will best serve the public interests and prevent the diversion to private or corporate interests of the benefits to accrue from such forest reserves when created.

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am not sure whether the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] will make a point of order on what I am going to say or not. I am inclined to think that it would be in order, although I am not quite sure about that. I desire to speak about that portion of the message of the President in relation to water power which I understand came into the message at the instance of the Forester. The President in his message the other day stated:

Numerous bills granting water-power rights on navigable streams have been introduced. None of them give the Government the right to make a reasonable charge for the valuable privileges so granted, in spite of the fact that these water-power privileges are equivalent to many thousands of acres of the best coal lands for their production of power. Nor is any definite time limit set, as should always be done in such cases. I shall be obliged hereafter, in accordance with the policy stated in a recent message, to veto any water-power bill which does not provide for a time limit and for the right of the President or of the Secretary concerned to fix and collect such a charge as he may find to be just and reasonable in each case.

It was my fortune, Mr. Chairman, several years ago, in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to be the chairman of a subcommittee appointed by that committee for the purpose of preparing a general bill which would regulate the construction of dams in the United States. That bill became a law, and that law provides that when, hereafter, authority is granted by Congress to any person to construct and maintain a dam for water power or other purposes, across any of the navigable waters of the United States, such dams shall not be built or commenced until certain things are done, including the preparation of plans and specifications, which must first be approved by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers. The law then provides, in addition to these requirements on the part of the persons who ask for the permission, as follows:

Provided, That in approving such plans and location such conditions and stipulations may be imposed as the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War may deem necessary to protect the present and future interests of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, if the present or the future interests of the United States requires that there shall be compensation paid for the right to construct a dam, then the Secretary of War now has the power when a dam bill is passed to require compensation in each case. If neither the present nor the future interests of the United States authorize the requirement of compensation, then Congress itself can not provide for compensation. I do not undertake to say whether, under the commerce clause of the Constitution, Congress has the power to require the payment of compensation as a condition precedent for the permission of the General Government to construct a dam across a stream or a bridge over a navigable stream; but if the power exists in Congress, it has already been conferred upon the Secretary of War; and if by accident the Chief Magistrate had consulted the Department of the Government which has jurisdiction over the subject, he would have learned that the law now confers upon the Secretary of War all the power that Congress can confer upon the Secretary of War in this respect. Unfortunately he consulted another branch of the Government, which has nothing to do with navigable streams and knows very little upon the subject.

The President says further that he will veto the bill unless it provides for a strict time limit—unless every bill that we pass provides for a strict time limit under the general dam act. Mr. Chairman, in every bill which passes there is the express provision that Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal the act without any liability on the part of the Government, and that is near enough to a fixed time limit for any practical purposes, because that is better than a fixed time limit of twenty-five years or fifty years, or any other period of time. There is reserved to Congress the right at any time to alter the act, to amend the act, or to repeal the act without any liability for destruction of property—a far safer and more drastic provision than the President himself has suggested.

I suggest again that if he had consulted the War Department instead of the Forester he would have been informed that Congress had already, two years before it was called to his attention, enacted the legislation which he desired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman yields the floor I would like to ask to what particular case the gentleman alludes where the Forestry Bureau seems to have been consulted about it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I was talking about the facts.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, what particular case—Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word——

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman is taken off the floor I would like to ask——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I yield from my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois, waiving the question as to the right of the Federal Government to take a tax out of the use of a navigable stream or otherwise, does the gentleman think the Department and President are correct in their intimation that they may follow an electric current into its uses, regulate the manner in which it is distributed to the people, and fix the price at which it is distributed to the people?

Mr. MANN. I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, my opinion will not be what the gentleman desires.

Mr. SMITH of California. I do not ask the gentleman to give my opinion; I ask him for his.

Mr. MANN. I say my opinion perhaps will not be what the gentleman desires.

Mr. SMITH of California. I will be very glad to have it, nevertheless.

Mr. MANN. When this matter was under investigation by the subcommittee of which I happen to be the chairman. I was aided by such distinguished gentlemen as Mr. ADAMSON, of Georgia, Mr. RICHARDSON, of Alabama, and other gentlemen upon this side of the House, and we went over the matter very thoroughly, as far as we could. For a year or more we corresponded with the electrical engineers of the country as to the possibilities. We were in consultation with the War Department. The bill which was drawn and which is now the law met the approval of the War Department, although it is more drastic than they suggested. In my own judgment, the General Government may require the payment of compensation as a condition precedent to a grant of permission to cross navigable streams, either by building a dam or by the construction of a bridge or any other structure placed in the stream.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask for three minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Whether the General Government should do this or not I do not undertake to say. I think that somebody, either the General Government or the State or the local municipality where the dam is constructed, ought to have the right reserved to them, in case the dam or electrical power proved immensely valuable, to regulate the charge to private consumers, or possibly require a compensation for the use of it. I have no doubt that in the end in some places people who have the right to build dams across navigable streams ought not only to be compelled to pay a compensation for the privilege, but also ought to be compelled to furnish electric current at reasonable cost to the private consumers, but I maintain that we have secured all of that in the general dam act.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman has referred to the fact that the general law called the "Bell Act"——

Mr. MANN. It is not called the "Bell Act," it is called the "general dam act."

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman has referred to the fact that that law contains a specific clause that Congress may at any time repeal the law. Now, there are a great many acts of Congress which contain that clause. In fact, I believe it is universal, is it not, in Congressional grants?

Mr. MANN. The provision in this act is not universal. There is a very different provision in the general dam act from the ordinary provision.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the difference is this: That the ordinary clause is that Congress shall have the right at any time to repeal or amend this act, and this clause says without compensation for damage incurred.

Mr. MANN. Substantially; but it is still broader than the gentleman states.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, the first I mentioned is even broader than the last. I want to ask the gentleman this: He is one of the closest observers of the conduct of the Congress of the United States; I know of no man on either side of the House who keeps up more accurately with the details of legislation than the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can have anything within my power.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not saying that as a compliment at all. I am mentioning it as a fact. Does the gentleman remember a single case in his entire Congressional experience where this right reserved to Congress to repeal, whether it was an act for the benefit of a street railway in the District of Columbia, or a dam act, or any other sort of act, was ever exercised by Congress? Do we not know that they always come in and say, "Although you have the legal right to repeal, morally and equitably you are taking away from these people certain vested rights, and you ought not to do it?" That unjust appeal always wins. And has the power to appeal ever been exercised, in your experience? It has not been exercised, in my recollection.

Mr. MANN. Since the gentleman has been a Member of the House we have passed several bills to repeal laws exactly like this—relating to bridges.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To repeal a bridge act?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not after the bridge had been built?

Mr. MANN. In one case we amended it decidedly after the bridge had been built—namely, in the case of the Memphis bridge, very decidedly—and we have frequently done it. Now, the right to repeal is a very different proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the right I am talking about, because I am talking about it with this view. The gentleman suggested that that was, in the dam bill, a good substitute for the time limit. Now, the time limit is an ipso facto repeal at the expiration of the time, and requires no affirmative action by Congress. In other words, if you fix a time limit for the franchise, at the end of that time the franchise can no longer continue until Congress affirmatively reconfers it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about even that. If we submit the time limit, we would still put in a provision giving the right to repeal.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that. But whether you put in that provision or not, the franchise would cease at the expiration of the time limit, unless Congress, by affirmative action, reconferred it.

Mr. MANN. Very true. Now, the difference is this, in very brief language——

Mr. WILLIAMS. But, before the gentleman goes on—I do not want to interrupt him too much—but before he goes on, I would like him to say if he remembers now, because I do not——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is now pending.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move, then, to amend that amendment by striking out half of the last word. I want to ask the gentleman, in order to get his answer clearly—I do not remember—but I want to know if he remembers a single instance of a repeal of any act of that sort?

Mr. MANN. I think we have had repeals, but the repeal is not the important thing. As the gentleman will readily see, the important thing is securing to Congress the control of legislation, so that if at any time we desire by Congressional act to fix the cost of the electric current or to require specific compensation we have the right to write a new provision into the law granting the right to construct the dam. Now, the difference is this: If you say that the corporation may construct a dam and have it in operation for twenty-five years, and that would be a very low number of years, or, say, fifty years, within that time it would be breaking faith absolutely to make a change in the law. But when we provide, as we do in the District of Columbia in the street car cases, for instance, that they have the power to proceed without any time limit, then we reserve to ourselves without any breach of faith the right to write into the law an amendment fixing the compensation or requiring, for instance, the giving of universal transfers, as we have just written into the law as far as this House is concerned. And that is the point I am endeavoring to make. It was suggested that in the ordinary repeal or amendment of a statute, while the Congress would retain the right, might put upon the General Government the liability for damages to the property, because I take it that even Congress can not by virtue of a repeal or amendment take property without due compensation unless it has reserved the right. So in the general dam act it is written:

> The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is expressly reserved as to any and all dams which may be constructed in accordance with the provisions of this act, and the United States shall incur no liability for the alteration, amendment, or repeal thereof, to the owner or owners or any other persons interested in any dam which has been constructed in accordance with its provisions.

So that we retain absolute control over the question, a far greater degree of control than if we fixed the limit at twenty-five or fifty years, as would probably be the case. In the course of time the electric current may be vastly less valuable and the price ought to be reduced. The cost of creating the electric current might be far less, and we should retain the jurisdiction, as we do in the general dam act. I may be mistaken, but in my judgment it is not possible to enact a more complete and wiser piece of legislation on the subject than the general dam act is, which reserves to Congress all the powers over the subject and yet endeavors to encourage the people through private enterprise to develop industries.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Do you not think the President's attention ought to be called to that general law before he comes to veto our bills? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I think it will be; and I hope that he will appreciate what the law is.

Mr. SMITH of California. I move to strike out the last two words. The gentleman from Illinois seemed to be a little doubtful about rendering an opinion lest it might not please me, but he went on and gave one in which I very heartily agree, so far as it went; nevertheless, there is the further question which I propounded which he did not quite fully answer, as to whether the Federal Government, either in the case of navigable or unnavigable streams, might follow the electric current into either cities, villages, or agricultural operations and regulate the price at which the current should be furnished and the manner in which it should be distributed to the people.

Now, the Forestry department has asserted the right, in a vague and indefinite way, to regulate the production of the electric current on nonnavigable streams, and I commend gentlemen of the House to the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture on that subject, as given by the Chief of the Bureau of Forestry. You will read some pages, beginning with about page 249, with considerable interest, as indicating the manner in which they propose to exercise that very extraordinary power, where the stream rises within a State, flows its entire distance within the State, and ultimately is discharged not into a navigable river at all, but in some cases into an inland lake that never reaches the sea, or a lake that is not navigable or in any way, shape, or manner connected with navigation. They are asserting the right in the development of electric power to take a tax out of it.

It is a very important subject—more important with us in the West where they are dealing with nonnavigable streams than in the East where they may be dealing with navigable rivers. But notwithstanding the subject of navigation, I will ask the gentleman whether he thinks the power of the Federal Government permits them to go into the cities, towns, villages, and farming communities, or into the places where the electric current may be furnished to the people, or whether this power should be exercised by the State and its subordinate branches of government?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman desire me to answer him now?

Mr. SMITH of California. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that where any authority, any government, is absolutely in control of the matter—what a person can not do now without consent—that the consenter can impose such conditions as the consenter pleases before granting the consent, which may be a rental price, compensation, or anything else. The Government has the right to charge compensation; it may refuse consent except upon certain conditions, which means the payment of compensation or regulating the price of the current.

Mr. SMITH of California. May I propound one more question? Would you concede it to be a legitimate exercise of power—conceding, for the purpose of the argument, that it exists—that it should be exercised by the Federal Government where the only function the Government had in connection with it was the right of way for a pole line or for the water line where it passed over the public domain?

Mr. MANN. I believe the new theory of the Government is that the Government will exercise, to a certain extent, control over propositions of this class that are classed as public utilities, and which depend for their existence upon governmental consent.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I intend to discuss on the next paragraph of the bill the subject which has been under discussion for the last few moments; but, in view of the discussion which has been had, I simply desire to say at this time that, without regard to the question as to the legal power and authority of the Government to impose conditions in making grants, conditions upon grants, the practical question which confronts the people in the West in regard to the forest reserves is as to whether the forest reserves are to remain a part of the sovereign States in which located or are to become Federal provinces over which the people of the State shall have practically no control, whose industries shall be established and maintained under revocable permits issued at the will and in a form pleasing to a Government official, who may thereby lay such heavy burdens and impose such conditions upon these industries that it shall be utterly impossible for the State to control them or to lay taxes upon them for the maintenance of local institutions.

It is an intensely important—an intensely practical question, and a question which must be met soon, whether or no we shall have a personal Government within Federal provinces, located in and occupying large portions of sovereign States, or shall have, as was contemplated by the forest-reserve law, reserves created for certain specific purposes for the accomplishment of certain objects set forth and specified in the law, with the control of the Government over those areas limited to the authority necessary to accomplish the purposes for which the reserves were established.

I do not desire to take the time of the committee at this time further on the subject, but in connection with the next paragraph I shall have something to say in regard to this general question, particularly as affecting power companies.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless there be objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] moves that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BURLESON. Before that motion is put I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this subject-matter, and also ask the same privilege on behalf of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. SCOTT was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 19158), the agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

BOARD OF MISSIONS, PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

By unanimous consent the Committee on the Public Lands was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 4916) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee to the Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church for certain lands situated in the State of Idaho, and the same was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

FILTRATION PLANT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

By unanimous consent the Committee on the District of Columbia was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 19920) to provide for the completion of the park surrounding the filtration plant in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and the same was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13077. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish four condemned brass cannon and cannon balls to the Confederate Monument Association, at Franklin, Tenn.; and

H. R. 17055. An act to validate certain acts of the thirty-seventh legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 6902. An act for the relief of Henry Rustan;

H. R. 9079. An act to extend to Port Arthur, in the State of Texas, the privilege of immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise;

H. R. 10671. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple for certain lands of the Santee Reservation, in Nebraska, to school district No. 36, in Knox County, Nebr.;

H. R. 13875. An act for the relief of John V. Johnson;

H. R. 14772. An act prescribing what shall constitute a legal cord of wood in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 16471. An act for the relief of George H. Penrose;

H. R. 17510. An act to authorize the county of Ashley, in the State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, Ashley County, Ark., at Portland;

H. R. 17511. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew at Parkdale, Ashley County, Ark.; and

H. R. 17512. An act to authorize the county of Ashley, in the State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, Ashley County, Ark., at Wilmot.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. PUJO for ten days, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO PRINT ON AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for general leave to print on the agricultural appropriation bill for five legislative days following the conclusion of the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent for general leave to print upon the agricultural appropriation bill for five legislative days after the conclusion of the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, to that request I feel compelled to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of William E. Carter, administrator of estate of Melvina A. Carter, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the sloop Hiram, Pardon Sheldon, master—to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of the Missouri River at St. Joseph, Mo.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of canal between Rehoboth and Delaware bays—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. PADGETT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5617) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept and care for gifts presented to vessels of the Navy of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1338), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14926) to amend sections 2 and 3 of an act entitled "An act to amend the homestead laws as to certain unappropriated and unreserved lands in Nebraska," approved April 28, 1904, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1339), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROBERTS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5473) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy in certain cases to mitigate or remit the loss of rights of citizenship imposed by law upon deserters from the naval service, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1340), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. GORDON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1536) authorizing the Secretary of War to recognize William Mitchell, deceased, as having been a member of Company C, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, civil war, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1335), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7963) for the relief of Patrick Conlin, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1336), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WALDO, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12712) for the relief of the estate of Samuel J. Rogers, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1337), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. LAW, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1560) for the relief of the estate of Henry Ware, deceased, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 1334), which said bill and report were laid on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18166) granting an increase of pension to Jesse Tuggle, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. McHENRY: A bill (H. R. 20009) to amend section 4764 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act of March 3, 1891—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 30, 1908.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM VERMONT.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I beg leave to present the credentials of Hon. John W. Stewart, appointed by the governor of Vermont a Senator from that State in the Senate of the United States to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the late Senator Redfield Proctor. I ask that the credentials be read and placed on file.

The credentials of John W. Stewart, appointed by the governor of the State of Vermont a Senator from that State to fill, until the next meeting of the legislature thereof, the vacancy caused by the death of Redfield Proctor in the term ending March 3, 1911, were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The Senator appointed is present in the Chamber and ready to take the oath of office.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator appointed will present himself at the Vice-President's desk and take the oath prescribed by law.

Mr. Stewart was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. DILLINGHAM, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and of law filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the annexed findings by the court relating to the vessel sloop Hiram, Pardon Sheldon, master, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the cause of The City of Nashville v. United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Court of Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5589) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 19463. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 19475. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 19737. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 19863. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

H. R. 13077. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish four condemned brass cannon and cannon balls to the Confederate Monument Association, at Franklin, Tenn.; and

H. R. 17055. An act to validate certain acts of the thirty-seventh legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico.

TENNESSEE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 18616) to authorize the Cairo and Norfolk Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River. The company is very anxious to have the bill passed. It has already passed the House and been reported from the Committee on Commerce of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill just read?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not object to this bill, but after it has been considered I shall ask for the regular order, which is morning business.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CUMBERLAND RIVER BRIDGES.

Mr. McCREARY. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that the same railroad company want, as soon as practicable, to construct bridges across the Cumberland River.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be passed quickly then.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18615) to authorize the Cairo and Norfolk Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Cumberland River.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONFEDERATED BANDS OF UTE INDIANS IN COLORADO.

Mr. TELLER. Some days ago the bill (S. 5038) for the relief of the White River Utes, the Southern Utes, the Uncompahgre Utes, the Tabeguache, Muache, Capote, Weeminuche, Yampa, Grand River, and Uinta bands of Ute Indians, known also as the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Colorado, was reached on the Calendar and was read, but because of the absence of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] I did not call for a vote upon it. The senior Senator has since returned and assures me that he does not care to intervene with the bill. So I ask that it be taken up and put on its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, I demand the regular order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a concurrent resolution of the thirty-second general assembly of the State of Iowa, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF IOWA,
SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, W. C. Hayward, secretary of state of the State of Iowa, do hereby certify that the attached instrument of writing is a true and correct copy of concurrent resolution of the thirty-second general assembly of the State of Iowa, making application to the Congress of the United States, requesting that the surviving members of the military organization known as the "Iowa Northern Border Brigade" be given the same rights and privileges for pension as given officers and soldiers of the civil war, as the same appears of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the secretary of state of the State of Iowa.

Done at Des Moines, the capital of the State, March 25, 1908.

[SEAL.] W. C. HAYWARD,
Secretary of State.

Concurrent resolution of the thirty-second general assembly of the State of Iowa, making application to the Congress of the United States, requesting that the surviving members of the military organization known as the "Iowa Northern Border Brigade" be given the same rights and privileges for pension as given officers and soldiers of the civil war.

Whereas the military organization known as the "Iowa Northern Border Brigade" having performed service which the United States Government troops had previously performed in protecting the settlers upon the northern borders of the State of Iowa at a time during the civil war when the Government did not have the troops to spare for such service; and

Whereas the above-named military organization was not regularly mustered into the service of the United States: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the house (the senate concurring):

SECTION 1. That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to enact such legislation as will place the surviving members of the Iowa Northern Border Brigade, who rendered active service in protecting settlers against Indian depredations, in the same position as applicants for pensions from the General Government as though they had been regularly mustered into the service of the United States.

SEC. 2. That this resolution, duly authenticated, shall be delivered to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, with the request that the same shall be placed before the said Senate and House.

He also presented a petition of members of the Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution of East Derry, N. H., praying that an appropriation be made for the erection of a monument to the memory of the late Commodore Matthew Fontaine Maury, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also presented the petition of M. E. Jaffa, associate professor of nutrition, University of California, Berkeley, Cal., praying that an appropriation be made for an investigation into the subject of the nutrition of man, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Merchants' Association of Boston, Mass., and a petition of the New Hampshire Lumbermen's Association, of Manchester, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish a national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains, which were referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

Mr. HEYBURN presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 6388) granting a pension to Jethro J. T. Garde, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BULKELEY presented a memorial of the Trades Council of New Haven, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a memorial of the Woman's Club of Willimantic, Conn., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "Crumpacker bill" providing for the employment of additional clerks for the taking of the Thirteenth and subsequent censuses, which was referred to the Committee on the Census.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Ansonia; of Local Division No. 1, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Torrington, and of the Henry Grattan Club of New Haven, all in the State of New Haven, remonstrating against the ratification of the pending treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DICK, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5337) for the relief of Mate William Jenney, United States Navy, retired, and the eight other retired mates who have been placed on the retired list with the rank and pay of one grade above that actually held by them at the time of retirement, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 434) thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13735) to correct the military record of Micaiah R. Evans, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 435) thereon.

Mr. HEYBURN, from the Committee on Manufactures, to whom was referred the bill (S. 42) to amend an act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 436) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3043) to prevent fraudulent representations as to Government guaranties of foods and medicines, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 437) thereon.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6155) to provide for an enlarged homestead, reported it with an amendment.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ALLISON. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 19955) making appropriations to supply certain additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to add, on page 2, after line 14:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Police court: For fuel, gas, laundry work, stationery, printing, preservation of records, mops, brooms, buckets, removal of ashes and refuse, telephone service, and all other incidental expenses not otherwise provided for, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add, after the amendment just agreed to:

Garfield Hospital: For additional amount required for isolating ward for minor contagious diseases at Garfield Hospital, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add, after the amendment just agreed to, the following:

One-half of the foregoing amounts to meet deficiencies in the appropriations on account of the District of Columbia shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I move to add, on page 2, after line 4, the following:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

Pay of the Army: For mileage to officers and contract surgeons when authorized by law, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 6391) granting a pension to Belle V. Jett, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6392) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish two condemned brass cannon and cannon balls to the county court of Mercer County, W. Va., which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BRIGGS introduced a bill (S. 6393) to authorize the extension and remodeling of the post-office and court-house building at Trenton, N. J., in accordance with the needs of the circuit and district courts and other Government offices, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6394) granting a pension to Martha A. Shute; and

A bill (S. 6395) granting an increase of pension to Joseph L. Wright.

Mr. WETMORE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6396) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Bowman (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6397) granting an increase of pension to Van Buren Kinney (with accompanying papers).

Mr. CULBERSON introduced a bill (S. 6398) for the relief of Oscar C. Guessaz, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. STONE introduced a bill (S. 6399) granting a pension to Napoleon B. Goodknight, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 6400) granting an increase of pension to Albert Downing, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HEYBURN introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6401) granting an increase of pension to Cornelius Sessions; and

A bill (S. 6402) granting an increase of pension to Frank E. Howard.

Mr. DEPEW introduced a bill (S. 6403) granting a pension to Sarah A. Cooley, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6404) increasing the salaries paid to circuit and district court judges of the United States for the southern district of New York, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6405) for the relief of William C. Bartlett, captain, United States Army, retired, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McCREARY introduced a bill (S. 6406) for the relief of the estate of William Ashurst, deceased, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. NELSON (for Mr. KITTREDGE) introduced a bill (S. 6407) granting an increase of pension to Toor Anderson, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BACON introduced a bill (S. 6408) for the relief of the legal representatives of Robert Mitchell, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. OVERMAN introduced a bill (S. 6409) permitting the building of a dam or dams across New River, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PILES submitted an amendment directing the Secretary of the Interior to furnish free to all pensioners franked or penalty envelopes, with the proper pension agent's correct name and address thereon, to be used by them only for the return of their pension vouchers, intended to be proposed by him to the pension appropriation bill, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $30,000 to enable officers of the Army to travel in compliance with orders in connection with the procurement, maintenance, or installation of military material or in connection with the construction of military works, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLINT submitted an amendment proposing to increase the number of clerks at $1,200 each at post-office stations under the First Assistant Postmaster-General from 2,954 to 5,637, intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 to complete the sea wall at Fort Heath, Winthrop, Mass., intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 for the construction of a public highway connecting Fort Heath and Fort Banks, Winthrop, Mass., intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. BULKELEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus claims bill," which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to lie on the table.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

H. R. 19463. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 19475. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 19737. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 19863. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

IRRIGATION IN IMPERIAL VALLEY, CALIFORNIA.

On motion of Mr. FLINT, it was Ordered, That 2,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 246, Sixtieth Congress, first session, Irrigation in Imperial Valley, California, etc., be printed for the use of the Senate.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5589) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was, on page 9, to strike out lines 1 to 4, inclusive.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

COPIAH COUNTY, MISS.

Mr. McLAURIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10075) for the relief of Copiah County, Miss.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to the board of supervisors of Copiah County, Miss., $164.50, in full compensation for costs incurred in defending the suit of the United States against the board of supervisors of Copiah County and the Virginia Bridge and Iron Company, in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of Mississippi, at May term, 1899, held at Jackson, Miss., the suit being instituted to enjoin the board of supervisors of Copiah County from constructing a bridge over Pearl River at Rockport, Miss., which injunction was dissolved by the court and costs adjudged against the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONONGAHELA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. KNOX. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13448) to authorize the counties of Allegheny and Washington, in the State of Pennsylvania, to change the site of the joint county bridge which now crosses the Monongahela River at Monongahela City, Pa., and to construct a new bridge across said river in the place of said present bridge upon a new site.

Mr. LODGE. I do not intend to object to this bill, but after it has been disposed of I shall ask for the regular order, so that we may dispose of the Calendar, which is a very short one.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SNAKE RIVER DAM, WASHINGTON.

Mr. PILES. I ask that the bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington, which is under Rule IX, be taken up for consideration after the morning hour.

Mr. LODGE. I gave notice that I should ask for the regular order, which is the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts demands the regular order. The Secretary will announce the first bill on the Calendar.

Mr. PILES. I am not asking for the consideration of a bill at this time. I am asking for an order for its consideration after the morning hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the proposition of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PILES. I move that after the conclusion of the morning hour the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington. I stated some time ago that I would move the Senate to proceed to its consideration notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that at this stage of the business in the morning hour such a motion can be entertained only by unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. The motion is not yet in order. It is in order only at 1 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the motion?

Mr. LODGE. I only want to dispose of the Calendar. I do not know what the bill is.

Mr. PILES. It is a bill for the construction of a dam across Snake River, in the State of Washington.

Mr. LODGE. I have not any objection to the bill. I only wanted to begin with the Calendar, that is all.

Mr. HEYBURN. I shall not object, but I give notice that it is a bill which will involve discussion, upon which I am not at this time willing to place a limit.

Mr. PILES. I only wanted to take up the bill at 2 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator can move to take it up at 1 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. FLINT. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington a question. It is whether the bill comes within the provisions of the message of the President of the United States where he stated that he would veto any water-power bill sent to him unless it had some regulation as to the charges to be made.

Mr. PILES. A bill similar to this passed the House of Representatives in the last Congress, and it comes here again having passed the House of Representatives at the present session. Whether the President would apply to it the rule stated in his message, I do not know.

Mr. LODGE. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Idaho having given notice that he will debate the bill, I must object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

MINING TECHNOLOGY BRANCH.

The joint resolution (S. R. 35) to provide for a mining technology branch in the Geological Survey was announced as the first business on the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. Let the joint resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICT IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

The bill (S. 4132) creating an additional land district in the State of South Dakota was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. NELSON. Let the bill go over.

Mr. GAMBLE. This bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands on the 5th of February last and has remained on the Calendar undisposed of since that time. It has been reached upon the regular call of the Calendar a number of times, but at the instance of my colleague its consideration has been objected to and the bill has gone over.

Mr. NELSON. At the request of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE], I shall have to object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, the passage of this bill has been petitioned for by a very large number of settlers residing in the northwestern section of my State. A great number of letters have come to me, all urging the passage of the measure. Land-office facilities for this particular section are entirely inadequate to the settlers there located, and will be to prospective settlers. The area embraced within the proposed district is far removed from the land office on the south, and is separated from the one on the east by an Indian reservation of very large extent. The measure has the support of the Interior Department, and its passage is recommended by it. Not one protest has reached me, either to its creation, its boundaries, or the area embraced therein. Consideration of the bill at different times has been delayed on account of objections interposed at the request of the junior Senator from my State when the same has been reached upon the call of the Calendar. It was last reached on the regular call of the Calendar last Tuesday. Practically the only substantial suggestion my colleague had to make to me was that he thought certain lands in North Dakota should be included in the proposed district. As I viewed it, and so stated to my colleague, it occurred to me if the North Dakota delegation desires this it was for them to take the initiative and suggest such an amendment, and that no information had been communicated to me by any member of that delegation that such was their desire.

I conferred with the senior Senator from North Dakota, and he informed me he had no objection to the consideration or passage of the bill. I also conferred with the junior Senator from that State, and he had no objection to its consideration, and suggested that the bill be passed, and if it was thought best to amend the bill in the particular named that question could be considered in the House. This occurred before the bill was reached for consideration last Tuesday. Later, on the same day, I conferred with Congressman HALL, of my own State, and he informed me he had taken the matter up with the Members of the House from North Dakota and they had informed him they had no objections to the measure, and they did not intend to ask to have the bill amended in the manner proposed.

Mr. President, the bill has been pending and on the Calendar for nearly two months, and when reached, at the instance of my colleague an objection has been interposed, and under the rule it has gone over. My colleague has again returned to the State. How long he will remain there I have no information. This is a matter of great importance to the northwestern section of my State.

If consideration of the measure is to be denied and the matter held up indefinitely simply upon an objection made without any grounds specified or reasons given, it seems to me to be an unusual and unwarranted procedure. If there be an objection to it, let the objection be stated. For this there has been ample time. If there is an amendment to be proposed, let the amendment be offered. Ample opportunity has been afforded, and no reason so far has been given why the bill should not at this time be considered. The time of this session is rapidly passing, and if this bill is to receive consideration and pass before this session is concluded, it should be taken up at this time and disposed of. Under the circumstances, I shall insist upon it. No request has come to me either directly or indirectly from my colleague that consideration of the bill be postponed or continued, and no consent thereto has at any time been given by me.

Mr. President, I therefore move the present consideration of the bill, the objection to the contrary notwithstanding.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, notwithstanding the objection.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GAMBLE. I propose the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 6, strike out the word "south" and insert the word "north" in lieu thereof, so as to read:

Thence east on the said third standard parallel north to a point where the same intersects the western boundary line of the county of Schnasse; thence north along the western boundary line of said county to the southwest corner of said county of Schnasse.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAMBLE. On page 2, line 7, I move to strike out all after the word "to" down to and including the word "Schnasse," in line 8, and to insert:

Point where the same intersects the fifth standard parallel north; thence east along the said fifth standard parallel north to a point where the same intersects the range line between ranges 23 and 24 east; thence north along said range line to a point where the same intersects the State line between the States of North Dakota and South Dakota; thence west along the said State line.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

The bill (S. 48) to reimburse depositors of the late Freedman's Savings and Trust Company was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. McLAURIN. I am preparing an amendment to that bill which will be agreed to by the committee. I ask that the bill may go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Mississippi.

DEPUTY CLERK OF CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS.

The bill (H. R. 14282) to authorize the appointment of a deputy clerk at Big Stone Gap, Va., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR.

The bill (S. 4812) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. The senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], who is absent from the city at the present time, has an amendment which he proposes to offer to this bill, and he desires to be heard on his amendment. I am very sorry that the measure has to be postponed further, but under the circumstances I will ask that the bill go over, adding, Mr. President, that at an early day, if necessary, I will move to take up the bill for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

LEASING OF INDIAN LANDS.

The bill (S. 4703) to provide for the leasing of allotted Indian lands for mining purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that all lands allotted to Indians in severalty may be leased for mining purposes for any term of years as may be deemed advisable by the Secretary of the Interior, and authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to perform any and all acts and make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying this provision into full force and effect.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to hear some explanation of the bill. It is a measure of very wide significance. On its face it would seem to authorize the leasing of mineral lands, which include oil lands and coal lands on Indian reservations, without the consent of the Indians. I should like to know from the Senator who reported the bill something about it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The simple fact of the matter is that lands can not be leased for mineral purposes in Indian reservations. The bill refers to allotted lands. The present law requires that a lease shall not be made to exceed five years. Coal lands can not be equipped under a five-year lease. The bill allows a lease for a greater length of time if the Secretary of the Interior so desires.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this bill seems to provide—

That all lands allotted to Indians in severalty may be leased for mining purposes for any term of years as may be deemed advisable by the Secretary of the Interior.

If they have been allotted to Indians, where is the provision that the Indians may be consulted in regard to it?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That the Indian may be consulted?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The lands have been allotted to the Indians.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; but the Secretary of the Interior is authorized here to lease allotted lands?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the way the bill reads.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, no; this provides that the Indians may lease the lands for a greater period than five years, while under the present law they can not.

Mr. HEYBURN. This bill does not say so in such terms as to convey that idea.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Idaho, of course, understands that allotted lands are lands which are held in severalty by the Indians.

Mr. HEYBURN. "That all lands allotted to Indians in severalty may be leased——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. "May by them be leased."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is, the land of the Indians.

Mr. HEYBURN. This bill says, "May be leased for mining purposes." If this is amended so as to provide that the Indians may lease it——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is no more need of that than there is to say that the Senator from Idaho may lease his land.

Mr. HEYBURN. Who owns these lands?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The individual Indians.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, why should not the Indian who owns the land be the one who participates in making a lease?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. He certainly is the one. This removes the restriction that is now upon the Indian in the leasing of his allotted lands.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, I move to insert on line 3, after the word "may," the words "by them."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have no personal objection to it, only it is a rather ludicrous proposition, because nobody else can lease them. The Secretary of the Interior can not make a lease of allotted lands.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like those words inserted.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am perfectly willing that those words shall go into the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like this to be so unambiguous as to leave no doubt about it, because the impression that it made upon my mind in reading it was that there was not a sufficiently definite expression that would indicate that the Indian might lease the land.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Insert the words "by said allottees."

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; insert the words "by said allottees."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is no earthly objection to the amendment, as that is exactly what the bill means.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, after the word "may," it is proposed to insert "by said allottees," so as to read:

That all lands allotted to Indians in severalty may, by said allottees, be leased for mining purposes, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 8, after the word "carrying," I move to strike out the words "this provision" and to insert "the provisions of this act."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, after the word "carrying," it is proposed to strike out the words "this provision" and insert the words "the provisions of this act," so as to read:

For the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPLEMENT OF CREWS OF VESSELS.

The bill (H. R. 225) to amend section 4463 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the complement of crews of vessels, and for the better protection of life, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 4463 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to read as follows:

SEC. 4463. Any vessel of the United States subject to the provisions of this title or to the inspection laws of the United States shall not be navigated unless she shall have in her service and on board such complement of licensed officers and crew as may, in the judgment of the local inspectors who inspect the vessel, be necessary for her safe navigation. The local inspectors shall make in the certificate of inspection of the vessel an entry of such complement of officers and crew, which may be changed from time to time by indorsement on such certificate by local inspectors by reason of change of conditions or employment. Such entry or indorsement shall be subject to a right of appeal, under regulations to be made by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, to the supervising inspector and from him to the supervising inspector-general, who shall have the power to revise, set aside, or affirm the said determination of the local inspectors.

If any such vessel is deprived of the services of any member of the crew without the consent, fault, or collusion of the master, owner, or any person interested in the vessel, the vessel may proceed on her voyage, if in the judgment of the master she is sufficiently manned for such voyage.

If the master shall fail to explain in writing such deficiency in the crew to the local inspectors within twelve hours of the time of the arrival of the vessel at her destination, he shall be liable to a penalty of $50. If the vessel shall have been insufficiently manned, in the judgment of the local inspectors, the master shall be liable to a penalty of $100, or in case of an insufficient number of licensed officers to a penalty of $500.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE FOR ALASKA.

The bill (S. 4748) to amend an act entitled "An act to define and punish crimes in the district of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said district," approved March 3, 1899, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Territories with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 4, line 10, after the word "minor," to strike out "upon or about the premises" and to insert "in or about the rooms where liquor is sold or served," so as to read:

Sixth. That he will not conduct, maintain, or permit the maintenance of any gambling, dance hall, or bawdy house on or in connection with the premises, nor permit any female or minor in or about the rooms where liquor is sold or served.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who introduced this bill, as to the phraseology found on page 2, commencing after the word "reside," in line 18, and reading as follows:

Except that the respective district judges may in their discretion grant licenses at regularly established road houses to the keeper of said road houses on main traveled post-roads and post trails in the district.

I do not know what they call "road houses" in the district of Alaska, but in my section of the country a road house is a pretty bad place, and we are not in the habit of licensing them. On the contrary, we are in the habit of closing them out. I should like the Senator from Minnesota to explain to me wherein there is any difference in Alaska in that respect.

Mr. NELSON. The term "road house" in Alaska has a perfectly well-defined and well-understood meaning. They are little country taverns along the trails and roads where packers go to get a night's lodging for themselves and a place to feed their mules or horses. They are as reputable places as any that can be found in the shape of country taverns anywhere; but in that section of the country they have received the name of "road houses." I stopped at one of them in my trip in Alaska. They are generally made of spruce logs and in a very primitive condition; but they are adapted to the wants of the country. As a rule, they are as orderly and well kept as hotels in that country can be kept. They are known throughout the whole district of Alaska by the term "road house." They have that designation. I am aware of what the Senator from New Hampshire refers to; but the meaning that is applied to the term here at home in the States does not apply to such institutions in Alaska.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have not examined this bill carefully. I know the Senator from Minnesota has done so, and he knows much more about Alaskan matters than I pretend to know. I will ask the Senator why the discretion of granting licenses to this class of places is put in the hands of the district judges?

Mr. NELSON. There is no other licensing power in Alaska. All Alaskan licenses, trade licenses, liquor licenses, and others, are left in the hands of the district judges. They have no other government there. Whatever civil government there is in Alaska is in the hands of the district judges; and there is no other body or any other authority to pass upon licenses.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do district judges grant all licenses in Alaska?

Mr. NELSON. All licenses are granted by the district judges; not only liquor licenses, but trade licenses.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I wanted to find out.

Mr. NELSON. And that has always been the law since they have had a license system in Alaska.

Mr. GALLINGER. It may be a good system, and very likely is. I will now ask the Senator, Mr. President, what the general purpose of this bill is. I have noticed somewhere that it proposes to change the places where liquors may be sold from below, on the ground floor, to upstairs.

Mr. NELSON. There is nothing of that kind in the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is nothing like that?

Mr. NELSON. The object is to restrict this to regular town or mining settlements and to road houses and to increase the license. The chief amendment in this bill relates to the matter of licenses. Under existing law they have a sliding scale based upon population; but the population is continually fluctuating, and every time there is a change in population of a given district they proceed to have the license changed. This bill makes it a fixed amount in every case.

Mr. GALLINGER. And under existing law, I will ask the Senator, Do not the district judges have authority to issue licenses to these so-called "road houses" if they are hotels?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; they have.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, why is it necessary to grant them the authority specifically in this bill?

Mr. NELSON. Because it makes a distinction. The ordinary retail liquor license is fixed at $1,000 now, but the little road houses along the trails can not afford to pay that, and there is established a reduced scale for those road houses.

Mr. GALLINGER. How much reduction is made?

Mr. NELSON. Under the former law they had to pay a minimum license of $500, and under this bill it is $250.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if, when he stopped at one of these places, he discovered that anybody was suffering for intoxicating liquors under the existing license?

Mr. NELSON. The road house where I stopped, which was some 15 or 20 miles out of Valdez, sold no liquor at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was a good hotel.

Mr. NELSON. But it was simply a plain road house. They had sold liquor; they had been authorized to sell liquor there; but the man who kept it at that time did not sell any.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will not pursue my inquiries any further.

Mr. NELSON. I will say in reference to this bill that the chief object of it was, first of all, to make a fixed standard as to the license without regard to population, and, in the next place, to limit it to the mining camps and road houses, and, in the third place, to prevent all kinds of gambling. If the Senator would read the bill, he would find that provision is made for that.

Mr. GALLINGER. In what section, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. NELSON. I will read it in a moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, of course I take the Senator's word, and the provision he has referred to is certainly a very meritorious one.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to the Senator, without going into details, that this bill was prepared under the direction of Governor Hoggatt, of that district, who has made great efforts to suppress all kinds of gambling and other vicious practices and to regulate the liquor traffic so far as it is possible to regulate it in that district.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. GALLINGER. Knowing the interest the Senator has in Alaskan matters and particularly in the matter of regulating the liquor traffic, I will listen to what the Senator has doubtless told me forty times already. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. For the information of my friend from New Hampshire, I will say that some eight years since, I think, we took issue upon this proposition. I am in sympathy with the temperance cause, having been born in the State of Maine, which is a prohibitory State so far as the sale of liquor in public is concerned, although there is no trouble getting it quietly anywhere. [Laughter.] My friend from Alaska said to me: "PERKINS, how can you consistently support a measure for Alaska providing for a high license or any other license for retailing liquor?" I replied that I did it in the interest of good government.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will interrupt the Senator to say that he must not refer to me as "my friend from Alaska."

Mr. PERKINS. Well, the Senator has, I understand, a mining claim in that territory; so I suppose that makes him a resident. [Laughter.] I said to him—and I wish to repeat it today—that I have done more for the cause of temperance in becoming the author of this bill and using my influence to have it become a law than all the temperance societies in the State of New Hampshire and my own native State of Maine, for the reason that when the district of Alaska was a prohibition Territory and a premium was put upon the smuggling of liquor into the Territory, I was operating steamers at the time, and every coal passer, every steward, every waiter, and every sailor on the ship was more or less of a smuggler. I remember one instance where in the compartment of one of our ships there were twenty-five barrels of sugar. It was melted by the water in the tank or in the compartment of the ship, and when the sugar was gone there were found sixteen kegs of whisky remaining in the barrels. So, Mr. President, the law put a premium upon the smuggling of liquor into the district of Alaska; and as a result of that fact it was anything but a prohibition Territory. In the town of Juneau, Mr. Hamlin, who was then Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, informed me that there were twenty-eight saloons when he visited that town. After the law—for which my friend from New Hampshire, I am sorry to say, did not vote—was enacted, instead of twenty-eight saloons in Juneau the number was reduced to seven, I think; and each saloon keeper became an officer of the law, as it were, to see that others did not enjoy a privilege that he was obliged to pay for.

The fund derived from the high liquor license in Alaska went into the school fund, and it has enabled us to educate the young lady Esquimaux and the Indians of that Territory. The law has been productive of more good than I can express in the short time that is allotted for the consideration of this bill.

I want to repeat to my friend from New Hampshire, who later will be from Alaska, that we have done more for the cause of temperance in the enactment of this measure than any legislative act that I can call to mind.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call attention——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to pages 3 and 4 of the bill. On page 3 there is a provision which requires that a person desiring a license shall make a written application, and the bill specifies what the application shall contain. I call the Senator's attention also to the following item on page 4:

Sixth. That he will not conduct, maintain, or permit the maintenance of any gambling, dance hall, or bawdy house on or in connection with the premises, nor permit any female or minor in or about the rooms where liquor is sold or served.

The next paragraph provides:

That if any false statement is made in any part of such petition or affidavit the petitioner or petitioners shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and upon conviction thereof his license shall be revoked and he shall be subject to the penalties provided by law for the crime of perjury.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have no disposition to delay the consideration of the bill. My attention was attracted by that word "road house." I thought if it had not a different signification from what it has in our part of the country such places ought not to be licensed.

Mr. NELSON. The term "road house" simply refers to the little taverns along the trails and roads.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am inclined to think, from the casual examination I have given to it, that it is a good bill, and that it will result in good rather than harm. For that reason I hope it will pass.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Territories was, on page 5, line 22, after the word "be," to strike out "one" and insert "two," so as to read:

That the fee for a wholesale license shall be $2,000 per annum, and for a barroom or retail license $1,000 per annum, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM RADCLIFFE.

The bill (S. 5207) for the relief of William Radcliffe was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $25,000 to pay William Radcliffe, a British subject, for damages caused by destruction of his fish hatchery and property in Delta, Colo., by a mob in 1901.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POWER AND RESERVOIR SITES ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The bill (S. 5604) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to reserve lands on Indian reservations for power and reservoir sites, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, after the word "shall," at the end of line 8, to strike out "dispose of the lands so reserved either on sealed bids or at public outcry to the highest bidder on such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, the proceeds to be used for the benefit of the Indians," and insert "report to Congress such reservation;" and on page 2, line 7, after the word "as," to strike out "the allottees or their successors can, by appropriate proceedings, take charge of and conduct their own irrigation systems; thereupon the reservoir sites shall be conveyed to the company or corporation formed by the persons benefited by the irrigation system, under such rules and regulations and on such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe," and insert "Congress may further legislate thereon;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to reserve for power sites all lands adjacent to falls and rapids in any stream or streams within an Indian reservation before the surplus lands of such reservation are opened to settlement or entry under either the public-land laws or special acts of Congress, and he shall report to Congress such reservation; and he is also authorized and directed to reserve such natural reservoir sites on any Indian reservation as may be needed to impound water to irrigate lands allotted to the Indians of such reservation, and the sites so reserved shall be held in trust for the allottees whose lands are benefited by the irrigation system until such time as Congress may further legislate thereon.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LORA E. REED.

The bill (S. 1160) to correct the military record of Lora E. Reed was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "discharge," to insert:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of Lora E. Reed, late a member of Battery I, First Regiment Ohio Artillery, and to issue to him an honorable discharge: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF GEORGE A. ARMSTRONG.

The bill (S. 1744) for the relief of the heirs of George A. Armstrong was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the heirs of George A. Armstrong, late captain Company D, Seventh Michigan Cavalry, $532.45, as pay and emoluments from January 28, 1864, to May 30, 1864, inclusive.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

The bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the "Bowman and Tucker acts," was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that that bill may go over without prejudice.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Utah who has asked that the bill go over without prejudice, when it is proposed that the bill known as the "omnibus claims bill" will be taken up for consideration? It is a very important bill, and contains many claims that ought to be paid.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that the chairman of the Committee on Claims [Mr. FULTON] is absent from the city. He is now in Oregon, and intends to return between the 20th and 25th of April. He does not desire the bill to be considered until his return.

Mr. McCREARY. He prefers that the bill should not be considered until he returns?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Utah, the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

CONDEMNATION OF LANDS FOR STREETS.

The bill (S. 4814) to amend section 491n of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 2, line 3, after the word "record," to strike out "or other title to the property condemned as imperfect" and insert "is imperfect or the title to the property is in dispute or uncertain;" and, in line 8, after the word "Columbia," to insert "for the use of the rightful owners," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia,' regulating proceedings for condemnation of lands for streets," approved April 30, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that section 491n thereof will read as follows:

"SEC. 491n. In case any of the owners of land heretofore or hereafter condemned for public use, whether under the provisions of said code or by virtue of any special or general act of Congress, are under disability or can not be found, or neglect or refuse to receive the money awarded to them; or in case the record is imperfect or the title to the property is in dispute or uncertain, the money due the owners of the property for damages for land taken may be deposited in the registry of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, for the use of the rightful owners, without cost or expense to said District; and thereupon the title to the land condemned shall become vested in the District of Columbia."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SNAKE RIVER DAM, WASHINGTON.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, referring to Calendar No. 74, House bill 7618, to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington, I should like to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that bill at 2 o'clock today. The Senator from Idaho and myself——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington moves that at 2 o'clock the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to the bill or to taking it up at 2 o'clock; but as a matter of parliamentary order I think that motion is not correct. You either have to make a special order to take a certain bill up at a certain hour, or you must move at that hour to take it up. I do not think you can make a motion in advance. The Senator can ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up at 2 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington can move to take it up now and then ask to lay it aside until 2 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; he can do that.

Mr. PILES. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PILES. Now I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside until the hour of 2 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that the bill be now laid aside and that its consideration be resumed at 2 o'clock. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

The bill (S. 665) for the relief of Richard A. Proctor was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Richard A. Proctor $300 for use of lands near Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo., as part of the target range during the seasons of 1906 and 1907.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. E. COUCH.

The bill (H. R. 12292) for the relief of A. E. Couch was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $42.85 to pay to A. E. Couch, of Carterton, Russell County, Va., that being the amount of costs deposited by him with L. P. Summers, collector of the sixth collection district of Virginia, and inadvertently by the collector deposited to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, when it should have been deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury as an offer of compromise of a certain criminal prosecution then pending in the United States district court for the western district of Virginia against A. E. Couch, the sum having been deposited in the Treasury of the United States on the 17th of May, 1905.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROMAN SCHOLTER.

The bill (H. R. 6664) for the relief of Roman Scholter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Roman Scholter, of Oshkosh, Wis., $432, that amount having been erroneously paid by him to the United States Government as duty upon pictorial paintings on glass, being works of art imported expressly for presentation to an incorporated religious society.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

D. J. HOLMES.

The bill (S. 437) for the relief of D. J. Holmes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported by the Committee on Public Lands, with an amendment in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "eight hundred and ninety-five," and insert "five hundred," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury, be, and he is hereby, directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to D. J. Holmes, of Portland, Oreg., the sum of $500, in full satisfaction for moneys expended by said Holmes on preemption claim to the northwest quarter of section 10, in township 6 south, of range 12 east of the Willamette meridian, in The Dalles land district, State of Oregon, on which he filed declaratory statement No. 4688, June 1, 1885, and on which he settled May 17, 1885, and from which he was ousted by the same being included by a certain survey in the Warm Springs Indian Reservation in said State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. EDMUND STRONG.

The bill (H. R. 15070) for the relief of J. Edmund Strong was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to J. Edmund Strong $434.89.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHEVY CHASE, MD.

The bill (S. 4107) to authorize the town of Chevy Chase, Md., to connect its water system with the water system of the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. DE L. LAFITTE.

The bill (S. 5268) for the relief of J. de L. Lafitte was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

ASSIGNEE OF WARNER BAILEY.

The bill (S. 5620) to authorize the issuance of a patent to the assignee of Warner Bailey, for land located in Choctaw County, State of Alabama, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to insert at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the said patent shall be in full satisfaction of and shall extinguish military bounty land warrants Nos. 75743 and 75183, issued to Warner Bailey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SETH WARDELL.

The bill (S. 5227) granting an honorable discharge to Seth Wardell, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, in line 4, to strike out "an honorable" and insert "a," so as make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant a discharge to Seth Wardell, late seaman U. S. sloop of war Ino.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I move to insert at the end of the bill the amendment I send to the desk, which is usual on such bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS L. RODGERS.

The bill (S. 4782) to remove the charge of desertion against Thomas L. Rodgers was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment to strike out "an honorable" in line 8, and insert "a," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now borne on the records of the Navy Department against the name of Thomas L. Rodgers, formerly a landsman on the U. S. S. Monadnock, to amend his naval record accordingly, and to issue to said Thomas L. Rodgers a discharge.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I move the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROCK RIVER BRIDGE, ILLINOIS.

The bill (S. 6131) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Rock River, State of Illinois, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS TO CERTAIN SOLDIERS, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 603) granting an increase of pension to John A. M. La Pierre was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEFECTS IN NATURALIZATION PROCEEDINGS.

The bill (S. 388) to confirm and legalize prior admissions to citizenship of the United States where the judge or clerk of the court administering the oath to the applicant or his witnesses has failed to sign or seal the record, oath, or the judgment of admission, and to establish a proper record of such citizenship, was considererd as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Immigration with amendments.

Mr. McCREARY. This seems to be an important bill. I should like for the member of the committee who reported it to make some explanation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator who reported the bill is not present, but the bill came from the Committee on Immigration, and I gave it a great deal of attention, both in the committee and here. I believe it to be a thoroughly proper bill. It is to cure certain defects in the past in cases of naturalization under the old territorial laws, and where the law as now existing would exclude certain persons who were naturalized under the old laws. An amendment has been proposed which completely guards the Government. The bill has the unanimous report of the committee, of which I think the Senator from Kentucky is a member.

Mr. McCREARY. I had the honor of serving on the Committee on Immigration with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and I know he is a very careful Senator and I am satisfied.

Mr. CLAY. With the permission of the Senator from Massachusetts, I should like to make an inquiry. As I caught the reading of the bill, it simply refers to citizens of North Dakota who had obtained citizenship.

Mr. LODGE. It was introduced simply for citizens of North Dakota. The Senator from Idaho thought it wiser, and I think properly, to make it apply to similar cases in other Territories.

Mr. CLAY. It has been amended in that way?

Mr. LODGE. It has been amended in that sense.

Mr. CLAY. I have nothing further to say about it.

Mr. LODGE. It is to cure defects in Territorial records.

Mr. CLAY. I thought it was rather peculiar to pass a bill having reference to one State.

Mr. LODGE. It has been amended in that respect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments proposed by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendments of the Committee on Immigration were, on page 1, section 1, line 3, after the word "applicant," to strike out "in the Territory of Dakota" and insert "in any Territory of the United States;" and on page 2, line 4, after the word "said," to strike out "action" and insert "section," so as to read:

That in any case where an applicant in any Territory of the United States to become a citizen of the United States has heretofore taken the oath provided in the second subdivision of section 2165 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and has complied with the third subdivision of said section, and his said oath or affidavit, or the oaths or affidavits of his witnesses, have been taken in good faith for the purpose of admitting him to citizenship of the United States, and in open court before either the clerk of such court as is mentioned in said section or before the judge thereof, such oath administered by either the clerk of said court or the judge thereof in open court shall be deemed a full compliance with subdivisions second and third of said section.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, section 2, line 10, after the word "date," to insert:

That nothing in this act contained shall be construed so as to deprive the Government of the right conferred by section 15 of the naturalization act of June 29, 1906, to secure the cancellation of illegally or irregularly granted certificates of citizenship.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The bill (H. R. 15230) to amend an act approved February 28, 1901, entitled "An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, in line 9, after "by," to strike out "sickness or," so as to read:

That hereafter whenever any member of the fire department of the District of Columbia in the actual discharge of his duty shall become so disabled by injury as to require medical or surgical services or treatment other than such as can be rendered by the board of police and fire surgeons, the expense of such services or treatment may be paid from the firemen's pension fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PETER M'KAY.

The bill (S. 2743) for the relief of Peter McKay was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Peter McKay $4,000 as full compensation for permanent injuries received by him by being struck with a large piece of log hurled by the explosion of an excessive blast of powder discharged without warning by employees of the United States Government.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JENNIE CARROLL AND MABEL H. LAZEAR.

The bill (S. 6350) granting an increase of pension to Jennie Carroll and Mabel H. Lazear was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll at $125 a month each the names of Jennie Carroll, widow of James Carroll, major and surgeon, United States Army, and Mabel H. Lazear, widow of Dr. Jesse W. Lazear, late acting assistant contract surgeon, United States Army, in special recognition of the eminent services of said their husbands in discovering the means of preventing, as well as the cause and method of transmission and propagation of, yellow fever.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think it proper to state in connection with this bill granting pensions to Jennie Carroll and Mabel H. Lazear a few of the facts upon which the pension is based.

Some years ago we granted a pension to the widow of Maj. Walter Reed, who was a physician and made experiments to determine the cause of yellow fever in Cuba. He suffered himself to be bitten by mosquitoes and afterwards died, though he did not die as the result of the yellow fever which was contracted. We passed through the Senate a bill for the pension of his widow at $35 a month. It came up in the House of Representatives and was increased to $125 a month. Without going to conference, I think, the Senate agreed to the House amendment.

There were two others, the husbands of the ladies mentioned in this bill, Doctor Carroll and Doctor Lazear, who were serving under Major Reed at that time, who, perhaps, did even more than he did in the matter of ascertaining the actual cause of yellow fever. He was stationed in the city of Washington most of the time, and they were operating in Cuba during that period. One died as the direct result of the bite of a mosquito which had been allowed to fill itself with blood from a yellow-fever patient. The other one did not die of that cause, but was equally instrumental in ascertaining this great truth. I therefore took it upon myself to make a rather full report upon all of the investigations that were made to determine the cause of the spread of yellow fever.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Regarding Doctor Reed, what did I understand the Senator to say, that he was not in the field in Cuba; that he was here in Washington?

Mr. McCUMBER. Most of the time his services were performed here. He was in Cuba part of the time, and of course he subjected himself while in Cuba to this danger. But I stated, merely in explanation, to show the services of these persons, that they were in the field all the time while his duty required him much of the time to be here.

Mr. WARREN. I make no objection to the provisions proposed by the Senator, but having had the case of Doctor Reed under investigation I think the facts will warrant the assertion that he was very faithful to that work, and subjected himself to all of the risks that were necessary to accomplish the result.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think I have properly stated it in the report, in which I state:

Major Reed was the head of the commission, but his duties required him to be in Washington the greater part of the time, and the actual work of making the experiments and demonstrating the truth of the theory was carried on in Cuba by Major Carroll and Doctor Lazear.

I think that states the facts correctly. I only desire to say that in my candid opinion, considering the amount of pensions granted in other cases, these pensions are somewhat excessive; but having already put ourselves upon record in granting a pension of $125 a month to the widow of Major Reed, the committee could not justify itself if it refused to grant to the widows of other officers who did equally meritorious work an equal amount.

Mr. WARREN. What is the amount?

Mr. McCUMBER. The amount is $125 a month. I think it is excessive, but as we have been excessive in one instance, we can not help but grant the same amount of pension in the other cases.

Mr. McCREARY. I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. McCREARY. I understand Jane Carroll is the widow of Major Carroll and Mabel G. Lazear is the widow of Doctor Lazear.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. McCREARY. These two gentlemen exposed their lives in order to make a great discovery. Were they not among the leading men who did expose their lives in order to establish the fact that yellow fever is transmitted by mosquitoes?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is certainly correct.

Mr. McCREARY. I do not agree with the statement made by the Senator from North Dakota that the pension is too much. I think we owe it to the widows of these two men who made the great discovery to give them at least $125 a month apiece.

Mr. McCUMBER. I made my statement simply based upon the pensions that we are paying to soldiers. A man who in the late great civil war made a charge upon an open battery, where he was absolutely sure of meeting death, it seems to me did as great a service to his country and was equally courageous. For my part, I would take chances with a mosquito rather than face the mouth of a cannon; and if we were to grant pensions to widows based upon the courage, the service, and the sacrifices of their husbands, I would be inclined to give just as much to the widow of a man who allowed himself to be killed by walking into certain death in the face of cannon as I would to a man who took his chances with a mosquito.

Mr. McCREARY. I think the cases are entirely different. A man who charges a battery exposes his own life and he shows that he is a patriot by fighting for his country. But this great discovery is beneficial to thousands, almost hundreds of thousands of persons, and the man or the men who expose their lives for the purpose of benefiting so many hundreds of thousands of their fellow-men, I think, deserve great credit.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the soldier in the performance of his duty charges the battery, and he loses his life in doing a patriotic act. These two physicians held commissions in the Medical Department of the Army, and their duty ceased when they performed the ordinary duties which are required of surgeons in the Army. In performing this added service, making themselves subject to death as the result of these experiments, they went outside and beyond what could reasonably have been demanded of them, and lost their lives as a result. I quite agree with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] that their widows deserve special recognition because of that fact. I think the compensation is not excessive. When the case of Mrs. Reed was before the Senate, I recall the fact that I made a special appeal in her behalf, and we granted her a pension of $125 a month. I feel sure the widows of these two other brave surgeons should be recognized to the same extent, and I am gratified to know there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND AT BOISE CITY, IDAHO.

The bill (S. 6136) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to certain lands to Boise City was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the words "Secretary of," to strike out the words "the Interior" and insert the word "War," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent in fee to Boise City, a municipal corporation, to that tract of land lying within the boundaries of the United States military reservation at Boise City, Ada County, Idaho, and bounded and described as follows:

Beginning at a stone marking the southwest boundary of the United States military reservation, thence north 22° 12′ west 2,719.86 feet; thence north 20° west 351.84 feet; thence north 70° east 15.5 feet to a line 22 feet from the center of the Capital Water Company's ditch; thence in an easterly direction following a line 22 feet from the center line of said ditch and parallel to the same to the intersection with said line of the southeasterly boundary of the reservation; thence south 70° west to the point of beginning, subject to any rights of the Capital Water Company for the use of said grounds as a right of way or an easement to convey water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of War to issue patent to certain lands to Boise, Idaho."

LANDS AT FORT LOGAN, COLO.

The bill (S. 5862) to purchase certain lands adjacent to the present site of Fort Logan, Colo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INLAND WATERWAY.

The bill (S. 754) for ascertaining the feasibility and probable cost of constructing a canal from the Tennessee River, at or near the city of Chattanooga, in the State of Tennessee, to the navigable waters of the Ocmulgee River, in the State of Georgia, by which there will be furnished adequate water communication by the shortest and most practicable route between the Atlantic Ocean and the navigable waters in the rivers of the Mississippi Valley, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURVEY OF WOOD RIVER, OREGON.

The next business on the Calendar was the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. FULTON and reported by Mr. MCLAURIN, from the Committee on Commerce, which was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made for a project of improvement of Wood River from the point where it empties into Klamath Lake, in Klamath County, Oreg., to the head of navigation, and report the same to Congress.

UNIFORM WAREHOUSE RECEIPTS.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill (S. 1474) to make uniform the law of warehouse receipts in the District of Columbia was passed over at the suggestion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], who informs me he has no objection to the bill. It was partly read. I ask that it be now taken up for further consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, and the reading was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the blank remain. The other House can fill it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a few words. If the Senator will permit me to explain the bill——

Mr. TELLER. That is what I want.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill was given every consideration by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and in his report he calls attention to its importance. It seems that it was first considered by the conference of commissioners on uniform State laws, of whom Professor Williston, of the Harvard Law School, was a member; that it was adopted and recommended by the conference of that commission in August; that it was afterwards passed upon favorably by the American Bar Association, the American Bankers' Association, the American Warehouseman's Association, and by a large number of chambers of commerce and boards of trade, and it has been enacted into law in the States of New York, Illinois, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Connecticut, and Iowa. The Senator from Vermont adds in his report:

As indicating the importance of the measure, it was stated that warehoused goods, consisting of the products of farms, mines, and manufactories, to the estimated value of $300,000,000, are constantly in the warehouses of the country, and that this measure will make the warehouse receipts issued for these values an excellent medium of exchange, and that the legislation will thus become an important factor in the commerce of the country.

I feel sure that the bill is a very valuable and safe piece of legislation, but of course if there is an objection, it will go over, and the Senator from Vermont will give it his attention when he is present.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator if it is confined to the District of Columbia?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; it applies only to the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLAY. That is what I thought.

Mr. GALLINGER. Six of the great States of the Union have enacted laws in precise terms. It is intended that the District of Columbia shall enact it. It applies to no State, of course.

Mr. CULBERSON. I may have misunderstood the Senator, but I understood him to ask that the bill might go over until the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I said if there was any objection, of course, it would go over, and the Senator from Vermont, who reported the bill, will be present at a later day to answer any questions that may be propounded. He knows more about it than I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. I gather from the letter of the president of the Board of Commissioners that the bill was not drafted by any Senator, but it was drafted and sent to the Senate by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is correct.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have not had time to examine the bill. It is a bill of some length and I ask that it may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

Mr. GALLINGER. Retaining its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Retaining its place on the calendar.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. As that completes the Calendar, I should like to have a short executive session. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

FUR SEAL FISHERIES.

Mr. LODGE, at the request of Mr. FORAKER, moved to reconsider the vote of the 25th instant, ordering Senate Document No. 407 to be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LODGE, at the request of Mr. FORAKER, the paper was withdrawn from the files of the Senate.

SNAKE RIVER DAM, WASHINGTON.

Mr. PILES. I now ask that the bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington, be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. ANKENY. I wish to say, Mr. President, that this is simply a local bill which will provide for the irrigation of over 20,000 acres of land which has heretofore been practically worthless.

Mr. PILES. One hundred thousand acres.

Mr. ANKENY. This is simply a local affair, and we believe all objections to it have been removed. As I understand, it is simply a matter of irrigation. Under the bill it is to be regulated by the Secretary of War, and no damage will be done by this dam to navigation on the Snake River. The irrigation of this land will be to the interest and benefit of many. I hope the bill may be speedily passed.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington a question. Does the bill provide for electrical power?

Mr. ANKENY. Yes, sir; the bill does.

Mr. FRYE. Is the Senator aware that the President has stated that he will veto any bill which provides for the creation of electrical power unless provision is made by which the United States shall be protected in all its rights and shall receive remuneration for the power which is granted?

Mr. ANKENY. When the bill was drawn the President had not yet made that statement.

Mr. FRYE. The President wrote a letter to me and I communicated it to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ANKENY. I do.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it will be some time before a bill allowing the United States Government to take compensation for the use of water in the States will pass this body. I am prepared to show, whenever some proper bill comes before the Senate, that the Supreme Court, at least thirty times in fifty years, has declared that the water of rivers, navigable and nonnavigable, belongs to the States and not to the General Government. I have the documents in my brief, and I shall present them some day.

This bill, Mr. President, is in the usual form. The State of Idaho has an unquestioned right to allow a dam to be built in any stream that is not actually navigable. The Snake River is navigable in part and in part is not navigable. There are some navigable stretches and some that are not navigable. I am somewhat familiar with the Snake River, but I do not know where this particular point is.

Mr. ANKENY. I would say to the Senator from Colorado that it is at or near Fivemile Rapids, on the Snake River, just above its junction with the Columbia River.

Mr. FRYE. I am not objecting to the bill. It was reported favorably from the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman. I was simply stating the fact for the consideration of the Senator of the communication which I had from the President.

Mr. GALLINGER. Which came subsequent to the report.

Mr. FRYE. Yes; it came subsequent to the report.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, it will be a good while before we shall recognize the right of the General Government to invade the States in that particular, and in order to do so we shall have to overturn the Supreme Court, which has passed on this subject at least thirty times, as I have stated. We could overturn the Supreme Court, but I do not think we shall.

There can be no objection to passing this bill, except that it is a useless thing. The State of Idaho can do this very thing, and the Government can not prevent it from doing it, because it does not interfere with the navigability of that stream. It is not navigable at this point, as I understand.

Mr. ANKENY. I will say for the information of the Senator that this ditch or dam proposition is entirely within the State of Washington—my State and my county, for that matter.

Mr. TELLER. Then, I understand, it is in the State of Washington?

Mr. ANKENY. Yes; it is near Fivemile Rapids, in the State of Washington.

Mr. FRYE. The bill has the approval of the Secretary of War.

Mr. TELLER. The Secretary of War is a better lawyer than the President.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if it is in order at this time, I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. BORAH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "six," at the end of line 10, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That said Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, shall construct, operate, and maintain locks, perpetual and free of charge or toll to navigation and navigators, and shall so use said stream as not in any manner to obstruct, embarrass, or retard navigation.

Mr. ANKENY. I accept that amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. TELLER. I think there is a general law which covers that, although there is no objection to putting the amendment in, I suppose.

Mr. BORAH. There may be a general law.

Mr. TELLER. There is a general law that covers that, but there is no objection to this amendment.

Mr. BORAH. I think this amendment can do no harm, as the general law may not be specific enough to cover this particular matter.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think it will do any harm.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. ANKENY. We accept the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. HEYBURN. They have accepted the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. They can not accept it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire, before anything is agreed to on this bill, to present some remarks to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will put the question on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho, unless the senior Senator from Idaho desires to be heard on it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I can speak on the bill as well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to submit some suggestions in regard to this proposed legislation that go to the entire question.

Mr. TELLER. So do I.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Snake River is a navigable stream. It makes the State of Idaho a seaboard State. It gives the State of Idaho the only seaport that it has or can have, because it is at the head of the navigation of the Snake River that the city of Lewiston is situated, and I certainly do not intend to sit idly by and see some private enterprise construct a dam across the Snake River quite a distance below the city of Lewiston, so that the vessels that traverse that river between the city of Lewiston and the sea will be at the mercy of a private enterprise that has constructed a dam under a charter that only gives it a limit of fifty years of life. I object to any private enterprise constructing a dam across a navigable river, and especially for an irrigation project or a power project that is purely speculative in its character.

It is contended here every time opposition is suggested to this measure that under the law the Secretary of War will protect us against the irresponsibility of the parties constructing this dam. We do not care for a delegated defense. The law itself is a sufficient defense unless we pull it down or open the door to this kind of improvident legislation.

This proposed dam is not in the State of Idaho, and neither the State of Idaho nor its legislature would have any control whatever over it. The line between Idaho and Washington is immediately below the city of Lewiston. It is within a mile of the city of Lewiston. They are proposing in the State of Washington to treat this great river, which is as large as the Potomac in front of this city, as though it were the private property of the State of Washington, and they are proposing to construct a dam entirely across the river some 35 feet in height; then they are proposing to make an artificial canal around the end of this dam and put the locks of the canal on private property, and they are proposing to do it by a private corporation.

I do not know that the map of their proposed work was before the committee that reported this bill, and I will just pass it along to the chairman.

During the last Congress I objected to the consideration of this bill on the same ground upon which I shall now submit my objection. But, waiving that for the moment, I asked for a statement as to the responsibility of the corporation seeking for this right at the hands of Congress. I have it before me, bearing the signature of the secretary and treasurer of the company:

TREASURER'S REPORT.

OFFICE OF THE BENTON WATER COMPANY,
Richland, Wash., January 1, 1908.

Statement of assets and liabilities January 1, 1908.

Assets:
Lands in Franklin County	$27,000.00
Buildings, tools, live stock, boat, and telephone line	25,000.00
Bills receivable, contracts, and accounts	48,352.00
Irrigating system, lands irrigated, and city property	253,425.00
Cash	10,143.75
Total	363,920.75

That is the statement of their assets:

Liabilities:
Capital stock	$25,000.00
Reserve fund	25,282.00
Accounts payable	13,470.00
Real estate, surplus, and undivided profits	300,168.75
Total	363,920.75

That is their financial statement for which I called. Their articles of incorporation state:

ARTICLE I.

The name of this corporation is the Benton Water Company.

ARTICLE II.

The objects for which this corporation is formed are as follows:

1. To own, construct, operate, and maintain a water-power plant for electrical, manufacturing, irrigating, and other purposes.

2. To build, own, operate, and maintain irrigation canals and ditches; acquire and make appropriations of water; sell water rights, and charge and receive rentals and tolls for supplying water for irrigation and domestic purposes.

3. To develop the water power of the Yakima River, in township 9, range 28 east, Willamette meridian, for the purpose of generating electricity for use for light and power. To take and receive from any public or private corporation franchises and privileges; to generate and transmit electric power to other points in the State of Washington, and to sell the same.

4. To borrow money, execute its promissory note therefor; to issue bonds and secure the same by mortgage upon its own property; to buy, improve land, and to lease, sell, or convey the same and to do everything else which may be done necessary and convenient to carry out the objects set forth in these articles of incorporation.

ARTICLE III.

The principal place of business of this corporation shall be at Kennewick, Yakima County, Wash.

ARTICLE IV.

The capital stock of this corporation is hereby fixed at $25,000, to be divided into 250 shares of the par value of $100 each.

ARTICLE V.

The time of existence of this corporation is hereby fixed at fifty years.

ARTICLE VI.

The number of trustees is hereby fixed at four, and the names of those who shall manage this corporation's business until August 1, 1905, are W. R. Amon, Howard S. Amon, Albert L. Smith, and Bruce E. McGregor.

Those are the articles of incorporation of the company that is asking Congress to give them the right to build a dam across this great navigable river at Fivemile Rapids, within the State of Washington, under a plan, as outlined by their statement and prospectus, which would cost not less than two and one-half million dollars. A lot of irresponsible speculators who, when I asked them the question here, upon the occasion of their visiting me to solicit the withdrawal of my objection, said that they could not give me the inside of this matter and could not disclose their principals, ask Congress to pass a law permitting them to enter upon this enterprise. They have $10,000 in cash, and they owe about $13,000, if I remember the figures in the statement.

They say that the act of Congress providing that nothing can be done except upon the approval of the Secretary of War is sufficient to protect the rights of all. Pardon me for just a moment, and I shall call your attention to it. It is the act of June 21, 1906:

The persons owning or operating any such dam shall maintain, at their own expense, such lights and other signals thereon and such fishways as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall prescribe.

SEC. 4. That all rights acquired under this act shall cease and be determined if the person, company, or corporation acquiring such rights shall, at any time, fail to comply with any of the provisions and requirements of the act, or with any of the stipulations and conditions that may be prescribed as aforesaid by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War.

SEC. 5. That any persons who shall fail or refuse to comply with the lawful order of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, made in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a violation of this act, and any persons who shall be guilty of a violation of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, and every month such persons shall remain in default shall be deemed a new offense and subject such persons to additional penalties therefor; and in addition to the penalties above described the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may, upon refusal of the persons owning or controlling any such dam and accessory works to comply with any lawful order issued by the Secretary of War or Chief of Engineers in regard thereto, cause the removal of such dam and accessory works as an obstruction to navigation at the expense of the persons owning or controlling such dam.

They say that is sufficient protection to justify Congress in giving authority to a private enterprise to enter upon this navigable river and shut us off from the sea.

Mr. President, no greater injury could be inflicted upon the State of Idaho than for Congress to authorize a private enterprise of such insignificant pretensions and ability as this appears to be upon the face of their own papers, to enter upon a work which, it is safe to say, if they start at all, would result in an unfinished condition of this work that would leave the river obstructed and nonnavigable, without any redress to the State of Idaho or the people interested in maintaining the navigation upon this river.

I believe that if the Government of the United States were to enter upon this work and build this dam, it could and would be beneficial to the navigation of the river, because the Government would construct a dam, permanent in its character, sufficient, through the means of locks, etc., for the passage of vessels, and you could rely upon its being maintained as long as the Government stands, which will be forever, so far as we are concerned. But to allow a private enterprise with such an insignificant backing to enter upon a navigable stream and obstruct it with the kind of work they would place there, with the locks not in the river at all, but in a private canal built upon the outside, seems to me to be so unreasonable that argument is almost useless or wasted upon it.

Mr. President, judging from the cost of other locks that have been placed in dams, the locks proposed by this company would cost, taking their assets at the face of their figures, more than the entire capital that they even suggest they own, and the maintenance of those locks would be a charge of not less than $5,000 a year upon this corporation of $50,000 capital and speculative in its character. That river must be kept open day and night, and the ordinary expense of maintaining the dam and locks is far beyond them. But if they were solvent enough to build it, I would oppose any private corporation entering upon a navigable river to build a dam that would place the navigation of the stream at the mercy of the management of that dam; and I sincerely trust that the Senate will not give their consent to undoing the work that we have been doing for years.

We have been importuning, and receiving in a reasonable measure, assistance from the Government to make that river navigable. We have spent many million dollars to open The Dalles in this same river below. We have completed the work and we are spending $9,000,000 to open the Celilo Falls Canal. That work ought to be completed next year. When it is completed, then the Snake River will be an open river from Lewiston, Idaho, to the sea. Two lines of steamers ply upon that river. Over two years ago I was one of 180 passengers on a steamer that passed down the river, over the same place where they propose to construct this dam, in order to demonstrate that the Snake River was open from Lewiston to the sea.

We left Lewiston in the morning and we were at Celilo, in the State of Oregon, in the afternoon. There we had public ceremonies relative to the commencement of the work that had been authorized to be done at Celilo for the purpose of opening the river from Lewiston to the sea. We passed over this Fivemile Rapids as smoothly in a 180-ton vessel, with 180 passengers on it, as you would pass down the Potomac River from here to the sea upon the vessels that ply upon it. There was no difficulty whatever in navigating the river.

This river has been paralleled by the railroads from Lewiston to the sea. The navigation of that river is a menace to the railroads being able arbitrarily to control the traffic of that country, and as long as this river is open we can keep those railroads within reasonable bounds in the fixing of their rates. Close this river by the construction of private dams or by any other means, and you place that immense country—which produced this year something over 30,000,000 bushels of wheat, and other things in proportion—at the mercy of the railroads in taking their products to the market.

Mr. President, I would vote for an appropriation to build a dam by the Government that should back water over any shoal water or over any of these rapids because of the permanency and the sufficiency of the construction of the work; but I can not allow, so far as I can prevent it, the construction of any work upon that river by private enterprise, because it will be necessarily at the mercy, not only of the ability of the parties to maintain it, but at the mercy of the whim and changing business interests, and in a few years, even if it should be constructed, you would find those locks abandoned or you would find them swinging one end down the stream in utter neglect.

Mr. President, I trust this bill will not receive the sanction of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLINT in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Has the railroad been built from Riparia to Lewiston?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; and it is in operation.

Mr. TELLER. I want to ask the Senator another question. Is the amendment offered by his colleague [Mr. BORAH] satisfactory to him?

Mr. HEYBURN No.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that amendment provides that this company shall build the locks.

Mr. HEYBURN. But, Mr. President, we must not allow a company whose life is limited by law to fifty years, even if we knew they were going to live fifty years, to take possession of a river and to build locks.

Mr. TELLER. I am entirely in sympathy with the Senator from Idaho in this matter. If this is a navigable river, certainly we ought not permit such action; and if it is not a navigable river, then the State should control it, and not the General Government. If it is a navigable river, we certainly should not authorize any locks to be built.

Mr. HEYBURN. By private enterprise.

Mr. TELLER. By private enterprise; but if there are to be locks built, the Government should build the locks and have control of them.

Mr. HEYBURN. This bill does not provide for the Government building the locks.

Mr. TELLER. I understand this bill provides, if the amendment is accepted, that the company shall build the locks, and I presume if that should pass, they would not care about the effect.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes, Mr. President, for the purpose of entering upon this enterprise they are willing that any of these conditions may be imposed upon them, and they will promise to keep them, but they can not keep them. If they were the custodians of this responsibility, they would not be able to do it, and it is not the proper way to manage navigable rivers.

Mr. TELLER. I agree to that.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, Mr. President, that this river is navigable there is no question at all. The railroad company about twenty years ago persuaded the people that the river was not cheaply or safely navigable. It had been navigable for years before the railroad came. It had been navigated freely, and it was accepted as a navigable river of some value. As soon as that railroad was constructed from Portland up The Dalles to Wallula they immediately began to send out little suggestions and statements that the river was not safely navigable, and they bought up the steamboat line. The Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, by its very name, suggests what it was for. They controlled the river thoroughly. They controlled it by their railroad on the bank and by buying up the steamboat lines, which practically divided all the navigation and discouraged everybody else who even suggested that there might be profit in navigating that river.

Mr. President, that was the situation for years, and when we passed down over it our pilot and captain was Captain Gray, and he ran the steamboat down from Lewiston to the sea by the chart by which he had run the boat on that river twenty-six years before. So there had been no change.

Now, they say the inducement for taking these chances is sufficient to justify us; that it will result in irrigating so many thousand acres of land. The navigation of Snake River is more important to the people of that country than the irrigation of these acres. They can be irrigated by some other method. But that that river should be obstructed by that dam, which it is proposed by this bill shall be built, is an intolerable thing for the people of the upriver country to contemplate. I have here suggestions of five other private dams just waiting to see what Congress will do in regard to this one—power plants, irrigation schemes.

If you grant this, you will be asked to grant the right to other private corporations, and you will have a succession of these threatening obstacles up and down that river, which is now a navigable stream and may always be one. We appropriate money in every river and harbor bill for the improvement of that river. Since we have adopted the method of jetty dredging, raking the rocks toward the shore in the shape of jetties, we have made wonderful progress in keeping open and constantly deepening by the automatic action of the water those channels.

I am not at all disposed to stand here in the Senate and see a bill like this passed through without thorough consideration, and I say it is a threat and a menace to the prosperity of northern Idaho not only for to-day, but forever. I hope the bill will not receive the support of this body.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I am somewhat surprised to hear the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] say that this dam is a threat or a menace to the people of northern Idaho, when no one in the State of Idaho except himself, as far as I have been able to learn, opposes the passage of this bill. When this bill was first presented to the Senate at the present session, after having come from the House of Representatives, where it has been passed for the last two sessions, the Commercial Club of the city of Lewiston, Idaho, the principal town in that section of Idaho and which is situated on the Snake River and is more vitally interested in the navigation of that river than any other town or section in the State, opposed it; but later that club employed an able, experienced, and capable civil engineer to go down the river and investigate its navigability and determine whether, in his judgment, the dam would be beneficial or detrimental to the people of Idaho, and particularly to the town of Lewiston, situated upon the Snake River.

That engineer, as the Senator from Idaho well knows, reported that the construction of the dam would be for the benefit of the people of northern Idaho and the whole State of Idaho in that it would increase and improve the navigability of Snake River. So then the Commercial Club of the city of Lewiston, with this bill amended as proposed by the junior Senator from Idaho, immediately withdrew all objections.

This proposed dam is to be situated wholly within the State of Washington. The Senator talks about the Government of the United States putting a dam in the river to irrigate that country. Mr. President, some years ago one of the leading citizens of the State of Washington incorporated a company, and engaged large capital for the purpose of irrigating a vast stretch of country in the vicinity of this proposed dam.

After he had raised his capital, secured his contracts, and was ready to construct his ditches and put water upon something like 500,000 acres of arid lands, the Government withdrew it and prohibited him from carrying out his project. Some years later, after the gentleman who had organized the company had thrown up his plans and redistributed his capital, the Government threw the land open to settlement and improvement. If the Government compelled the abandonment of that vast project, bringing as it would in the end some millions of acres of land into irrigation, how long do you suppose it would be before it—if it would ever do it—would construct a dam at Fivemile Rapids for the purpose of enabling the people to irrigate there some 100,000 acres of arid land? This region is adjacent to one of the finest fruit belts in all of this Union.

The crops in that section of the country mature some three weeks earlier than in any other place in the United States, so far as my information goes. The people there have felt outraged that after investing their money, after buying these lands, and to a certain extent clearing them and going to the expense which they have in making their homes, they are unable to get water upon that arid region so as to make their lands fruitful and profitable.

The Snake River, at the point to which the Senator refers, is navigable only at certain seasons of the year. That portion of the river is a series of rapids, some 18 or 20 miles of which it is exceedingly dangerous for vessels to navigate even in high water, and in low water it is utterly and absolutely impossible of navigation.

When this bill came over from the House and I began to look into the matter, I wrote to the Chief of Engineers of the War Department and asked him, in effect, upon what theory he had approved the passage of this bill through the House of Representatives, and he said, under date of February 13, 1908, addressing me:

> Replying to your letter of the 11th instant, would say that the favorable report on H. R. 7618, Sixtieth Congress, first session, providing for the construction of a dam across Snake River near Fivemile Rapids was made for the following reason:
> From information on file in this office, it appears that this section of the river is susceptible of improvement by locks and dams, and therefore the construction of a dam properly designed and located, with a suitable lock in connection therewith, would improve the navigable condition of the river at this point and to that extent benefit the navigation of the entire river above.

If the Senator from Idaho wants the Snake River improved and he is willing to trust the judgment of the Chief of Engineers, then the construction of this dam in that river will improve it, because it will back up the water some 18 miles over that series of rapids and make the river at that point navigable all through the year, and in addition to that it will set back the current in the river for many miles above the dam, which in itself will greatly improve the navigation of the river and permit vessels plying upon it to make much better time than they otherwise would make.

Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho complains because this dam is to be put in a navigable river. It is true that the gentlemen who have been thinking of this project have thought that it would be a good plan to put the dam in the river, but under the law as it exists and over which the men who propose this project have absolutely no control they are compelled to put that dam where the Chief of Engineers of the War Department shall direct it to be built.

No dam can be placed in that river until the plans and specifications, under the law, have been approved by the Department; and this law which he complains of, permitting a lock to be constructed on private property, expressly provides that wherever a lock shall be authorized by the Government to be constructed, the land upon which it is constructed shall be conveyed to the United States free of any cost to the Government. So there is utterly and absolutely no possibility for the Government to be injured in this proposition. In the first place the Government must approve the plans and specifications. In the second place, if the Government permits a lock to be constructed it must designate the place, and the persons proposing to construct it must convey the title of the location to the Government of the United States. So the whole project is in effect owned and controlled by the Government of the United States.

The Senator speaks of the want of captal on the part of these people to carry out this project. It is true that their corporation was organized with a capital stock of $25,000, and according to the reports which that concern has furnished the Senator from Idaho it shows that it has a surplus of $25,000. It shows that it has, over and above all of its debts, more than $300,000 worth of property. Whoever heard of a concern starting out—anyway in a project of this kind—with all of its capital on hand at once? The Senator, being familiar with the laws of the State of Washington, understands full well that that capital stock may be increased at any time. That it will be necessary to increase the capital stock of this company to complete this enterprise no one will deny.

He also knows that while the corporation is limited to fifty years' duration, it can, under the laws of the State of Washington, be continued indefinitely and perpetually for fifty years at a time. So there can be no objection on that score.

I hope, inasmuch as this project is situated in the State of Washington, at least 100 miles from the Idaho line, and the waters of the river which it is proposed to dam run through the very county in which my colleague resides, and in view of the fact that the people of Idaho, who are vitally interested in this project, believe that this will improve the navigability of that river and believe also that it will open up a vast stretch of country to the benefit of people who want to improve these arid lands—I hope, I say, in view of all these considerations, that the Senate will pass this bill, for I feel certain it can in no manner injure the people of Idaho. The Commercial Club of Lewiston have wired that they favor the passage of the bill with the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Idaho, and certainly the fulfillment of this project will bring into cultivation a vast stretch of country; it will make a garden out of a desert, and it can do no possible harm to the Government. The Government keeps absolute control over the whole proposition and can lose nothing by giving the people out there an opportunity to improve that section of the country.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, as a justification of the Committee on Commerce for reporting the bill favorably, I wish to read the following communication from General Mackenzie:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, January 3, 1908.

The accompanying bill, H. R. 7618, Sixtieth Congress, first session, to authorize the construction of a dam across Snake River at or near Fivemile Rapids, makes ample provision for the protection of navigation interests, and I know of no objection to its favorable consideration by Congress so far as those interests are concerned.

A. MACKENZIE,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, as the bill passed the House it certainly did not make ample provision for the commerce of that river. As the bill passed the House there was no provision for locks. If we should adopt the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Idaho, it may be that the bill would answer the purpose as the General says it does, to protect the commerce. I believe there is a law which requires the Secretary of War to supervise the obstructions, is there not?

Mr. FRYE. Yes; there is.

Mr. TELLER. If not, then we ought to provide that he should do that.

Mr. President, I know something about the Snake River. Of course it is a river that at some seasons of the year is not navigable in some places. I have been on Snake River a number of times from Riparia to Lewiston, and I have been deprived of a trip up there once or twice because the river was too low to run the boat. Yet there is no question that a very small amount of money would make the river from Riparia to Lewiston navigable at every season of the year, even at low water, but there are some obstructions that ought to be removed. The river above Lewiston is somewhat obstructed by rocks, and yet with a small outlay, in my opinion, the navigability of that river could be extended above the town of Lewiston. I could not say from actual observation how far, but I know from actual observation that it might be a considerable distance.

I sympathize with the people who want to secure and maintain for themselves the navigability of these streams. I believe that it is a public duty, and I certainly am not going to vote for anything that I do not believe protects the people along those streams. Whether that will be done by these locks I can not say for certain without some thought about it. But if it is a navigable stream, I should doubt the propriety of putting locks in it, although we have been doing that. Take the Tennessee River. The Government has put locks in there. But there the Government controls the whole thing. If this was a proposition for the Government to build a dam and build the locks and supervise them and own them, I would not object to it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would not.

Mr. TELLER. But that is a very different thing from turning it over to a corporation. I am of the opinion that the Government of the United States is rich enough and ought to take care of its own streams. I do not believe, wherever a dam is necessary to help the navigation of a river, that the Government should turn it over to some corporation. The Government should do it itself.

I believe the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] is correct when he says this has been a navigable river ever since the opening of the country. It has been a navigable river for the last fifty years certainly. There has been more or less navigation. I know there are some rapids there which perhaps at low water you can not pass. There are some rapids clear above Lewiston that could be taken out which would make the river navigable pretty nearly from Huntington down; not all the way. There are some places, perhaps, that would require locks. But by taking out those reefs across the river in several places it could be done.

The Senator spoke about the grain that is carried down the river. Two years ago I was on the river from Riparia to Lewiston, and the captain told me he had carried the fall before 600,000 bushels of wheat down the river on the two boats that ran at that time from Riparia to Lewiston. The banks of the river for a long distance are covered with wheat fields. I have seen a township in that country which practically was a solid wheat field. So has the senior Senator from Idaho.

I feel a little interest in that country. I have been there a good many times. I invested some money there many years ago—forty-odd years ago. I am sorry to say it is still there. I visited that country forty-two years ago, and I know something about it and I feel an interest in it, and I do not want to do anything and I do not want to see anything done that will interfere with the development and growth of that country.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I rose to say, in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], that while there were very short periods each year during which the river at places is not navigable for a certain class of vessels, yet it is always navigable for another class of vessels.

Mr. TELLER. Lighter vessels.

Mr. HEYBURN. We have been expending every year a very considerable sum of money in improving it, and we have enlarged the scope of navigation very much since the Senator from Colorado and I first knew the river. Above Lewiston, between Lewiston and Huntington, which connects with the main line of the Oregon Short Line road at Huntington, vessels have made the trip five times, I am advised. I know they have made it twice, because I was familiar with the men and with the conditions.

Now, with reference to the action of the city of Lewiston, I am in a position to know something about it. I say without any hesitation, and it may go from here out to Lewiston, that I have silenced the sentiment that was there expressed, in the absence of a full knowledge of the scope and effect of this legislation, so that to-day there is none except the sentiment of the interested in Lewiston. It is not uncommon and sometimes not difficult to procure an expression of sentiment in favor of a measure that is presented by our friends and by men we like and by men who are inclined to do what they can to assist us in carrying out our enterprises. That was the condition of affairs at Lewiston. I have a protest from a commercial club in the county in which the Senator from Washington lives.

I have not thought it wise or proper to urge that upon the Senate. I am not going into the State of any Senator here and undertake to know more about his State and its interests and its sentiment than he does. I am not going to aspire to represent the State of Washington in the United States Senate or to antagonize the Senators from that State. I am here to speak for the State of Idaho, which I in part represent, and I have no hesitation in saying that my colleague will not differ with me in regard to this matter, being advised of the facts.

I have known this river for pretty nearly thirty years. I know it well. I have been on it in all seasons of the year and on all occasions. I live in that section of the country and have during those years. I know the sentiments of the people and I know their interests, and I know that, while the State of Washington, in the local community where this water might be taken out of the river or this power applied, might feel an interest, as a local community always feels it, especially if it alone shares the benefits, yet I am speaking for the interests of a great State that I say is made a seaboard State by reason of the fact that that river is navigable to the sea—is open to the sea. If we had forty Government dams and locks in it, it would be open to the sea, because that which the Government is behind is of such a character that it belongs to all the people and is for the benefit of those of the people who are in a position to take advantage of it, as distinguished from the people who live at a distance and can not reap any advantage from it.

Shall Idaho's voice be ignored here when it speaks for its rights to maintain the river? We have given the State of Oregon $14,000,000, if my recollection is correct, in order to make the river open to the sea for Oregon, and they have not been a bit bashful about asking for it. We have given the State of Washington some millions of dollars for the purpose of making this river open to the sea.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. I should like to say that I have examined on the map the tortuous course of the Snake River, and I find this point is nearly 300 miles from Lewiston. Does not the Senator recognize the fact that the Government engineer says that this dam will improve the navigation of the river?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; they do not say that.

Mr. PILES. Pardon me a moment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have the report on my desk. I know what it says.

Mr. PILES. Did not the engineer say so when he recommended the passage of the bill through the House? Did he not say so in the letter which I have read and which I have here to submit to the Senator if he wants it? Does not the Senator himself know that putting in the dam will slack that river for 25 to 35 miles through the State of Washington, which will be a benefit to the people who live along the river and who use the vessels which navigate the river? Is he not standing here, then, trying to prevent the people of the State of Washington from having that portion of the river which runs through the State improved, to their advantage and the advantage of the navigation of the river farther up, and to the benefit of the people of Idaho as well as of the people of Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. The engineers to whom the Senator refers are men well known to myself. There are many "ifs" connected with that conclusion. If the private individual could build this dam, and if the engineers under whose directions it be constructed were to place proper and sufficient locks in the river, and if those locks were to be maintained permanently, it would back the water over 25 miles of reefs and benefit the navigation. I will vote for sufficient appropriation for the Government to construct dams where by backing the water over the obstacles the navigation may be improved, coupled with the construction of permanent locks, to be permanently maintained by a permanent Government, but I would not vote for the construction of a dam, however well it is planned, by a private individual, with the limitations of the uncertainties and incapacity and indisposition that belong to every private enterprise, with nothing but a pocketbook behind it. I would not vote for it if their plan were before us and everything was here.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. In a moment. I have here the report of the War Department on this proposition. I submitted to them February 14 this letter:

Brig. Gen. ALEXANDER MACKENZIE,
Chief of Engineers, War Department.

MY DEAR SIR: Will you kindly advise me whether or not the Benton Water Company has filed any plans or specifications for building a dam and lock at Fivemile Rapids, Snake River, in the State of Washington? They are asking for legislation permitting them to build a dam at this point, and I desire to find out if they have taken any steps in connection with the work they propose to construct.

Yours, very truly.

Signed by myself.

That letter I submitted to the Department. Upon it is indorsed, without reading the formal head, referred to my letter, the following:

Asks if the Benton Water Company has submitted plans for dam over Snake River, for which the company is asking legislation permitting same.

That inquiry, directed to the Chief of Engineers, has the following indorsement:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, February 19, 1908.

1. Respectfully returned to Mr. HEYBURN.
2. So far as the records show, no plans and specifications for the purpose mentioned within have been submitted to this office by the Benton Water Company.

A. MACKENZIE,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

That was of course since the bill was on the Calendar. That is the status of it to-day. If it is not, I have not been able to obtain any further advice. There are no plans or specifications or estimates on file with the War Department unless they have been placed there since my last inquiry, which was quite recent.

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask the Senator if he expects a prudent business man to prepare plans costing him from $15,000 to $20,000 and put them on file with the War Department before he has a right to construct his dam? Would not any practical business man say, "I will not prepare any plans or specifications until I know that Congress will give me the right to put a dam in the river." It would be a useless waste of money for him to prepare expensive plans, and an utter waste of time for the Department to examine and approve such plans unless it was assured to both that Congress would pass a law authorizing the execution of the plans.

While I am on my feet, I wish to ask the Senator a question. He speaks of the Government putting a dam at Fivemile Rapids in Snake River. Does the Senator ever hope that the Government, in the next twenty years at least, will think of putting a dam in that river for the purposes of commerce? Does he think there is enough commerce below the bridge at Riparia, on the Snake River, to warrant the Government of the United States in putting a great dam there for the purpose of improving the river in the way the people here propose to improve it? Does not the Senator know that the Snake River is paralleled on both sides by railroads carrying traffic along that section of country down the Snake and Columbia rivers into Puget Sound and into the Oregon country? Does he think for a moment that the Government would expend the large sum of money necessary to be expended to put any dam there at the rapids on Snake River, when there is no commerce to speak of except in high water, and even at the very best stages on that river the commerce is absolutely insignificant, and no Department official would approve the construction of a dam, for the next twenty years at least, for the improvement of that river?

Mr. HEYBURN. It speaks rather poorly for the Senator's scheme that a speculative individual or corporation should undertake this work when he admits that the Government of the United States would not, and he places the Government's reason for not doing it upon the ground that it would not pay. If it would not pay the Government, it would not pay individuals. We will then pass that by. It is not necessary to consider that kind of an argument more than merely to give it its own refutation.

The river is navigable. The country is there. If it is susceptible of the great wealth-producing conditions that are pictured by the Senator, the Government will take hold of it. They spent, I think, $2,000,000 in the Minidoka dam, twice as high as this dam will be, and they did it because they made 130,000 acres of land there susceptible to irrigation and settlement. The Government said that was a sufficient inducement to place a dam in this same river some hundred miles farther up toward the head in order that the water might be sold to these people.

I am not soliciting the Government to enter into a reclamation scheme at this point and to construct this dam. I will leave that to the wisdom of their engineers and those having charge of it.

But what I object to is the irresponsibility and that which follows irresponsibility behind this kind of an enterprise. I have every confidence that it is possible for a human being to have in our Government, and I have only such confidence in schemes for financial advantage and benefit as they may justify after they have completed their work; none before.

Now, Mr. President, it is a serious question that these parties should be allowed for the next three years to say, "We have an act of Congress authorizing us to take possession of this navigable stream." Suppose we were to come before the Committee on Commerce having charge of the river and harbor bill and say, "We want $75,000 to carry on the dredging of the Snake River at Fivemile Rapids and between there and Lewiston."

We want to complete this splendid system of jetty dredging, which is done by raking the rocks so that they converge toward the center of the stream and constitute jetties that confine the water and automatically sweep out and keep clean the channel of the river. That is what they are doing on that river and on other rivers. What would Congress say if some one should get up here and say, "Look here, the Snake River has an obstacle. A private enterprise, belonging to private individuals, has under construction, or at least they have three years in which to commence the construction of a dam down there; and we will not give you an appropriation to clean out that river that is owned only in part by the Government of the United States and is owned in part by private individuals."

I was saying when interrupted by the Senator from Washington, that we have expended millions and millions and millions of dollars to improve the Snake River, to make it navigable and useful to the States of Washington and Oregon, but as soon as we reach the Idaho line the best I could get four years ago was $10,000 to take some rocks out above the city of Lewiston, in the State of Idaho, and when a boat was wrecked for causes that could not be avoided I had great difficulty in getting any consideration for the purpose of reconstructing that boat upon which the men worked while they drilled and blasted the rocks out of the river.

I believe in preserving the waterways of the country for the uses of the people, not only for their uses to-day, but for their uses in all time to come. These waterways stand between them and oppression in freight rates and conditions. When you made the Willamette River navigable in its lower waters you cut the freight rates on the railroad that runs on its border in two. When you make the Snake River perfectly navigable you compel and keep within bounds the raising of railroad rates along its border.

I have asked on one or two occasions since I have been in this body that the Clearwater River be maintained in its integrity, and I intend so long as I am here and so long as I may exert any influence here or elsewhere to prevent that river from being taken possession of for private greed or private gain. If no craft ever floats down these rivers, the very fact that they are navigable is sufficient to hold the railroads that border them in check.

I do not know that any considerable amount of freight has ever passed down the Willamette since it was made possible to navigate it, but I do know that the very existence of the condition of navigation is in itself a controlling element in determining the reasonableness of freight rates.

Mr. ANKENY. I should like to ask the Senator if the Idaho people, who are concerned in this matter, ever made a protest against it?

Mr. HEYBURN. I am one of the Idaho people; my colleague and I are all the Idaho people in this body; and if there is anybody here who has the temerity to stand up and undertake to represent or claim to represent the sentiment and rights of the people of Idaho in opposition to it, we welcome the challenge.

Mr. ANKENY. Does the Senator know of any merchant or respectable man on that river who is objecting to this enterprise? Does the Senator's colleague object to it?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not know whether my colleague objects to it or not. I leave him to speak for himself. But I know I speak for north Idaho so far as I may, and I care nothing for the mercenary motives of those men who would grasp one of the great assets of that country and strangle it. I care nothing for the pocketbook politician; I care nothing for the pocketbook sentiment or the pocketbook influence that would steal the liberties and the heritage of the people if, forsooth, they might for a few months in the year reap rich rewards for themselves. I am not speaking for that sentiment. I am speaking for the people who have the interest of Idaho at heart and understand it in an intelligent way.

Does the Senator imagine that I would stand up here and oppose the wishes of the people of my State? We furnish the water for this river in Idaho. It rises there. The waters that flow down through the State of Washington and the State of Oregon are furnished by snows from the mountains of our State. It happens that in the wisdom of our fathers the border line between Washington and Idaho was so drawn as to give Idaho a natural seaport, and we propose to maintain it.

Mr. ANKENY. May I ask the Senator from Idaho if he has not a dam on this identical navigable river? He does not say anything about it in his own State. You have a dam up at Twin Falls.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Government has constructed the dam.

Mr. ANKENY. It did not at Twin Falls; it did at Minidoka.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is under the Government, practically. The Carey Act is as much concerned——

Mr. ANKENY. I know that it is a private concern.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will leave the pocketbook part of this politics to the Senator from Washington, and I will discuss the part here that pertains to the patriotic duties I am here to perform. At Twin Falls, under the Carey Act which Congress passed in its hour of greatest wisdom, we have constructed—I say "we;" I have no interest in it, but the people of Idaho have constructed—a dam at the expense of a million dollars or more, and they have provided through canals with a great extent of water, covering an empire that is to-day the most beautiful land that lays out of doors, a land that five years ago had no inhabitant on it, as I told this body some weeks ago, and that to-day has in that little bit of land irrigated through the means of this dam a population of more than 10,000 people, with one city of 5,000 population, and with, as far as the eye can see, green fields, and orchards, and trees, and homes, and prosperity, and people who went there to stay and who have made homes there. That is the kind of an enterprise that I am always ready to applaud and to assist. But that was done under the direction of permanency, and the Minidoka dam, a few miles above, was constructed by the Government of the United States at a cost of something approaching $3,000,000. I will hail that kind of work.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Washington that it is not a navigable stream where that dam was built.

Mr. ANKENY. It is, sir.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was going to suggest that the dam the Senator refers to is constructed on the crest of those beautiful falls that are almost equal to Niagara in height—right on the crest of them.

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. And it had nothing to do with navigation whatever.

Mr. TELLER. It could not be made navigable.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; it could not be made navigable. I am talking here a common-sense proposition and one that affects our interests. The Senator suggested that my colleague may differ with me about it. My colleague is here to represent the interests of Idaho from a governmental standpoint and from the standpoint of to-morrow and the next day and the next. I am not ready to consent to a scheme merely because a lot of good fellows are interested in it; and they are good fellows—I know them—they are my friends. I had a letter from one of them, which lies on my desk, reminding me that he assisted by his vote to send me as a member of this body. He is a splendid man. He has interests that would be benefited by the building of this dam. I have other letters here from my personal friends. Captain Gray, one of the best men and one of the best navigators I ever knew, is interested down there in this enterprise and would like to see it go through. God knows I would like to see him have the prosperity that might come to him from it.

But I am not here to consider public improvements from that standpoint, and I have so written them. I am here to consider this matter from a wider or a larger standpoint than that—the standpoint of the good of the State of Idaho now and hereafter; its permanent good.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who knows that particular part of Idaho perhaps as well as I do, and who has known it as long, knows that the keeping open of the Snake River to the sea means an immense benefit and advantage for Idaho in the future, and that to allow a private enterprise to get in there under any excuse or pretense means a threat always, and a burden and a difficulty to be taken into consideration.

If the Government were by any means to build dams and locks, as I said, even though it might deter to some extent navigation it might improve it, and I would hail it with pleasure; but to allow a private enterprise to do it, I say, the people of Idaho when they understand it would never forgive their representative who stood here and allowed it to be done without raising his voice and casting his vote against it.

I think I know what I am talking about. This is not a new question. When I went down there I found them all in a merry mood of acquiescence. Captain Gray is a good fellow. He has been here, and he says it will benefit them, and he knows the river; he has navigated it. I said: "Well, let us sit down and talk together about it and see. There is somebody else, Captain Gray, besides you and I interested in this. We had 14,000,000 bushels of wheat raised on the drainage of this stream. The counties of Latah, Nez Perce, and Idaho are interested in this scheme. Let us see whether we want to allow anything of this kind to be done." When we were through our conference there was a wiser and a more conservative sentiment, and when this matter was presented to those people fully I expressed the sentiment at which they finally arrived.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it was not my purpose to make any remarks upon the pending bill, but since I have been indirectly drawn into the discussion I wish to say a word or two.

My colleague [Mr. HEYBURN] and myself are in perfect harmony on the proposition of keeping open Snake River to the sea. That is a matter of supreme importance to the people of our State, and I apprehend there can be no difference of opinion between those representing the State of Idaho under any circumstances upon that proposition. The only matter about which there might possibly be difference is as to the method of doing it. I was not vitally concerned in the bill except from that standpoint alone, and I therefore offered this amendment:

Provided, That said Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, shall construct, operate, and maintain locks, perpetual and free of charge or toll to navigation and navigators, and shall so use said stream as not in any manner to obstruct, embarrass, or retard navigation.

It occurred to me that, in view of the supervisory power which the Secretary of War has over the rivers or navigable streams, with this added there could be no possible embarrassment of the navigation upon Snake River by reason of this improvement, and I am very much of that opinion still.

In view of the fact that this dam is to be constructed and these locks maintained and kept up, not only under the provisions of the bill, but under the supervisory power of the Secretary of War, I do not see how there can be any possible injury or impairment of the navigation of that stream. If I thought so for one moment, of course I would oppose the bill.

So far as the question of private enterprise improving rivers of the West and reclaiming the arid lands and developing our natural resources is concerned, if we had had to wait upon the Government of the United States in order to accomplish those things we would have nothing in the West to-day. Private enterprise has gone into the mountains, across the rivers, and into the recesses of the mountains, and has developed that country, and so long as it is honest in its purpose and its endeavor, so long as men are willing to put their capital in with a view of making improvements and building up the country, I am perfectly willing they shall have the opportunity to do so, provided they do not destroy the navigability of our streams. For that reason I offered this amendment, and for that reason I shall support the bill.

Mr. ANKENY. Mr. President, there has been a good deal brought in here about the opinion of those people. The Commercial Club of Lewiston, that is presumed to represent the bulk of the people there, says:

The Commercial Club withdraws objections and recommends passage of the bill, provided it is amended to require perpetual maintenance and operation and free lockage.

In addition to that, carrying out the same view, is the letter of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, which has been read. He says:

The accompanying bill, H. R. 7618, Sixtieth Congress, first session, to authorize the construction of a dam across Snake River at or near Fivemile Rapids, makes ample provision for the protection of navigation interests, and I know of no objection to its favorable consideration by Congress, so far as those interests are concerned.

That is signed by Brigadier-General Mackenzie, Chief of Engineers.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, there seems to be an absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLLIVER in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator from Colorado desires to speak, I will withdraw the suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ankeny	Clay	Foster	Overman
Bankhead	Crane	Gallinger	Perkins
Borah	Culberson	Gary	Piles
Bourne	Cullom	Heyburn	Richardson
Brandegee	Curtis	Hopkins	Scott
Briggs	Depew	Lodge	Simmons
Brown	Dixon	Long	Stephenson
Burkett	Dolliver	McCumber	Sutherland
Burnham	du Pont	McEnery	Taliaferro
Carter	Elkins	Nelson	Teller
Clapp	Flint	Nixon

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 3 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 31, 1908, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 30, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 71. Joint resolution to provide for the removal of obstructions from the main ship channel, Key West Harbor, Florida;

S. 6257. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to expend $300,000 in protecting the banks of the Mississippi River at New Orleans, La.;

S. 4831. An act for the relief of Pembroke B. Banton; and

S. 3023. An act to amend the national banking laws.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 19158, the agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FOSTER of Vermont in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Forest Service: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to experiment and to make and continue investigations and report on forestry, national forests, forest fires, and lumbering, but no part of this appropriation shall be used for any experiment or test made outside the jurisdiction of the United States; to advise and assist the owners of woodlands and lands within and adjacent to the national forests in the proper care of the same, to investigate and test American timber and timber trees, and their uses, and methods for the preservative treatment of timber; to seek, through investigations and the planting of native and foreign species, suitable trees for the treeless regions; to erect necessary buildings: Provided, That the cost of any building erected shall not exceed $500; to pay all expenses necessary to protect, administer, improve, and extend the national forests, but no such extension shall be made except by the purchase of land or rights therein found to be necessary for such protection, administration, or improvement; and hereafter officials of the Forest Service designated by the Secretary of Agriculture shall, in all ways that are practicable, aid in the enforcement of the laws of the States or Territories with regard to stock, for the prevention and extinguishment of forest fires, and for the protection of fish and game, and with respect to national forests, shall aid the other Federal Bureaus and Departments in the performance of the duties imposed on them by law; to ascertain the natural conditions upon and utilize the national forests, and hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time divide and designate all lands heretofore or hereafter reserved for national forests under the provisions of section 24 of the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," after such lands have been so reserved, as he may deem best for administrative purposes; and hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests, except the Black Hills National Forest, in South Dakota, to be exported from the State, Territory, or the districts of Alaska and Porto Rico in which said forests are respectively situated: Provided, That the exportation of dead and insect-infested timber only from said Black Hills National Forest shall be allowed until such time as the Forester shall certify that the ravages of the destructive insects in said forest are practically checked; and hereafter permits for power plants within national forests may be made irrevocable, except for breach of condition, for such term, not exceeding fifty years, as the Secretary of Agriculture may by regulation prescribe, and land covered by such permits issued in pursuance of an application filed before entry, location, or application, subsequently approved under the act of June 11, 1906, shall in perpetuity remain subject to such permit and renewals thereof; and hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture, in his discretion, may, in behalf of the United States, accept lands for forest purposes, and, for the purpose of consolidating the national forests, may accept lands in exchange for lands or stumpage from the national forests of substantially equal value; and hereafter all moneys received as contributions toward cooperative work in forest investigations or administration and in the protection and improvement of the national forests shall be covered into the Treasury and shall constitute a special fund, which is hereby appropriated and made available until expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the payment of the expense of said investigations, administration, protection, and improvement by the Forest Service and for refunds of amounts heretofore or hereafter received in excess of the amounts found actually due; to transport and care for fish and game supplied to stock the national forests or the waters therein; to employ fiscal and other agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in practical forestry and in the administration of national forests, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere; and hereafter advances of money under any appropriation for the Forest Service may be made to the Forest Service and by authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to chiefs of field parties for fighting forest fires, and improving forests in emergency cases, who shall give bond under such rules and regulations and in such sum as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, and accounts arising under such advances shall be rendered through and by the Department of Agriculture to the Treasury Department; to collate, digest, report, illustrate, and print the results of experiments and investigations made by the Forest Service; to purchase law books to an amount not exceeding $500, necessary supplies, apparatus, and office fixtures, and technical books and technical journals for officers of the Forest Service stationed outside of Washington; to pay freight, express, telephone, and telegraph charges; for electric light and power, fuel, gas, ice, washing towels, and official traveling and other necessary expenses; and for rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $3,151,900.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Wyoming that it might expedite matters if he would designate the language to which the point of order applies.

Mr. MONDELL. For the present, Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the paragraph as a whole. I do that for the purpose of interrogating the chairman of the committee in regard to particular portions of the paragraph in relation to which I desire information.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry while this question is up.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will state it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In view of the manner in which the gentleman from Wyoming has reserved his point of order to the paragraph I would like to know if that would prevent any member of the Committee of the Whole subsequently making or reserving a point of order to particular portions of the paragraph under consideration? I want to make a point of order as to some particular parts of it. If this is the time for me to reserve my point of order I want to do it now. If I can make the point later without losing my right I am willing to defer to the gentleman from Wyoming.

The CHAIRMAN. There is always opportunity for Members to raise particular points of order. The Chair called attention of the committee to the fact last week, that after a general point of order had been sustained and an amendment had been adopted by the committee it was then too late for a Member to raise an additional point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 19158, the agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan, from the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 20063) making appropriation to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time and, with the accompanying papers, ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. BURLESON reserved all points of order on the bill.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FOSTER of Vermont in the chair.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is now pending.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in order that my purpose may be more clearly understood, I reserve a point of order against all new matter in the paragraph. My understanding is that the matter in lines 11, 12, and 13—"and no part of this appropriation shall be used for any experiment or test made outside of the jurisdiction of the United States"—is new matter, I would like to ask the chairman if that is true.

Mr. SCOTT. With the consent of the gentleman from Wyoming, I should be very glad to take up the new language, phrase by phrase, as it appears, calling his attention to it, submit a few remarks on the merits of the question, and then yield for any statement he may wish to make, and if he does not desire to make such statement he may insist on the point of order or withdraw it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, my thought was that perhaps the most expeditious way in which to dispose of the paragraph would be to take up the new matter as we reach it and discuss the merits of a particular provision. A large portion of this paragraph is new matter, but it was my thought that we could dispose of the paragraph more expeditiously by taking up the items of new matter in that way. Then, after discussion of a certain provision of new matter, I could withdraw or insist upon the point of order so far as I was concerned. I thought in this way we could pass over one provision after another, and it would be better to do that than to attempt in one general statement to refer to a great variety of subjects treated by the various new provisions in the paragraph.

Mr. SCOTT. I quite agree with the suggestion of the gentleman from Wyoming, and with his permission I shall take up the first provision, page 22, lines 11, 12, and 13, which read as follows:

But no part of this appropriation shall be used for any exepriment or test made outside the jurisdiction of the United States.

The Comptroller of the Treasury has decided, in certain cases, that an appropriation bill, general in its terms, is restricted to continental United States, and the organized territories therein. This proposed legislation was deemed necessary to authorize the Department to conduct experiments and tests in Alaska and Porto Rico, where there are now national forests, and simply gives the same authority in those territories or possessions which the present law allows the Department to exercise within continental United States.

Mr. MONDELL. Then my understanding is that this paragraph simply authorizes the carrying on of experiments within our jurisdiction, and that it does widen, possibly, the present scope of the authority of the Bureau by allowing it to make experiments in Alaska, Porto Rico, and the Philippines.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand that under this it would be possible for the Agricultural Department to carry on experiments in the Philippines, for instance?

Mr. SCOTT. I think so, because the language reads that no part of this appropriation shall be used for any experiments or tests made outside the jurisdiction of the United States. Undoubtedly the Philippine Islands are within the jurisdiction of the United States, and this language would therefore authorize the Department to make these experiments and tests within those islands.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to ask the gentleman if his committee considered the question of the advisability of carrying on experiments in the Philippines, let us say, with appropriations made on the agricultural bill, whether the committee discussed that matter or not, and whether, if they discussed it, they concluded it would be wise to do so.

Mr. SCOTT. That matter was not discussed before the committee. The statement was made by the Chief of the Forest Service that this language was desired in order to allow the work to be done in Porto Rico and Alaska. He said nothing about the Philippines, and that matter did not come into the discussion. I understand, of course, that work of this character done in the Philippine Islands ought to be done at the cost of the islands treasury, and if the gentleman desires to limit it in the way his suggestion implies I would have no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I would say that as far as I am concerned I have no objection to this language and its intent, except that it occurs to me—and I think the chairman of the committee probably agrees with that view—that it would not be wise to authorize work under this bill to be carried on in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. SCOTT. I entirely agree with that view, and have no doubt that the Forest Service would take the same view. I know it is the present expectation of the Chief that this work is to be extended only to Alaska and Porto Rico, and I think it would be entirely safe to allow the language to remain in its present form.

Mr. SMITH of California. Is the chairman certain that the language he has employed will reach the purpose that he has in view? Are you not giving to the Department additional authority by the language of this addition? We are discussing the language—and that proposition, it seems to me, would go without saying. It does not say that it shall not be used outside continental United States, but that it may not be used in Africa or some place beyond the jurisdiction of the United States.

That no part of this appropriation shall be used outside the jurisdiction of the United States—

Mr. SCOTT. Ordinarily it would go without saying, but, as I explained, the Comptroller has held that an appropriation bill general in its terms must apply only to continental United States, and the language which we are discussing was put in this peculiar form in order that it might escape the point of order and appear as it actually is, a limitation on an appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of California. By inference extending the scope of operations to other countries, without expressly declaring it.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not think this language could possibly be construed as extending this work to other countries, because it expressly limits it to countries within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of California. Does it extend it to anything more than the general law?

Mr. SCOTT. Not at all.

Mr. SMITH of California. Then it does not accomplish anything.

Mr. SCOTT. It does not apply to anything except the general terms of this appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of California. I understand the gentleman to say that the general statute with reference to the Forest Service is applicable only to continental United States.

Mr. SCOTT. So far as it makes an appropriation, yes.

Mr. SMITH of California. Does not this really say, in a negative way, that the appropriation shall not be used outside of the United States?

Mr. SCOTT. Does the gentleman concede that Alaska and Porto Rico are within the United States?

Mr. SMITH of California. Yes; but this does not say that the appropriation may be used in all parts of our territory, whereas the general law——

Mr. SCOTT. It simply implies that by saying it shall not be used anywhere without our territory.

Mr. SMITH of California. If the general statutes limit the operations of the Forestry Department to continental United States, why, I doubt very much whether this negative expression extends to the Philippines, Porto Rico, and Alaska. It merely says it shall not be used in——

Mr. SCOTT. Well, I think that when you use language limiting that appropriation to territory within the jurisdiction of the United States you certainly by those terms carry that language to all parts of the United States, and I think that the construction placed upon it by the gentleman from Wyoming is entirely justified. In further assurance to him, however, that it will not be used to extend the work of the Forestry Service to the Philippine Islands, I think I may say that we have no national forests in the Philippines——

Mr. MONDELL. Is not that true also of Hawaii?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And Porto Rico.

Mr. SCOTT. No; we have a small forest reserve in Porto Rico.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I remember of our having put through a law transferring the title of all public lands in Porto Rico, with the exception possibly of one part, to the insular people, to the people of the island, and every foot of land in the Philippines, except military and national reservations, is in the government of the Philippines, and they have a complete forestry system and forestry bureau of their own.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman is eminently correct.

Mr. MONDELL. Is not that true of Hawaii?

Mr. SCOTT. My understanding is it is true, in part.

Mr. MONDELL. Would not the chairman be willing to accept an amendment to this language, if it does not go out, excepting Hawaii and the Philippines?

Mr. SCOTT. I will be entirely willing to accept that language.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Chairman, so far as the language under discussion is concerned, with the understanding that at the proper time the committee will offer an amendment limiting this extension so that it may not include Hawaii and the Philippines, I shall not insist upon my point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman why he excepts Hawaii.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, we have no forest reserve in Hawaii, and the public lands of Hawaii are under the jurisdiction of the Territory, and not under the jurisdiction of the officers of the United States. I believe the people of those islands are well qualified to take care of the question of forestry within the islands.

Mr. NORRIS. That may all be true, but at the same time if it is true there would not be any danger of the Agricultural Department expending any money there. Hawaii is a Territory of the United States, and jurisdiction extends over it the same as any other Territory.

Mr. MONDELL. With this difference, that we have no forest reserve there and we are doing no forestry work there.

Mr. NORRIS. Then there would not be any danger.

Mr. MONDELL. There might be a great deal of money expended in Hawaii for investigations and these investigations paid out of the Treasury of the United States and appropriations made under this bill. Now, the Agricultural Committee is not considering the need of Hawaii in this bill and in the appropriation which they have made under the bill, and why should we extend the provisions of the bill to a Territory that has not been considered?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Wyoming has withdrawn his point of order with the understanding that an amendment will be offered later.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want to agree to that.

Mr. SCOTT. I mean to this particular language, to the first new language in the paragraph.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the House will have an opportunity to pass upon any amendment which is offered. I simply withdraw my point of order, with the understanding that the committee will offer an amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order, or rather, I reserve it.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr Chairman, I have no desire to protract the discussion, and if the gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order I am ready for the Chair to rule. I merely wish to suggest to the Chair that, in my opinion, the language in question is not subject to the point of order. It merely limits the appropriation to the jurisdiction of the United States, which I think we have a right to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand fully what the chairman of the committee said in his opening remarks concerning the Treasury Department.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, owing to a misunderstanding as to the language referred to, I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. Now, Mr. Chairman, the next new language to which the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has reserved the point of order appears on page 22, lines 13 to 15, where the entire phrase is as follows:

To advise and assist the owners of woodlands and lands within and adjacent to the national forests in the proper care of the same.

The new language there consists of the words "and assist" and the words "lands within and adjacent to the national forests." The current law contains the words "to advise the owners of woodlands in the proper care of the same." The words "and assist" were inserted because they more nearly cover the work that sometimes is done in the line of cooperation with the owners of private woodlands.

The general law creating forest reserves and transferring them to the Department of Agriculture authorizes the Forest Service to cooperate with private landowners in administering their lands and in conducting operations upon them. So this language is simply inserted in order to specifically provide for the carrying out of the general provisions of the law.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman permit a question there?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Why is it limited to forests within and adjacent to the national forests? If you take any forests outside of the national forests, why not let it be general? Say that he can assist owners adjacent to national forests and any others.

Mr. SCOTT. Well, the particular reason for inserting the language "and lands within and adjacent to the national forests" is that there are a great many tracts of land which are within or adjacent to national forests owned by States, and owned by railroad companies, where land grants took effect before the forests were set apart, and it is peculiarly of value, both to the Forest Service and to the private owners, whether they be States or corporations, that this cooperative work should be done in such cases.

Mr. NORRIS. I can see how all that is true, that it would be peculiarly to their advantage, but at the same time I do not see why that peculiar advantage should be limited to men who happen to own land that is adjacent to a national forest or within a national forest. Why should they be favored more than others?

Mr. SCOTT. I do not think the Forest Service ought to be permitted to get entirely away from a national forest and assist the owner of woodland in improving it or in doing any work in connection with it. The word "assist" in this connection means actual physical assistance, as I take it. It does not mean mere advice or suggestion. Under other language in the bill the Bureau can advise with the owners of woodlands in any part of the United States as to the best administration for those lands. But we do not authorize the Bureau to assist those men in a cooperative way, the construction of trails or roads, or anything of that kind, for the reason that such work, while it would be of advantage to the private owner, would not contribute to the development or to the value of national forests.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. SCOTT. With pleasure.

Mr. MADDEN. In what particular way are they authorized to assist here under this item?

Mr. SCOTT. Well, this kind of work is done under the language referred to. A county, for example, may wish to cooperate with the Forest Service in building a bridge across a stream which is within or adjacent to a national forest, or the owner of a large tract of woodland, say, one of the States, may wish to cooperate with the Forest Service in building a drift fence or fire lane, or constructing trails or roads through the forest that may be mutually beneficial both to the State lands and to the national forest.

Mr. MADDEN. Do I understand that this would give authority to construct roads at the national expense?

Mr. SCOTT. It would give authority for the Forest Service to contribute part of the expense for the construction of the road, the remainder of the expense to be borne by the other party in interest, and it is provided for, I will say, in the general law.

Mr. MADDEN. Would not that be contrary to the general policy of the National Government on the question of the construction of roads out of the National Treasury as in contradistinction to which they are constructed now from the local treasury?

Mr. SCOTT. No; for the reason that these roads are constructed on Government property, and the Government has always been willing to do that kind of work.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a further question?

Mr. SCOTT. With great pleasure.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, it seems to me that the gentleman is certainly mistaken as to the meaning of the language referred to. I take it from the language in the bill, which is subject, as I understand it, to the point of order, there is no authority for the Government to expend any money or give any aid to the building of a road through any of this adjacent land. The language says, "in the proper care of the same"—which is, the owners of this land in and adjacent to a national forest "shall have assistance in the proper care of the same." That is, I understand, that it should build the road. And now I submit to the gentleman that we ought not by positive enactment of law to provide that the Agricultural Department shall assist in the preservation of these forests simply because they happen to be adjacent to lands that belong to the Government of the United States.

Mr. SCOTT. The general law fully authorizes the Forest Service to cooperate with private individuals, corporations, or municipalities in work that may be equally valuable both to the national forests and other parties in interest; and it is my judgment that the language which is inserted in the paragraph is not subject to the point of order. I do not care to discuss the matter any further.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman from Wyoming on the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this language is clearly subject to the point of order. If it were not subject to the point of order it would not be here. If this were existing law, it would not be necessary to write it into this bill. I do not quite agree with the chairman of the committee as to the broad scope of this amendment. Had it as wide an application as he seems to think it has it would be even more objectionable than it is.

It is quite objectionable enough with a much narrower construction of its meaning. It clearly gives the Secretary the power under this appropriation to assist, and assist as far as he may see fit to do so, and at as great expense as he may care to make, to assist in the proper care of woodlands. In other words, he could provide a number of laborers for clearing up a park or a woodland. He could under this appropriation improve or assist in the improvement of any woodland in the United States. He could under this appropriation send men into any timber land in the United States for the purpose of piling the brush and clearing the ground, for the purpose of doing anything and everything that might tend to improve the forest. In other words, under this language the Secretary of Agriculture would become the caretaker, the gardener, and park director of all the timber lands in all the United States. Clearly there is no such authority in the present law. It simply gives him authority to advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same.

That is the language of the present law; and clearly this is subject to the point of order and is very dangerous legislation. I insist on the point of order as to the words "and," at the end of line 13, and the word "assist," at the beginning of line 14, and the words "and lands," on line 14, and the words "within and adjacent to the national forests," in lines 14 and 15.

The CHAIRMAN. It appears to the Chair that this is new legislation, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the next new language occurs on page 22, lines 23 and 25, and is as follows:

But no such extension shall be made except by the purchase of land or rights therein found to be necessary for such protection, administration, or improvement.

If the point of order is withdrawn against this language or overruled, I shall ask to amend it so that it will read:

That no part of this appropriation shall be used for such extensions except by the purchase of land or rights therein found to be necessary for such protection, administration, or improvement.

Mr. Chairman, the language in the act of February 1, 1905, provided that "all moneys received from the sale of products or the right of use of any land within said forest reserve," and so forth, "shall constitute a special fund, available until expended, as the Secretary may direct, for the protection, administration, and improvement of existing Federal forest reserves." It seemed to your committee that the use of that word "extension" without any limitation was a dangerous provision to be allowed to remain in the law, because under that language some chief of the Forest Service might think himself warranted in going to the Atlantic slope and extending National Forests by buying additional territory there.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman understands, of course, that if that language at any time could have had such a construction, it certainly could not at this time as regards these States as to whose territory there is a prohibition against the creation or extension of forest reserves at this time.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman from Wyoming will remember that there are only six such States. It is possible that among the other forty States it might be so construed under the original language I have quoted. One purpose of the new language was to limit the kind of extension, so it would be used to authorize only the purchase of land such as might be needed adjacent to national forests or already within the national forests.

The reason why such authority is needed sometimes is this: There might be land within the national forests—a homestead, for example—located at such a place with respect to water or some other necessary convenience as to make it practically necessary for the administration of the forest reserve that it should be a part of the forest in order that the ranger or inspector or some other employee might live there. It might be the only place within the forest available for a residence, and for that reason a purchase by the Service ought to be allowed; and for a similar reason there might be a tract of land immediately adjacent to the national forest where water or other conveniences are to be had and which is so located as to make it especially desirable as a ranger station. The Service ought to have the right to buy property so located; but that is the only authority which it ought to have in this direction.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SCOTT. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there any limitation as to how much money can be expended by any provision in the bill as it reads now?

Mr. SCOTT. No; only we are very certain that less money can be expended now than might be expended if the language of the law were not changed.

Mr. MADDEN. It gives now almost unlimited latitude.

Mr. SCOTT. Not so much as it would with this language out. They have now the latitude to spend just as much money as they would have under this language, and, in addition to that, they have the latitude to go clear away and buy property vastly greater in extent than they would have under the language that we put in.

Mr. MADDEN. This language is used for the purpose of limiting the power to purchase additional land?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes; to limit the scope of the word "extension."

Mr. BONYNGE. Does the gentleman refer to the act of 1905 when he says they have unlimited power in purchasing additional land?

Mr. SCOTT. It amounts to very nearly that.

Mr. BONYNGE. Is not the Forester compelled under the act of 1905 in the future to turn into the Treasury all money derived from forest products? He can only use such money as may be specifically appropriated for such purposes as Congress may authorize?

Mr. SCOTT. That is true; but the right to extend the forests still remains. All money received from the sale of forest products and the use of forest products goes into the Treasury instead of being used as a revolving fund. But the language which authorizes the Secretary to extend the national forests has not been eliminated.

Mr. BONYNGE. The amount he may use is limited by the amount appropriated in the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. It is limited, undoubtedly, to the appropriation carried in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of California. Do I understand the purpose of this provision is to take away from the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to extend the forest reserve over new territory?

Mr. SCOTT. Except as limited by the language. The new language is suggested simply to limit the scope of the word "extension."

Mr. SMITH of California. I suppose there is no question but what the language under consideration is obnoxious to the rule and must go out if the point of order is insisted upon, but I very much hope that the point of order will not be urged and that the provision may be left in the bill. An effort is being made to include in the national forest reserve one of the most beautiful agricultural valleys in the West. I have been resisting it in season and out of season for nearly a year, and I am not certain now whether I am going to win out or the other side is going to win out. If I was to state to the House the ultimate purpose which the Department has in including that valley in the forest reserve Members would be shocked.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am sure the Members of the House would like to have the gentleman from California state what the view and what the purpose of the Department is. I think it is important that we should know.

Mr. SMITH of California. I have no desire, Mr. Chairman, to reflect upon the Forest Service or the forestry policy generally. I am very friendly to it. It is working very great good in the West, and is popular among the people generally; and yet I say to you in all seriousness, weighing my words well, that it is working some great outrages upon certain interests in the western part of the country. I refer particularly to the manipulation of water rights acquired under the laws of the State of California, and in this valley I have referred to, the announced purpose of including that valley in a forest reserve is to get control of our water rights and deny them to one person by refusing permission for a right of way for the construction of canals and granting the rights to another; and I can give the committee a number of specific instances where that thing has been done.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of California. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman refer to the acquirement by the National Government of the Kent Grove on Mount Tamil Pass, California?

Mr. SMITH of California. Not at all.

Mr. HARRISON. Is not that a case where the acquirement of that grove by the National Government prevented a water company from condemning a large part of the park?

Mr. SMITH of California. I am not familiar with that case at all and express no opinion about it. I am referring particularly to the Owens River Valley where, to my knowledge, a number of cases have arisen where people have appropriated the water under the laws of the State of California and have then applied to the Forestry Department for a right of way over the forestry lands that they may construct their canals. Of course, a water appropriation is utterly valueless unless you can get the right of way and construct your canals. I know of a number of instances where they have refused the right of way to the first appropriator and granted it to the second or to a later one. And I am told in the Forestry Department by many of the subordinates there, and it is not denied by the Chief of that department, that the purpose in extending the forest reserve over the Owens River Valley is to get control of the water rights on that stream and parcel them out to those who they think ought to have them, in utter disregard of the law of the State of California. I say it is an outrage, and it is the one thing in the Forestry Service that I shall denounce upon every occasion, although I am exceedingly friendly to the general purposes and plans of the department as it is working out in the West.

Mr. POLLARD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of California. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. POLLARD. In the instance to which the gentleman refers, is it not a fact that the policy or rather the intention of the department is to prevent this one company to which the gentleman refers having a monopoly on the water power there?

Mr. SMITH of California. No; it is exactly the opposite. It is to throw all of the water of that stream into one control.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. SMITH of California. Yes.

Mr. POLLARD. I should like to ask the gentleman whether that matter has been carried beyond the local forester?

Mr. SMITH of California. At the present time it is pending before the Secretary of the Interior. I have been doing all that I could to block the progress of the movement from the time it began, and argued my point before the Forester, and understand that I was overruled.

Mr. POLLARD. Does the gentleman mean the local forester in California or the Chief?

Mr. SMITH of California. I mean the Chief, Mr. Pinchot. I have not seen his report, but I understand it is in favor of the extension of the forest. The matter is now pending before the Secretary of the Interior, and he is waiting the arrival of certain remonstrances that are in the mail on the way from California that I may present them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of California. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POLLARD. I should like to inquire of the gentleman whether or not there are other factors that enter into that; whether this water supply the gentleman speaks of does not hold the key to the forestry situation there?

Mr. SMITH of California. Not in the least.

Mr. POLLARD. Where the stock that is grazing could have access to the water.

Mr. SMITH of California. Not at all. There is not one single element of forestry in the problem, nor is there claimed to be by the Forestry Department. Now, I am using strong language, and I invite any gentleman on this floor to go to Mr. Pinchot and verify it and see if my statement is not absolutely correct. It is not pretended to be a forestry matter in any sense of the word, except for the purpose of getting control of the water appropriations on Owens River, and I can scarcely trust myself, in a parliamentary body, to express the indignation and outrage that I feel and that the people of that valley feel at what is going on in that department of the Government.

It is declared to be the purpose and said to be done at the instance of one of the parties who desires to secure the waters of that valley for irrigation purposes.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman pardon an interruption?

Mr. SMITH of California. Yes; certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman does not mean to convey the impression that Mr. Pinchot, the Chief of the Bureau, gives as his reason for this that he wants to secure this water for some private individual? I should like to have the gentleman state the answer that Mr. Pinchot gives to the arguments which the gentleman advanced.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Pinchot himself has never said to me in specific language exactly what his purpose was, but every subordinate in his office, from the women stenographers up, tell me that the purpose of that is to get control of the water rights, as I have indicated, and Mr. Pinchot will not deny it; but he has said to me that the moving purpose, the interests which requested him to extend the forest boundary, were the parties who desired to secure control of that water for irrigation in opposition to other irrigation projects that are contemplated, and where other parties have made earlier appropriations of the water than the one which he desires to serve.

Mr. SCOTT. Is it or is it not true that the water rights now are practically monopolized by one corporation, and that Mr. Pinchot desires to get control of them in order that those rights may be distributed among all the people?

Mr. SMITH of California. On the contrary, it is exactly the opposite. There are a half dozen appropriations of water on that river which he is endeavoring to defeat, in order that the water may all fall into the hands of one party.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMITH of California. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Along the lines suggested by the chairman of the committee, I should like to know what authority Mr. Pinchot has for going up and down the country dividing water rights in the State of California. Does the gentleman know?

Mr. SMITH of California. Has the gentleman read Coniston, and does he remember Jethro Bass?

Mr. MONDELL. Very well.

Mr. SMITH of California. Jethro Bass never said to a man when he wanted him to vote his way, "If you don't I will foreclose your mortgage," but he always let him understand that he held the mortgage. Mr. Pinchot does not say that he is going to interfere with water rights per se, but he does desire and is endeavoring to control the right of way, and that is the material thing. You can not construct a ditch without a right of way. You can not bring the Government into court and sue it and obtain a condemnation, and therefore you are up against Jethro Bass.

Mr. MONDELL Who has his successors in type.

Mr. SMITH of California. Who holds the mortgage.

Mr. MONDELL. I wish to ask the gentleman if the land which it is proposed to include in this extension of the forest reserve contains any considerable amount of timber?

Mr. SMITH of California. None at all. There is not a stick of timber, except a few scattering cottonwood and willow trees which have sprung up along damp places, as is always the case where irrigation is practiced. There is not a forest tree. It would be little less than a sin to devote that beautiful agricultural valley to forest purposes, to lay it waste as is contemplated by this plan, to lay forever waste that beautiful valley, in order that the water may be carried out of it for irrigation of a distant valley. Let me tell you what they did last year, now that we are on this very important subject. The Government of the United States has something like 150,000 or 200,000 acres of agricultural land in that valley. The Reclamation Service has made two reports upon irrigation projects. In the first one there was a very elaborate report upon the condition of the soil and the opportunities for irrigation, which stated that there were about 80,000 acres of first-class land and about 70,000 acres of second-class land, it being second-class in the sense that it would require a little more effort to level the surface.

The Government of the United States had the first appropriation on the waters of that stream taken up by Mr. Lippincott in the interest of and in the name of the United States that it might use it for the reclamation and fertilization of that valley. Two plans were examined for a project. One was estimated to cost $20 per acre, including a large reservoir that would impound the winter floods. The other was estimated to cost from $5 to $6 an acre. I say there has not been another such favorable project for irrigation proposed anywhere in the United States, and the records of the Reclamation Service will show that they have no project now under way where the cost is as low.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of California. May I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to continue for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of California. The second project contemplated an expenditure of $300,000 to irrigate from 50,000 to 75,000 acres of this land—that is, at from $4 to $6 an acre. There were other parties who wanted the water for irrigation for a remote valley entirely outside of the watershed. The Reclamation Service abandoned its irrigation project in that valley because on the surface it was said that they could not spend $300,000 at that time in the irrigation of this land.

Thereby they lost the water rights to many thousands of miner's inches, which would have irrigated that valley, and it thereby allowed later claimants to go in and claim the water. At the very time they declined to set aside $300,000 to irrigate Government land at a cost of $4 to $6 an acre they did set aside $600,000 to irrigate private land at $50 an acre. That is within the last year. Now, I do not want to appear before the House as in any sense hostile to the forestry policy, but this matter of the manipulation of California water rights, and it may be the same in other States, I say has gone beyond the bounds of endurance. In this same valley there was another case I will mention. A party had taken a water right and begun to construct a power plant and had expended $200,000 or $300,000, and then decided it would like to move the location of the power plant itself 1 mile, and that mile lay over a Government section, and they applied to the Forestry Department for right of way over that 1 mile of land so they could shift the power plant down the stream. They were held up over a year and finally were given the right to construct the plant over that mile only upon condition that they would sacrifice a portion of their water right, which they had obtained under the laws of California, and bind themselves in a contract never to call for more than a stipulated number of inches of water. Now, if you think we are having an easy time in the West in this connection, I ask you to come out and take hold of some of these enterprises and see if you can move them. There ought to be thousands of picks and shovels at work in California to-day constructing power plants, but there is not one. Why? Because you can not get the right of way over the public domain.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. SMITH of California. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you remember the Public Lands Committee granted a franchise to the people of Los Angeles to tap some waters which the Government owned up the country some 250 miles?

Mr. SMITH of California. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And a water monopoly came here before the committee and wanted to fight and choke them off, but we gave it to them, nevertheless. Now, what has been done with that?

Mr. SMITH of California. There has been nothing done except some surveys and some efforts to finance that undertaking.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What has the water monopoly done that came here to fight it?

Mr. SMITH of California. There was no water monopoly fighting the proposition. You are mistaken there. There were certain companies interested in power plants——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understood they controlled all the water about Los Angeles, did they not?

Mr. SMITH of California. This has nothing to do with them at all; this is 250 miles away.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I thought we were trying to protect the people there from a water monopoly.

Mr. SMITH of California. There were some power companies before the committee desiring to protect their rights, which were protected, and the matter proceeded.

Mr. COOK of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. SMITH of California. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. COOK of Colorado. I would like to ask the gentleman from California if, in his various conversations with Mr. Pinchot relative to the water within the boundary line, or the State water, he has not referred to the water as "our water?"

Mr. SMITH of California. I am not certain that I recall that pronoun in the discussion. I think he has generally, in his language, disclaimed any right to control the water; but he persistently asserts the right to control the right of way, which, of course, is the key to the situation. And I have in my hand here the form of an agreement.

Mr. COOK of Colorado. May I ask another question?

Mr. SMITH of California. Certainly.

Mr. COOK of Colorado. I desire to say for the information of the gentleman, in the hearings before the Agricultural Committee Mr. Pinchot made that statement, notwithstanding the fact that the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Kansas-Colorado case was that the water of Colorado belong to the people of that State, the Arkansas River not being a navigable stream.

Mr. SMITH of California. I read the statement of Mr. Pinchot before the Agricultural Committee with a great deal of interest, and my mind constantly reverted to the character I have referred to this morning, the Hon. Jethro Bass. He did not say he was going to control the water rights, but he constantly referred to the fact that he did control the right of way.

I have in my hand an agreement which the Forestry Department offered to the companies in California now seeking to construct an extensive and far-reaching power plant. It is the most ingenious document I ever saw. It is in the form of an application by the party, wherein he asks to be permitted to do the things the Forestry Department wants him to do, and at the last of it the officer in charge says, "I approve," and signs his name. Thereby, in the future occasions when we have occasion to look back at this matter, it will appear that the parties got all they asked for, and it might put them in a very embarrassing position. Now, I desire to call attention to this, and I will put it in the RECORD, if the House permits, in order that the House may be advised as to the condition of things prevailing on the public domain within the forest reserves. We have heard some talk, and a great deal of talk from high sources, about the control of monopolies in water power. Well, if I would go out here and blow up a bridge on the Pennsylvania Railroad system, I suppose I would prevent a monopoly in the coal-carrying trade, and so, as far as I can see, the only interference with the monopoly of power in the West is the prevention of the construction of power plants by imposing terms and conditions which the power companies can not grant.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from California a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. SMITH of California. I am consuming much more time than I intended, but if the House will grant me five minutes more——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that he may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the gentleman from California [Mr. SMITH] has made a pretty serious charge against the Forester. I would like to know if he can explain to the committee any sufficient reason why the Forester should apparently have taken such course as he describes? Why has he done it?

Mr. SMITH of California. I think, perhaps, in justice to the House I should throw one side light on this question. The party that I have referred to as desiring to obtain this monopoly of the water in the valley is the city of Los Angeles. Now, bear in mind in that connection that the city does not desire the water, and does not claim the water, and does not assert any intention of using the water for municipal purposes. It has acquired perfect water rights to a very large amount of water for city purposes otherwise, but it does desire to acquire all the surplus water of that valley and carry it entirely out of the valley, 250 miles away, through 20 miles of mountain tunnel, for the irrigation of lands adjacent to Los Angeles; and I think that the honorable Forester predicates his extraordinary position upon the belief that it is wise to destroy private irrigation enterprises that they may be thrown into the hands of a municipality which is proposing to construct an irrigation system—a doctrine I do not subscribe to in any sense at all. He and I differ very widely on that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SMITH of California. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I did not know the gentleman was addressing himself to the Los Angeles scheme as to the mains for water. Was it not claimed that the amount of water was absolutely necessary for Los Angeles?

Mr. SMITH of California. No, sir.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Was not that the principle of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of California. It was recommended by the then Secretary of the Interior that only municipal water be carried over the right of way granted by that bill, but you will remember that when we were considering that in the committee a letter arrived before the committee from the White House which denounced that proposition in the bill, and the committee thereupon receded from that, and the bill passed without that provision in it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did not Senator FLINT and other leading citizens come in before the committee and urge the passage of that bill for the salvation of Los Angeles, and in order to procure it they were willing to build a main of 200 miles to furnish enough of the water taken from that area to supply necessary water for Los Angeles?

Mr. SMITH of California. There was no question about the situation as it existed at Los Angeles and its urgent necessity for water. I have no disposition to interfere with their getting all the water they need for municipal purposes; but the question is as to whether they shall take out water for irrigation purposes from the supply in Owens Valley, lying along the banks of the river.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did not the gentleman vote for that bill in the committee?

Mr. SMITH of California. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, now you are criticising the bill.

Mr. SMITH of California. I am not criticising it at all.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I thought you were.

Mr. SMITH of California. The bill merely gave the right of way to take the water out.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And the building of such water mains as necessary to get it down to the city of Los Angeles.

Mr. SMITH of California. Now, the bill had nothing to say whatever in reference to the water or the amount of water.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Was there any evidence before that committee that if we deprived it of this water for the benefit of Los Angeles it would destroy the taxable value of their property?

Mr. SMITH of California. I have stated it very clearly what the point at issue was.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. As I remember it, we clearly guarded all the water rights.

Mr. SMITH of California. It cares for the city's regular water rights, and if it had not been for the interference of the Forest Department and its present desire to extend the forest boundaries so that it may in some way interfere with the use and enjoyment of the water rights of others acquired under the laws of California there would be no trouble about it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman object to that bill now?

Mr. SMITH of California. No; I would like to see it carried out in substance as the Secretary of the Interior recommended it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did it not become law?

Mr. SMITH of California. It did.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is the gentleman endeavoring to have it repealed?

Mr. SMITH of California. I am trying to persuade the House to let this remain in the bill, so that the Forest Department may not sweep the entire valley into the forest reserve and thereby get into possession and control of other water rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD this contract to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. OLMSTED). The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks for the purpose indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The contract is as follows:

SPECIAL USE AGREEMENT.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FOREST SERVICE.

I, ——— ———, of ———, hereby apply for permission to occupy a right of way for a ——— ———.

I do hereby, in consideration for this use, promise and agree to comply with all regulations and instructions of the Department of Agriculture govering national forests, and especially with the following conditions:

1. To pay to the fiscal agent, Forest Service, at Washington, D. C., the sum of ——— annually, in advance, as ground rental, and in addition thereto such conservation charge as shall be specifically fixed by the Forester, which charge for the first year after the beginning of actual production of electric current at the power houses shall not exceed 2 cents per thousand KWH; nor for the second year 4 cents per thousand KWH; nor for the third year 6 cents per thousand KWH; nor for the fourth year 8 cents per thousand KWH; nor for the fifth year 10 cents per thousand KWH. And after said first five years during any successive period of five years the rate of said conservation charge shall not be increased over the rate of charge in force at the end of the last preceding five years by a greater amount than 25 per cent of the maximum rate charged for conservation at any time during said first five years.

It is further agreed that, if at the time of any reading of the meter to determine the amount of conservation charge due, the average amount of electric energy generated per day during the period since the last reading of the meter exceeds 20,000 KWH per day, the rate of conservation charge shall be increased by not more than 1 cent for each full 5,000 KWH developed on the average per day in excess of such 20,000 KWH; but this additional charge shall in no case increase the rate charged beyond 10 cents per 1,000 KWH, and shall be in force only for the first five years after the beginning of productive operation of the plant.

Accurate meters and other instruments adequate for the measurement of the electric current on which said conservation charge is to be paid shall be installed and maintained in perfect order by me at the power houses where such electric current is generated; and the authorized agent of the Forest Service shall at all times have free access to the same and to all records of the permittee relating to the electric current developed hereunder.

If the Department of Agriculture shall hereafter, for permits of this nature through the national forests, reduce the general scale of conservation charges below these herein above provided for, or shall wholly abolish such charges, then and thereupon the charges to be paid by me hereunder shall be reduced or abolished in like degree.

The conditions of this permit, which relate to charges, shall be binding for a term of forty years from the date of approval hereof, but at the end of that time shall be subject to readjustment by the Secretary then in charge of the national forest land involved in this project; but neither the readjustment of said charges nor the expiration of said term of forty years shall in themselves create or imply any termination of the permit hereby granted.

2. To dispose of refuse as directed by the forest officers and to guard the purity of streams.

3. The permittee, his employees, contractors, and employees of contractors shall, both independently and at the request of the forest officers, do all in their power to prevent and suppress fires.

4. To build new roads and trails where necessary to replace any roads or trails destroyed by construction work or flooding upon said right of way, and to construct suitable crossings for any existing roads and trails which intersect the right of way.

5. To protect all Forest Service and commercial telephone lines at crossings and at all places of proximity to the transmission lines in a standard manner and satisfactory to the forest officers.

6. In building the dam, to follow the usual precautions in the ordinary methods of dam construction; and nothing herein shall be construed to relieve the company from any requirement of the State laws regarding the construction of dams and storage of water.

7. To cut and keep clear of all timber and brush such areas as may be directed by the forest officers, and to pay to the fiscal agent, Forest Service, at Washington, D. C., as required by the forest officers, for all merchantable timber both live and dead, standing and down, cut or destroyed, on national forest land and unperfected claims, except that on the reservoir site of 1,427.4 acres, in the enjoyment of this special use, according to the scale or estimate of the forest officers at a rate to be fixed by the Forester.

8. To pile and burn, under the direction of the forest officers, at the time required by them, all tops, lops, brush, and refuse resulting from the enjoyment of this special use.

9. To begin bona fide construction within eighteen months from the date of approval hereof, and to complete within five years from said date unless the time is extended by the written consent of the Forester.

10. No Member or Delegate to Congress is or shall be admitted to any share, part, or interest in this agreement or to any benefit to arise therefrom. (Secs. 2729–2742, inclusive, U. S. Rev. Stats.)

11. No person undergoing a sentence of imprisonment at hard labor shall be employed in any construction or other work under this permit.

12. To sell power to the Forest Service when required at the lowest rate given to any purchaser.

I further agree, if required, to give satisfactory bond for faithful compliance with all of the above requirements.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent also to place in the RECORD at this place a copy of the bill that I have alluded to about the Los Angeles water power.

Mr. SMITH of California. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill above referred to by Mr. GAINES of Tennessee is as follows:

An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the city of Los Angeles, Cal., certain public lands in California, and granting right in, over, and through the Sierra Forest Reserve, the Santa Barbara Forest Reserve, and the San Gabriel Timber Land Reserve, California, to the city of Los Angeles, Cal.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the city of Los Angeles, Cal., a municipal corporation of the State of California, all necessary rights of way, not to exceed 250 feet in width, over and through the public lands of the United States in the counties of Inyo, Kern, and Los Angeles, State of California, and over and through the Sierra and Santa Barbara forest reserves and the San Gabriel Timber Land Reserve, in said State, for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining canals, ditches, pipes and pine lines, flumes, tunnels, and conduits for conveying water to the city of Los Angeles, and for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining power and electric plants, poles, and lines for the generation and distribution of electric energy, together with such lands as the Secretary of the Interior may deem to be actually necessary for power houses, diverting and storage dams and reservoirs, and necessary buildings and structures to be used in connection with the construction, operation, and maintenance of said water, power, and electric plants, whenever said city shall have filed, as hereinafter provided, and the same shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, a map or maps showing the boundaries, locations, and extent of said proposed rights of way for the purposes hereinabove set forth.

SEC. 2. That within one year after the passage of this act the city of Los Angeles shall file with the registers of the United States land offices in the districts where the lands traversed by said rights of way are located, a map or maps showing the boundaries, locations, and extent of said proposed rights of way, for the purposes stated in section 1 of this act; but no construction work shall be commenced on said land until said map or maps have been filed as herein provided and approved by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, however, That any changes of location of said rights of way may be made by said city of Los Angeles within two years after the filing of said map or maps by filing such additional map or maps as may be necessary to show such changes of location, said additional map or maps to be filed in the same manner as the original map or maps; and the approval of the Secretary of the Interior of said map or maps showing changes of location of said rights of way shall operate as an abandonment by the city of Los Angeles to the extent of such change or changes of the rights of way indicated on the original maps: And provided further, That any rights inuring to the city of Los Angeles under this act shall, on the approval of the map or maps referred to herein by the Secretary of the Interior, relate back to the date of the filing of said map or maps with the register of the United States land office as provided herein.

SEC. 3. That the rights of way hereby granted shall not be effective over any land upon which homestead, mining, or other existing valid claims shall have been filed or made until the city of Los Angeles shall have procured proper relinquishments of all such entries and claims, or acquired title by due process of law and just compensation paid to said entrymen or claimants and caused proper evidence of such fact to be filed with the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, however, That this act shall not apply to any lands embraced in rights of way heretofore approved under any act of Congress, nor affect the adjudication of any pending applications for rights of way by the owner or owners of existing water rights, and that no private right, title, interest, or claim of any person, persons, or corporation, in or to any of the lands traversed by or embraced in said right of way shall be interfered with or abridged, except with the consent of the owner or owners or claimant or claimants thereof, or by due process of law, and just compensation paid to such owner or claimant.

SEC. 4. That the city of Los Angeles shall conform to all regulations adopted and prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture governing the forest reserves, and shall not take, cut, or destroy any timber within the forest reserves, except such as may be actually necessary to remove to construct its power plants and structures, poles and flumes, storage dams and reservoirs, and it shall pay to the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture the full value of all timber and wood cut, used, or destroyed on any of the rights of way and lands within forest reserves hereby granted: Provided further, That the city shall construct and maintain in good repair bridges or other practicable crossings over its rights of way within the forest reserves when and where directed in writing by the Forester of the United States Department of Agriculture, and elsewhere on public lands along the line of said works as required by the Secretary of the Interior; and said grantee shall, as said waterworks are completed, if directed by the Secretary of the Interior, construct and maintain along each side of said right of way a lawful fence as defined by the laws of the State of California, with such lanes or crossings for domestic animals as the aforesaid officers shall require: Provided further, That the city of Los Angeles shall clear its rights of way within forest reserves of any débris or inflammable material as directed by the Forester of the United States Department of Agriculture: Provided further, That the said city shall allow any wagon road which it may construct within forest reserves to be freely used by forest officers and the officers of the Interior Department and by the public, and shall allow to the Forest Service of the United States Department of Agriculture and to the officers of the Interior Department, for official business only, the free use of any telephones, telegraphs, or electric railroads it may construct and maintain within the forest reserves or on the public lands, together with the right to connect with any such telephone lines private telephone wires for the exclusive use of said Forest Service or of the Interior Department: And provided further, That the Forest Service may, within forest reserves, protect, use, and administer said land and resources within said rights of way under forest-reserve laws and regulations, but in so doing must not interfere with the full enjoyments of the right of way by the city of Los Angeles: And provided further, That in the event that the Secretary of the Interior shall abandon the project known as the Owens River project for the irrigation of lands in Inyo County, Cal., under the act of June 17, 1902, the city of Los Angeles, in said State, is to pay to the Secretary of the Interior, for the account of the reclamation fund established by said act, the amount expended for preliminary surveys, examinations, and river measurements, not exceeding $14,000, and in consideration of said payment the said city of Los Angeles is to have the benefit of the use of the maps and field notes resulting from said surveys, examinations, and river measurements, and the preference right to acquire at any time within three years from the approval of this act any lands now reserved by the United States under the terms of said reclamation act in connection with said project, necessary for storage or right of way purposes, upon filing with the register and receiver of the land office in the land district where any such lands sought to be acquired are situated a map showing the lands desired to be acquired, and upon the approval of said map or maps by the Secretary of the Interior and upon the payment of $1.25 per acre to the receiver of said land office title to said land so reserved and filed on shall vest in said city of Los Angeles, and such title shall be and remain in said city only for the purposes aforesaid, and shall revert to the United States in the event of the abandonment thereof for the purposes aforesaid: Provided, however, That the terms of this act shall not apply to any lands upon Bishop Creek or its branches in said county of Inyo.

SEC. 5. That all lands over which the rights of way mentioned in this act shall pass shall be disposed of subject to such easements: Provided, however, That if construction of said waterworks shall not have been begun in good faith within five years from the date of approval of this act, or if after such period of five years there shall be a cessation of such construction for a period of three consecutive years, then all rights hereunder shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 6. That the city of Los Angeles is prohibited from ever selling or letting to any corporation or individual, except a municipality, the right for such corporation or individual to sell or sublet the water sold or given to it or him by the city.

SEC. 7. That the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act at any time is hereby reserved.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, since this matter has come up I have taken pains to go to the telephone and call up Mr. Pinchot, in order that I might find out what is the truth in regard to this matter, and Mr. Pinchot tells me the situation is this: That the entire California delegation, including the Senators, excepting Mr. SMITH, in a body, requested, and almost demanded, that this forest reserve be created for the purpose of furnishing a water supply for the city of Los Angeles, and that the city is entirely dependent on this water for supply.

Now, the gentleman from California [Mr. SMITH] comes in here and undertakes to say that the Department is trying to create a monopoly out there; that it is taking the water rights out of the hands of one monopoly and putting them in the hands of another. I simply want to put Mr. Pinchot's position before the House. He tells me the facts are as I have stated.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the committee have given very careful consideration to these matters. We have gone into the operations of the Forestry Service at great length, and have spent hours and hours in investigations and hearings in order that we might become familiar with this great department, and I want to say to the House that so far as the committee have been able to ascertain the policy of the department, as promulgated by the chief, is for the purpose of preventing monopolies in water rights and other rights all along the line instead of encouraging monopolies in any sense.

Mr. SMITH of California. I only desire to say a word. There are four members of the California delegation besides myself on the floor, and if I can find the others I will bring them here, and I request the House to call them to testify as to whether they have asked Mr. Pinchot to extend the forest reserve over the Owens River Valley.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I never did.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I never did.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Chairman, I never did. [Laughter.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I never did. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has all the California delegation been heard from?

Mr. SMITH of California. I will get the rest of them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have finally got at the point of the argument of the gentleman from California [Mr. SMITH]. I finally found out that he was discussing the Los Angeles proposition. I have practically stated the substance of that proposition as I recall it. We passed a bill tapping a great Government lake 200 miles up in some valley. It is owned by the Government. A few water franchises or privileges had been given to some water company, a monopoly it seemed, which had come before the committee and wanted to smother the bill and choke off the people of Los Angeles from having the water from this lake, which contains water enough to supply all who wanted it. This company, through its lawyer and agents, talked about vested rights. I said, "If you have any vested rights, go to the Federal courts and protect them. We do not want lawyers for water monopolies taking up the time of this great, hard-worked Public Lands Committee talking about vested rights, while the people of Los Angeles and all that beautiful country are famishing for water. There is plenty for all." We promptly reported the bill. We passed it, and the gentleman says it has become a law. The gentleman voted for it.

I think every member of the committee voted for it; I know I did. Now, talk about water monopoly! That is the reason why the people of Los Angeles were appealing to Congress for freedom of water rights up 250 miles in the mountains of California.

Not only that, but, as I recollect the proposition, they said they had the money, or could soon get it, to build this almost Herculean project.

What is the proposition in the bill? It is—

To extend the national forests, but no such extension shall be made except by the purchase of land or rights therein found to be necessary for such protection, administration, or improvement.

Mr. Chairman, it may be necessary out in that great Sahara, that country which is made beautiful by irrigation, for the Government to buy land and to protect the forests; to protect the water and give it to the people by measurement. As I recollect these irrigation water propositions, they are all guarded by statutory limitations to prevent waste. The water, in other words, is practically metered to the people by law and by machinery.

There is no waste of water so far as I know, judging from the evidence that has come before that committee. Another proposition, gentlemen, there are lumber kings in the West who have gone into the forest like scouts and are cutting down the forests, not only in the Southern States west of the Mississippi River, but throughout all the West. What else? Instead of the Federal Government more anxiously, more industriously than it has, and more successfully than it has, preserving the forests and preserving the great timber of the forests to build the homes of the real homesteader in the far West, these lumber kings have by direction and indirection, by fraud and under the forms of law, invaded the forests of the West, cut down the great trees and the timbers, sawed them up, and the lumber instead of being used to build the homes of the honest or real homesteader of the West, the man who has gone there to live; a great portion of this timber is sawed up and shipped to foreign countries, to build the homes of kings and queens and the peasantry of foreign lands.

That makes it harder for the honest homesteader of the West to build his little cabin where he may live, where the spirit and letter of our homestead public laws provide that he may live. Instead of sawing it up for the use of these homesteaders, and selling it at reasonable prices to them, it is cut down, sawed up, and shipped to the foreign countries, where they have, perhaps, more trees than they have in this country, thus making lumber scarce; and when we get it we pay enormous prices, too often fixed by the lumber trust.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask for three minutes more.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I am very reluctant to refuse the request of the gentleman from Tennessee; but he must recognize that all of this debate is entirely out of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Technically, perhaps, it is out or order; but am I not trying to preserve the forest reserve, as the gentleman is trying to do with his bill? I am with him in his work. Am I not struggling on the Public Lands Committee to preserve these forests?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to say to my friend from Kansas that when you get me out in the woods I am at home. [Laughter.] I have swung an ax many a day in the woods. I want to say that the great forests of this country should be preserved at least for the sons of the Western homesteader to cut and make for themselves happy homes in that land, instead of being taken by the lumber trust, which has been unharmed under our trust laws, though it has been in the courts since 1890, when the Sherman Act was passed. The Department of Justice is now after this trust in the West and these evildoers. I am against all these wrongdoers and am trying to help the Department to protect our great forests and the public lands, so that when they are sold the funds may be put into the Treasury, not to help the South, not to help Tennessee, not to help the great district which I represent, but that it may be used to irrigate the lands in the West and help the honest homeseeker there. Where are you going to get your money for irrigation after you have sold all your public lands, and for little or nothing? I stopped here in the House a public-land sale a few days ago because the price was too small, only $2.50, I believe. I have received information heretofore and again this morning—men stopped me on the street and told me that this same land or adjoining land was selling at $250 a residence lot, and that this same land that was about to be given away at $5 or $2.50 would be worth in a few years $1,000—in less than five years. Think of that, gentlemen,

That is the work I am trying to do; that is the work Secretary Wilson is trying to do; that is the work President Roosevelt is trying to have done; that is the work the Department of Justice is trying to have done. I stand here for honest administration of the law against land thieves, against the lumber trust, against the cutting down trees and sending them to foreign countries to build homes for aliens instead of building them up in the great West, which is a part of our own country. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, we have discussed pretty nearly every subject under the sun, and the gentleman from Tennessee has shown great familiarity with this matter for one who has attended the meetings of the committee so little.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I manage to keep up with the bills your committee report, and I am on the floor to attend to them, as the RECORD shows, and shall continue to be. I shall be and am present when I can get away from my own people's important work. That really takes more time than I have and denies me the rest which every man should take. I have no malice toward any Member of this House. I do my full duty as I see it day in and out, not only to my own people, but to the country at large. I am doing my best to have the laws respected and better ones made. I apologize to no man on earth for what I have done or fail to do.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, we have discussed every subject under the sun except the subject before the committee, and that is the point of order as to the language contained in lines 23, 24, and 25, page 22, to wit:

But no such extension shall be made except by the purchase of land or rights therein found to be necessary for such protection.

I propose to discuss that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Wyoming makes that point of order?

Mr. MONDELL. The point of order is reserved as to the whole paragraph, and I will make the point of order——

Mr. SMITH of California. Why does the gentleman make it?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California wants to know why I make it, and I will state why I make it, or, rather, why I shall insist upon it.

If I took the view of this language that the chairman has expressed and that the gentleman from California [Mr. SMITH] seems to have, I do not think I should insist on the point of order; but, Mr. Chairman, it is not usual for committees to bring in legislation limiting the authority of the various Departments over which they have control in just this sort of language. If it had been intended to limit the authority of the Department, it ought to have been done very clearly. If it were a limitation, then the point of order would not be good; but it is not a limitation. It is an extension of power in the guise of a limitation. I had the honor to be the author of the bill under which the forest reserves were transferred to the Department of Agriculture, and I was a member of the conference committee that agreed upon the provision authorizing the Forestry Service for a limited length of time to use the proceeds of the sales of products of the reserves for certain purposes.

Now, it was certainly not the intent of any member of that conference committee and not the thought of any member of either committee that had charge of that subject that that provision in any way authorized the Department of Agriculture to buy forest lands or to make expenditures with a view of acquiring forest lands; and I am confident that it has been held at all times that there is no such authority vested in the Agricultural Department. This is clearly authority to secure, to purchase lands, and I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that if this language remains in, it will not only authorize the purchase of lands in the vicinity of forest reserves now established, but it will authorize the purchase of forest lands anywhere under this appropriation for the purpose of extending the forest reserves. I would also call the Chair's attention to the fact that the provision I have referred to contained in the act transferring the forest reserves to the Agricultural Department was repealed by the provision contained in the sundry civil act last year discontinuing the special fund created from the proceeds of the reserves.

There was also a provision in that act prohibiting the creation or extension of forest reserves in some six States; so that if it were held that the language of section 5 of the law transferring the reserves was still in force—and I do not believe it is—this provision still changes existing law so far as it affects six of the States of the Union within which there is now no authority whatever for the creation or the extension of a forest reserve except by act of Congress. If this language means anything at all, it means that the Secretary may purchase lands anywhere in the Union for forest-reserve purposes, certainly in the vicinity of forest reserves, or adjacent to forest reserves, and that would mean that he could extend forest reserves by purchase where it has been provided by law that there shall be no extension of the forest reserves.

Mr. Chairman, a gentleman near me has called my attention to the fact that I am using the words "forest reserves," while the law uses the words "national forests," and my reason for doing that would be well understood by the gentleman if he were familiar with some of the national forests, so called. I have had some experience in national forests, and I have been over a number of them, and it is very difficult for a man who has had that experience to bring himself to call large areas of bad lands, with a few dwarf evergreens, vast stretches of grazing land covered with, here and there, chapparal and sagebrush, immense areas with scarcely timber enough on them to fence them, national forests. It is quite enough of a stretch of the imagination for me to refer to them as forest reserves. They might, some of them, or at least considerable of the territory included in some of them, better be called grazing reserves, as is indicated by the fact that we obtain over $200,000 per year more from the grazing privileges in the reserves than we do from the sale of timber from them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Wyoming whether there is now law to extend the national forests?

Mr. SCOTT. Undoubtedly there is, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to answer that question, Mr. Chairman. There is a provision contained in the law under which the administration of national forest reserves was transferred from the Interior Department to the Department of Agriculture to this effect:

That all money received from the sale of any products or the use of any land or resources of said forest reserves shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, and for a period of five years from the passage of this act shall constitute a special fund, available until expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the protection, administration, improvement, and extension of Federal forest reserves.

Now, that provision created a special fund to be used for certain specific purposes. That is the act of February 1, 1905. Subsequently and in the agricultural appropriation bill of last year that provision was repealed, and it was provided that from and after the 1st day of July, 1907, all receipts from forest reserves should be covered into the Treasury, so that the special fund ceased to exist and with it went the authority conferred to use it for certain purposes, if in fact it ever conferred authority to do what is now contemplated.

In the same bill, I call the Chairman's attention, there was a provision which prohibited the creation or extension of forest reserves within certain States named in the bill. That is an absolute prohibition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not care to hear the gentleman from Wyoming further upon the point he has raised, and will decide it unless the gentleman from Kansas desires to discuss it.

Mr. SCOTT. I am ready for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. OLMSTED). It appearing that there is authority of law to extend the national forests without this condition, and the language against which the point of order is made being intended to restrict the authority now conferred by the law, it seems to the Chair that it changes existing law, and is therefore obnoxious to the rule. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that an amendment will not be in order until the other point of order against the balance of the paragraph is either made or withdrawn or disposed of.

Mr. SCOTT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will pass to the consideration of the next language against which a point of order has been made.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the next point of order made by the gentleman?

Mr. SCOTT. On page 23, line 69, appears this new language, "and with respect to national forests shall aid the other Federal Bureaus and Departments in the performance of the duties imposed on them by law." The existing law authorizes the Forestry Service to cooperate with States, counties, and municipalities in the enforcement of State laws, but there is no provision authorizing this Bureau to cooperate with other Bureaus in the same Department, and it is absolutely in the interest of the public service that there should be such cooperation. It happens often, for example, that the Bureau of Animal Industry desires to inspect the stock that is grazing within a national forest, and the forest rangers and other forest employees can be of a great deal of assistance to those inspectors.

It happens also that the officials of the Reclamation Service sometimes have work to do within a national forest, and there is surveying, gauging, and mineral examinations on the part of officials of the Geological Survey. It often happens also that Land Office agents are required to do work of various kinds in the national forests, and it seems to your committee that the agents and officials of the Forest Service might be well authorized to cooperate with them and with other agents and officials of the various Departments. That is the only purpose of this language, and I hope the gentleman from Wyoming will not insist upon his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask if the gentleman from Wyoming makes the point of order?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order for the moment; but before I speak upon the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to the fact I had intended in making the point of order against the new language at the bottom of page 22; to also make the point against the words "administration or improvements," in line 1, page 23, which is part of the same sentence, so that the language I desire to have ruled upon is, "but no such extension shall be made except by the purchase of lands or rights therein found to be necessary for such protection, administration, or improvement."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman understands that to be the language to which the gentleman's point of order runs. The Chair will now state that the gentleman from Wyoming having reserved a point of order against the entire paragraph, that point of order ought to be made or disposed of before points against intermediate items, sentences, or phrases are taken up.

Mr. SCOTT. Before the present occupant of the chair had taken the chair the question had been brought up, and it was agreed, while the gentleman from Wyoming had reserved the point of order against the entire paragraph, that new language in different parts of the paragraph should be considered one point at a time and passed upon, and it was in pursuance of that agreement that the gentleman from Wyoming now discusses the point of order referring to the new language which I have just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not interfere with that order, although it will be readily seen that the ruling upon a point of order against two lines might depend upon the question whether the balance of the paragraph were permitted to remain in or not. In case a paragraph itself out of order should be permitted to remain in the bill, no point being made against it, a point against a part of that paragraph might have to be overruled, although standing by itself the portion complained of would offend against the rule.

Mr. MONDELL. My understanding is it was only by unanimous consent we proceeded in the form we did.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well, then. The Chair now understands the gentleman to make the point of order upon the words beginning with "with respect," in line 6, page 23, and ending with the words "by law," in line 9.

Mr. MONDELL. Where is that?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman then state his point of order?

Mr. MONDELL. The language under discussion, Mr. Chairman, at this time, is on lines 7, 8, and 9, page 23.

Mr. SCOTT. If I may be permitted, the next new phrase includes the following words: "With respect to national forests shall aid the other Federal bureaus and Departments in the performance of the duties imposed upon them by law." I would like to have that phrase disposed of, and then we will pass to the other one, "and hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time divide," and so forth.

Mr. MONDELL. The chairman of the committee has called my attention to the fact that the beginning of that sentence is the word "and" on line 6.

The CHAIRMAN. That is as the Chair stated it and understands it.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] a question.

Mr. MONDELL. I would be glad to answer.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman make the point of order to the word "hereafter," on line 1, page 23, or does he waive that?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not raised that question. That question has not been raised. The chairman of the committee called attention to the language referred to, and so far the word "hereafter," in line 1, page 23, has not been taken up. I doubt if it is new.

Mr. MADDEN. I assumed that the gentleman from Wyoming was saying that he was not going to take it up, because he had gone down——

Mr. MONDELL. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the chairman of the committee himself stated that the next new language in the bill was the language which he has just read.

Mr. MADDEN. If we are going to proceed in order I would like to have the word "hereafter" taken up first.

Mr. SCOTT. The reason, perhaps, I did not call attention to that word was because it was in the law last year. The current law reads:

Hereafter officials of the Forest Service designated by the Secretary of Agriculture shall, in all ways that are practicable, aid in the enforcement of the laws of the States or Territories with regard to stock—

And we will not need that language in again. We are simply providing that the Service shall cooperate with the other Bureaus.

Mr. MONDELL. Was the word "hereafter"——

Mr. SCOTT. Was in the language of the current law.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, that was my understanding of the matter, and therefore I did not call it up.

Now, as regards the language under discussion, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I am exceedingly anxious to assist in doing anything and everything that is right and proper in the care and the preservation of the national forests. I have always been in favor of the national forests on the public land of the West, within proper boundaries and under proper administration. It was my privilege to have the opportunity as Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office to pass upon some of the reserves established some ten years ago, and among others——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if the gentleman does not wish to discuss the point of order he is quite ready to rule.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will indulge the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman does not intend to insist upon his point of order, he will say to the Chair.

Mr. MANN. Others may do so.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman does not object to others insisting upon it, but he would like to have the privilege of discussing the matter for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was unable to hear whether the gentleman said he would or would not insist.

Mr. MONDELL. I have not made the point of order as yet, and I move to strike out the word "and," on page 23.

The CHAIRMAN. That will not be in order until the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. MONDELL. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desires to speak on the point of order, it is unnecessary. If the gentleman desires to speak on others matters, the Chair will ask unanimous consent.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman does not expect to discuss the point of order further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HACKNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion as to whether he would make or reserve the point of order to that clause?

Mr. MONDELL. I would say to the gentleman that the point of order is reserved against the entire paragraph.

Mr. HACKNEY. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman feel that there is any likelihood or not of duplication of the work in these bureaus if this paragraph is left in? I believe the gentleman is in a position to answer that question more intelligently perhaps than any one else.

Mr. MONDELL. That is what I intended to discuss, if I may be given an opportunity. I began by saying that I am in hearty sympathy with the legitimate work of the Forestry Bureau. I had something to do in an official way with the creation of some of the forest reserves in the West, among others a large reserve, the Medicine Bow Reserve, in my own State. I have always been in favor of a reasonable and proper forest-reserve policy in the West, and not because, Mr. Chairman, I have considered the forest reserves in the nature of an unmixed blessing, because they are not that by any manner of means, and if it were not for the fact that the Federal Government now owns large areas of territory more or less heavily timbered in a region of sparse rainfall, where too rapid and unrestricted cutting of timber might have serious results, I should not be in favor of the forest-reserve policy in the West.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. LEVER. Do I understand the gentleman favors forest reserves on the ground that it preserves the water flow in the West?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Chairman, that is a pretty large question. While the preservation of forests and the control over forested areas to preserve proper conditions have something to do with the regulation of water flow, I know of no subject upon which there have been so many exaggerated statements made, so many unfounded claims made, as in regard to the effect upon water flow and conservation by the preservation and maintenance of forests.

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman admit that it is controlled in a large measure by the preservation of the forests?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I think the forests have something to do with water conservation and stream flow; but there are many other factors affecting water conservation besides forests, and, in my opinion, a vast territory could and often has a fairly regular water flow without forests; and as far as water flow is concerned, a territory even as large as the United States could, in my opinion, get along very well without any considerable forests at all if it were not for the fact that we need lumber and love trees. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] looks horrified. I am not surprised at that, in view of the vigorous and exaggerated propaganda we have had on the other side of the subject for a long time.

In my opinion an acre of well-cultivated ground is worth 10 acres in woodland in the conservation of water. In my opinion there is nothing that conserves water like cultivated areas; and as a practical matter I have no doubt we could get along very well over vast areas of cultivated territory without forests. On the other hand, we all love forests, they are pleasing in appearance, they add grace and charm and variety to the landscape, they appeal to us; we all love woodlands, and we need timber and lots of it, and we should therefore encourage the growth of forest trees.

Mr. BANNON. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has ever examined into the question of the effect of the forests of Pennsylvania and West Virginia upon the Ohio River and its tributaries?

Mr. MONDELL. "The gentleman" does not pretend to be an expert on this subject. "The gentleman" has some views, and those views are founded not on the ground that I have made more of a study of the subject than some other gentlemen have made, but upon considerable study of the subject; and I will say in answer to the gentleman from Ohio that there is no question but what the rapid cutting over of an enormous area of woodland does have an effect upon the flow of streams for a time. But, in my opinion, the flow of streams in our country has been affected infinitely more by tiling and draining than by the cutting of the forests. If the cutting of the matured forests shall lead to the cultivation of the soil, then the second condition of that region is better than the first, for you have had the fruitage of years of forest growth and then you have the annual yield of crops. If, on the other hand, it shall lead to a second growth of trees, which soon shade the ground, then within a few years the condition of that territory is infinitely better for the conservation of moisture than when the timber was of large growth and did not thoroughly shade the ground and did not protect the surface of the ground from the drying influence of wind and sun.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The time of Mr. MONDELL having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield to me, the gentleman makes the statement that the cultivation of the land would have a greater effect in maintaining the stream flow than the preservation of the forests. Is not that due to the fact that in the cultivation of the land there is provided a spongy top surface which soaks up the water as it falls and preserves it?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman clearly understands the reasons. You make a better sponge by cultivating the soil than you have under almost any kind of forest growth.

Mr. LEVER. If you cut the forest off of the mountain side where you can not cultivate the land, how would you expect to maintain the stream flow?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, well, the gentleman knows that you can not eat your pie and have it, too. The gentleman knows if the National Government owned all the woodland of the country, if we took up the systems of monarchial countries across the seas in regard to the ownership of railroads and forests and all that sort of thing, we would be in a very large and possibly lucrative business; but the gentleman understands that that would mean the cutting of the forests.

There is infinitely more timber being cut in my State to-day, with the timber all in the forests reserves, than there ever was before the reserves were established. Before there were reserves we had little sawmills all over our territory, cutting 8,000, 10,000, and 12,000 feet of lumber a day each and generally only running part of the year. I will speak of this for just a moment while I am on this subject of monopoly we have heard so much about. We had these little mills scattered all over our territory, their owners owning each a small amount of woodland, cutting a little lumber for the use of the neighbors and the neighboring towns, but we do not have much of that sort of enterprise under the present forestry system. We have one reserve in my State which is larger than and about the shape of the State of Vermont, and in the entire eastern portion of that great reserve there is practically only one timber cutting. Another large cutting is, I believe, proposed in the eastern portion of the reserve farther south, at the head of the Wind River, but the lumber business of that and of other large reserves is in few hands. There was a time when there were a number of small mills along the borders of that reserve, but the reserve policy has been such that no man of ordinary means can afford to remain in the business.

So we have sales of 5,000,000, 10,000,000, or 50,000,000 feet of timber to a single corporation, monopolizing absolutely all the timber in areas larger than some of the older Commonwealths of the country. Now, I did not intend to go into this subject and I had intended to further answer my friend from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] by saying that in such a hillside cutting as he refers to, if made, there may and there may not result a condition not so favorable to the conservation of water as when the forest remains; it all depends on many factors, some of which at least are not affected by the creation of forest reserves. I started out to say that I am in harmony with a proper forest-reserve policy in the West, not because it is an unmixed blessing, but because, in my opinion, under some of the conditions that exist there it is probably a necessary evil; but there are many features of the present policy that ought to be modified.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question about the West? Does he not think this forest-reserve business has been extended entirely too far and too much land included?

Mr. MONDELL. A little later the gentleman hopes to discuss that question, and he heartily agrees with the gentleman from Texas in that matter, that the forest reserves have been extended over country neither forested nor fit for forestation, and included in the reserves not for the purpose, as I believe, of creating forests, but for the purpose of accomplishing other ends, some of which were suggested by the gentleman from California [Mr. SMITH], ends and purposes entirely foreign to those contemplated in the enactment of the forest reserve laws.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would ask the gentleman if it does not retard the development of the country?

Mr. MONDELL. It retards it tremendously, as I could show if I had time, by the testimony of hundreds of letters that I have received, and by very wide personal acquaintance with the conditions.

But, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fact that the time of the committee is limited, and I simply want to say that so long as this service is confined within proper bounds and carried on for the purposes contemplated by law I certainly have no desire to hamper or restrict its operation. I have always been favorable to its operation in conformity with law.

I fully appreciate the fact that there are conditions under which the Forestry Bureau may very properly cooperate with other bureaus, and I trust that this authority so granted will not lead to duplication of work, but will rather tend to friendly aid and assistance between the employees and the officers of the various bureaus in connection with the work within the national forests, and therefore, so far as I am concerned, I withdraw the point of order on the language in question.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LONGWORTH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 134. Joint resolution for the relief of Archibald G. Stirling, recently midshipman, United States Navy;

H. R. 225. An act to amend section 4463 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the complement of crews of vessels and for the better protection of life;

H. R. 3822. An act for the relief of James Behan;

H. R. 4763. An act transferring Commander William Wilmot White from the retired to the active list of the Navy;

H. R. 6064. An act for the relief of Roman Scholter;

H. R. 10075. An act for the relief of Copiah County, Miss.;

H. R. 10540. An act to amend section 73 of the act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii;

H. R. 12292. An act for the relief of A. E. Couch;

H. R. 12476. An act to place the name of William S. Shacklette on the retired list of the Navy as pharmacist;

H. R. 13448. An act to authorize the counties of Allegheny and Washington, in the State of Pennsylvania, to change the site of the joint county bridge which now crosses the Monongahela River at Monongahela City, Pa., and to construct a new bridge across said river in the place of said present bridge upon a new site;

H. R. 14282. An act to authorize the appointment of a deputy clerk at Big Stone Gap, Va;

H. R. 15070. An act for the relief of J. Edmund Strong;

H. R. 18615. An act to authorize the Cairo and Norfolk Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Cumberland River; and

H. R. 18616. An act to authorize the Cairo and Norfolk Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5589) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 48.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made for a project of improvement of Wood River from the point where it empties into Klamath Lake, in Klamath County, Oreg., to the head of navigation, and report the same to Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 19955. An act making appropriations to supply certain additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, there are a considerable number of pages of the bill, and as many of the Members are interested in the question concerning the Bureau of Soils, I ask unanimous consent that if that paragraph is reached during this afternoon, it go over until to-morrow morning without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER of Vermont). The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that if the paragraph relating to the Bureau of Soils is reached to-day it may be postponed until to-morrow without prejudice.

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not wish to object, Mr. Chairman, because I think I have the same view and purpose as has the gentleman from Georgia, but some of us can not be in the House to-morrow.

Mr. GRIGGS. There are many more that can not be here this afternoon.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then I will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the next new language in the paragraph is page 23, lines 10 to 17:

And hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time divide and designate all lands heretofore or hereafter reserved for national forests under the provisions of section 24 of the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," after such lands have been so reserved, as he may deem best for administrative purposes.

I discussed this language at some length in my opening statement, and do not desire to detain the House now further than to say that as the forests were originally created by proclamation of the President no consideration was given to the question of administration. They were frequently created extending over parts of two States, or embracing within their limits an impassable mountain range, making it very difficult to administer them as a unit, economically and efficiently, and the only purpose of this language is to authorize the department to make such changes in shape and designation as will permit economy and efficiency in administration. I concede at once that if the point of order is insisted upon it must be sustained.

Mr. MADDEN. In dividing these forests or lands into different districts, I presume there would be a man put in charge of each district. That would necessitate the creation of a bureau to cover each district, would it not?

Mr. SCOTT. No; not a bureau. In the present organization of the Forest Service a supervisor is in charge of one national forest, or a part of it, according to the convenience of the Service. It would not create any new officials; that is, it would not create any new positions. It would make it easier for the men now administering the Service to properly administer it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If a mountain divides a forest reserve, does the gentleman mean to say that there would not be an officer for each one of these districts?

Mr. SCOTT. I do not think it would involve any more officials than are now employed, because now, as a matter of necessity in the physical administration of the forests, men are stationed at different points of the same forest, but in the matter of bookkeeping each forest must be carried in its original shape. The law provides that 10 per cent of the proceeds of a given forest shall be paid into the treasury of the State in which the forest is located. The gentleman can easily see that if a forest extends over Wyoming and into Utah, it would be a very difficult matter to divide the proceeds which result from the grazing permits and the sale of timber in Wyoming and send that fund to the Wyoming treasury and make a similar division as to the proceeds arising out of that part of the forest in the State of Utah. It is purely in the interest of economy in administration.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think it is economy?

Mr. SCOTT. I think so.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman think that this language gives the Secretary of Agriculture very wide latitude as to the expense in the management of the forest reserve?

Mr. SCOTT. I assume that the Secretary of Agriculture will expend the money economically. I know he will have to do it, because he has got less than he wanted, and I am sure that the insertion of this language will not necessarily increase the expense.

Mr. MADDEN. It gives him the authority to locate divisions which must of necessity create additional expense.

Mr. SCOTT. Not of necessity will it create additional expense, if the gentleman will permit me, because in such a case as I have illustrated, where a forest included an impassable mountain, it is necessary now to have some representative of the Bureau on one side and some one on the other side of that mountain chain; so this language will not add to the number of agents of the Bureau. It will simply allow a division to be made along the crest of that mountain chain, so that the bookkeeping will be a great deal easier.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. What does the word "designate" mean?

Mr. SCOTT. I presume it means to give a title, a name.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. "May from time to time, divide and designate all lands heretofore and hereafter reserved." Does not that mean to divide the vast areas of forest reserves that have no timber on them and run them as a grazing business, and run the actual forest part of it under the forest business, or could not that be the interpretation of this act?

Mr. SCOTT. Well, I think not. In the first place, I feel sure that the gentleman is mistaken in assuming that there is a vast domain within the national forests which now consists of grazing lands; but, in the second place, the word "designate" has already been construed in the interpretation of this law, and is meant only to authorize the Secretary to give a name to a forest which he may create.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to yield for a further question.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman inform me of the general method by which the Government sells timber on the Government reserves?

Mr. SCOTT. The law provides that timber to the value of less than $100 may be sold directly by the officials of the Forest Service. But if the value exceeds $100 bids must be advertised for, and in that case the procedure goes along the usual lines.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Government do any cutting of timber itself?

Mr. SCOTT. None whatever.

Mr. HARRISON. Is the gentleman aware of the general method that is used in some foreign countries, in France, for instance, where the Government forests are very small compared with ours, but which are so administered by the state that the proceeds from them suffice to construct and pay for all their magnificent system of national highways? Does not the gentleman think that our Government could with benefit adopt some method of cutting and administering its own timber lands?

Mr. SCOTT. As I understand, the assault upon the national forest policy now is directed chiefly to the fact that it is too paternalistic in its operations, and to extend these operations to the degree suggested by the gentleman from New York would lend a great deal more force to that attack.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman from Kansas not agree with me that the Government, having these vast, magnificent properties, can with benefit follow the methods of foreign lands by which the value of the forests themselves is increased, namely, by scientific cutting, which increases the value of the timber that is left?

Mr. SCOTT. I hope the gentleman from New York understands that there is no cutting done on the public forests which is not done in compliance with the direction of the Forest Service. The trees are selected by the inspectors of the Forest Service, and no lumberman is allowed to cut timber from the forest reserves except in strict compliance with the regulations laid down by the Service.

In this connection, while I do not want to be drawn into a general discussion at this time of the Forest Service and the policy of national forests, I do want, in view of what has been said here this morning, to put this single statement into the RECORD. The total number of national forests in existence during the fiscal year 1906–7 was about 127.

The total number of sales of timber in all the national forests during that fiscal year under the sum of $500 was 627; between the sums of $500 and $5,000, 94; over $5,000 there were only 33 sales. It will be seen, therefore, that the vast majority of the sales of timber made from national forests during that year were made in very small amounts—under $500.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that these alleged small sales to which he refers are simply the sales for a given period under large contracts of sale; that a man may have contracts for several million feet of timber, and that he may cut $5,000 worth of it or $1,000 or $500 worth this year, and such a sale is presented to him in this statement as a small sale, when, as a matter of fact, it is a fragment of a large sale. Further, let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that while there are necessarily quite a number of small sales, the vast bulk of the material sold is included in large sales. However, I do not wish to be unfair. I realize that in some cases large, quite large, sales are properly made. I have simply said what I have on this subject because so much has been said and claimed to the effect that the forestry policy led to small sales. The fact is that the tendency of the policy is toward very large sales.

Mr. SCOTT. I think the gentleman from Wyoming is mistaken about that, because the law requires that payment shall be made in advance when the sale is made.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman, I think, will recall that, on the contrary, the practice is to only require an advance payment of a comparatively small sum intended to cover the portion of the timber sold which will be cut within a given period, and that under no circumstances do they require cash payments for all of the timber included in these large sales. As a matter of fact, it would neither be just nor practical to do so.

Mr. SCOTT. If the gentleman is correct——

Mr. MONDELL. It is impossible to do it, because they do not know how much the sales are to amount to.

Mr. SCOTT. His information certainly contradicts the impression that has been left upon the members of the committee by the statement which the Forest Service officials have made to us.

Mr. MONDELL. For instance, there was a sale, I understand, in my own State in one forest reserve of 50,000,000 feet of lumber to one concern. Has the gentleman any statement of the sale of that 50,000,000 feet? There is a sale in the Black Hills Forest Reserve, I think, of 60,000,000 feet. Has the gentleman any such sale in that statement?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a question of the gentleman in regard to the point of order——

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that my time be continued for five minutes in order to answer the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman also state what the net profit to our Government is from the sale of that timber?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In regard to my inquiry of the chairman as to what the word "designated" meant, his response was there was not much of lands within these forest reserves which were not covered by timber. I have the history of the forest reserves of Arizona, a very clear statement made by the Forestry Division, for which I take occasion to thank the Acting Forester, Mr. William T. Cox, for the extreme labor he expended in giving answers to questions I asked of that Bureau touching all the reserves in Arizona. Within the full limit of the forest reserves in Arizona there are 12,759,190 acres; the per cent of timber, the woodland, is 77 per cent; the per cent of open land is 22.3; and open land, I understand, has no timber on it at all, not even enough timber or growth of wood to cut 4 cords of wood to the acre.

I do not know whether this is put in that 22 per cent estimate or not, but I know they call them timber lands if they grow any timber. The number of acres of such lands in Arizona reserves alone in round numbers is 2,000,000 acres. Now, if the language of this bill means by "designating" to separate such from the actual timbered lands, and put the grazing lands in one class and the forest lands in another, and the agricultural in another, and put each under separate heads or separate management, thus increasing the number of these police of the plains and the woods, it should not be allowed and the point of order should be insisted on.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, my time was extended and I claim the floor.

Mr. MONDELL. I simply want to ask the gentleman a question. I desire to ask the gentleman as to how much of this Government timber land in this Territory was included in the San Francisco Mountain Forest Reserve in which they gave lieu lands, including some of the finest forest lands on earth?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Lieu lands after every stick of wood had been cut off of it, too.

Mr. MONDELL. There was not any considerable amount to cut off?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes; much of it had been cut over, all, in fact, that had valuable timber on it, but it was even worse when they took vast acres of lands into the reserve that did not have a tree on it, and gave in lieu of it scrip which could be spread at will by the holder over the best timbered lands in the United States. Mind you, these were desert or denuded railroad lands, taken by the Government in exchanging scrip, to spread as just stated. In that one transaction the Department made a bigger raid on our timber resources and gave to monopoly more timber lands than has been stolen by thieves in the whole history of Arizona.

Mr. SCOTT. But the gentleman understands the lieu-land act, to which he refers, was repealed long before the act was passed transferring the control of forest reservations to the Department of Agriculture, so if there is any blame to be given to anyone it does not rest upon that Department.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But the harm had been done and the lands, worthless as they were, had passed to the Government and splendid timber lands taken in lieu of them by the railroad or those holding title under the railroad grant.

Mr. SCOTT. But the present administration of the Forest Service is not responsible for it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I make no point on any administration. It was done long before the Secretary of Agriculture had anything to do with it.

Mr. SCOTT. Answering directly the gentleman's question, I wish to say that the Chief of the Forestry Bureau stated to the Committee on Agriculture that his only reason for asking permission to divide and designate forests was the reason I have stated, and I can not believe that he had a sinister purpose in asking for this language, or any wish to misrepresent his real motive to the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not think the purpose sinister, and I do not want to be so understood. I think it is absolutely plain and evident that that was the purpose of this act. And if that purpose is to segregate the lands as to quality or character and put more men in the country to police the lives of our people in their daily pursuits, I object to it.

Mr. SCOTT. I can hardly agree with the gentleman in his interpretation of it. As I said a moment ago, I do not want to engage in a protracted discussion as to the merits of the forest policy or the merits of the administration of that policy. But in view of what the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] has said, I want to make this statement: It is inevitable, of course, that untimbered land should be covered into certain forest reserves when they are first designated. But the law expressly provides that a petition may be presented to withdraw any such lands from the national forest, and it has been the practice of the Service to give prompt attention to those petitions. As a matter of fact, approximately 12,000,000 acres have been released upon such petitions, because they were not chiefly valuable for national forests. But in spite of this fact, and in spite of the fact that large areas of agricultural lands have been included within the national forests, applications have been received for homesteads within national forests for an area of only one-quarter of 1 per cent of the total national-forest area. It would seem, therefore, that if untimbered land has been included within the national forests, it is not land which anybody seems anxious to own as a private possession.

Now, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withdraw his point of order or insist upon it?

Mr. MONDELL. I desire to discuss the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman does not wish to discuss the point of order, the Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. MONDELL. In view of the fact that the chairman of the committee has asked that the point of order should not be made——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. OLMSTED. The amendment is not in order. I merely suggest that, because I do not wish to lose the right to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. There are other points of order pending.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire, then, in view of the fact that there is a point of order pending against the entire paragraph, to briefly discuss the point of order as it relates to this particular language, and to call attention to the fact that I think the chairman of the committee misunderstands the purpose of the words which have been added.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not quite understand how the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] can take the floor to discuss a point that has been sustained.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may discuss the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] asks unanimous consent to continue for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, the evident purpose of this amendment—at least I fear it would be contended that the effect of the amendment would be to clothe the Department with additional authority in the creation of forest reserves. Similar language to this went out on a point of order made by myself in the last Congress. I have read the hearings before the committee this year on that particular point, and I am not at all satisfied with the explanation given in regard to it. I recall that it has been quite the rule for the Forestry Bureau to secure what seem to me as being rather far-reaching opinions from the Attorney-General's office on various points, and in view of some of these opinions, which greatly widen the scope of provisions relating to this Bureau, I am compelled to exercise great care on behalf of my people to see that no language goes into the bill the intent of which is not clear. In my opinion this provision is exceedingly ambiguous, to say the least, and it is not necessary for the administration of the forest reserves.

Why, if the President has the authority to create a reserve he has authority to divide a reserve. There are, I think, only one or two reserves that extend over two States, and the fact that they do extend over two States does in no way render them more difficult to administer. Forestry is not necessarily a question of State lines. It is a question of the character of the territory, and reserves should not ordinarily be divided by State lines.

The distribution of the money received from the sale of products is not made particularly difficult by reason of the reserves extending into different counties and over State lines. The National Government can as easily distribute between States as the States themselves can distribute between the counties.

There is scarcely one of these reserves that does not extend over several counties; therefore the State authorities have to divide the receipts between various counties. I think of no case in which it would be easier to administer a reserve with further subdivision; but if there be such, I can not understand how this Bureau, which seems to find a way to do about everything it desires to do, whether contemplated by law or not, can not find a way to simply subdivide reserves. In my State there has been a subdivision of one large reservation into three distinct districts, so that practically it is three reserves or three districts of one reserve, and fulfills all the conditions as to administration said to be sought by this amendment. I do not understand the necessity for the provision for the accomplishment of the purpose said to be sought, and I confess that I harbor a suspicion that it may mean more than it seems to.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order against the language beginning on line 2, page 24, and ending with the word "thereof," in line 10 of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman suspend a moment? Will the chairman of the committee inform the Chair whether there is any point of order pending to any language between the language which is covered by the point of order reserved by the gentleman from Wyoming and that covered by the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MONDELL. So far as I am concerned, having reserved the point of order generally against the paragraph, I shall waive the point of order as regard the words "Porto Rico" on line 22, page 23, of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. And in addition to the words "and Porto Rico" to the words "and hereafter," at the beginning of the sentence.

Mr. MANN. I was just about to make the point of order against the words "and hereafter."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he withhold his point of order until these are disposed of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order to the word "hereafter," on line 10, and also, on line 22, to the words "Porto Rico."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I concede, of course, that the point of order is well taken; and if the gentleman makes it I will not debate it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. On page 22, line 23, to the words "and extend."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, that language is in the current law, and it is warranted, I think, by the existing law, the general statute.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is too late with his point of order.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman will find that I am not.

Mr. OLMSTED. A point of order was reserved against the whole paragraph.

Mr. POLLARD. I understand that there is no point of order reserved against the whole paragraph. The gentleman from Wyoming reserved the point of order against the whole paragraph and then he withdrew it and made a point of order against new matter in the bill.

Mr. BONYNGE and others. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is also reserved on other matters.

Mr. MANN. The provision limiting it has been stricken out, and this ought to go out with the proviso. I do not think it is warranted by law.

Mr. SCOTT. In my opinion the authority to extend the national forests is clearly granted by existing law.

Mr. MANN. The provision that the gentleman put into this bill provided that no such extension shall be made except when found to be necessary for such protection, etc. The provision which the gentleman wanted in the bill has gone out, and I do not see what the gentleman wants with this provision in the bill. Is it proposed to give general authority to extend the forest reserve? The limitation which the gentleman had in his bill goes out.

Mr. SCOTT. Well, I am sorry that the limitation went out, because I thought it ought to have been inserted; but I do believe that power ought to remain in the Department to extend the national forests to the extent that this power has hitherto been exercised. Heretofore it has been used to the extent of purchasing small tracts of land absolutely needed in the administration of the forests.

Mr. MANN. I think the provision, Mr. Chairman, is not according to the existing law. The gentleman from Kansas may have it at hand. This gives direct general power for extending forest reserves, unlimited power under the appropriation.

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentleman from Wyoming cited an act of Congress which seemed to give authority to the extent of providing that the proceeds of the sales of certain lands should be paid into the United States Treasury, and that from these funds extensions might be made.

Mr. MONDELL. We understand that has been wiped out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman desires to have the chairman of the committee indicate the authority now existing in the law for the extension of national forests.

Mr. SCOTT. In the act of February 1, 1905, appeared this language:

That all money received from the sale of any products or the use of any land or resources of said forest reserves shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, and for a period of five years from the passage of this act shall constitute a special fund available until expended, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the protection, administration, improvement, and extension of Federal forest reserves.

Now, by the act of last year the provision as to constituting the receipts from the forests a revolving fund was changed, but the remainder of the section was in no way altered. The provision in last year's bill was:

That all money received after July 1, 1907, by or on account of the forest reserves for timber or from any other source of forest revenue shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt, and there is hereby appropriated and made available out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated so much as may be necessary, etc.

It seems to me that the intention of this language was merely to change the law in so far as it authorized this money to be held as a special fund, and did not go to the extent of changing any further provisions of it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the law which the gentleman cites does not sustain his position. The law which he cites provides that certain money shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, and for a period of five years shall constitute a special fund, available as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the extension, and so forth. The provision in the bill authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to use the sum of $3,151,900 for the extension of forest reserves, regardless of and in conflict with the law, and does not limit this money to that which has been covered into the Treasury, and hence is an absolute change of law.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to call the attention of the Chair, in addition to what I have said, to the fact that the current law uses the following language:

To pay all expenses necessary to protect, administer, improve, and extend the national forests.

Which is exactly the language now in question.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, in support of the point of order I desire to call attention to the provisions of the agricultural bill of last year, which provides that hereafter no forest reserve shall be created, nor shall any additions be made to any heretofore created within the limits of the States of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, or Wyoming, except by act of Congress, which is the provision of the bill that the gentleman from Wyoming called attention to some time ago, and, in so far as this language extends the national forests, would conflict with or change that provision of law passed at the last session, which would be a change of existing law, and therefore subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to inquire whether the point of order strikes out any of the language except the word "extend."

Mr. MANN. It strikes out the words "and extend." When you get to the amending point the word "and" should be inserted between "administer" and "improved."

Mr. SCOTT. I wanted to understand that.

Mr. MANN. That is all. Now, there are several other points of order that I wish to make later, if they are not made by other Members.

Mr. SCOTT. I again call the attention of the gentleman from Wyoming and other members of the committee to the fact that the word "hereafter," in line 1, on page 23, is new language; and the words "and Porto Rico," farther down in the same paragraph, in line 22, are new language.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any other point of order to be made to language on page 23?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, the portion of the paragraph to which I call attention on page 24 reads as follows:

And hereafter permits for power plants within national forests may be made irrevocable, except for breach of condition, for such term, not exceeding fifty years, as the Secretary of Agriculture may by regulation prescribe, and land covered by such permits issued in pursuance of an application filed before entry, location, or application, subsequently approved under the act of June 11, 1906, shall in perpetuity remain subject to such permit and renewals thereof.

Now, the act of June 11, 1906, provides that the Secretary of Agriculture may designate certain lands not necessary or desirable for the permanent forest reserves, and he may list them, and file his list with the Secretary of the Interior. Upon the filing of such list or description, the Secretary of the Interior is required to declare the lands open to homestead settlement at the time. Then it provides that those who had previously taken certain steps toward settling the land may perfect their titles under the act.

Then, there is a further provision found in section 3, that—

No titles acquired to agricultural land in the Black Hills Forest Reserve under this act shall vest in the patentee any riparian rights to any stream or streams of flowing water within said reserve, and that such limitation of title shall be expressed in the patents for the lands covered by such entries.

As to all other reserves the settlers did acquire riparian rights.

This clause in the pending bill provides that, even as to lands heretofore granted under the act of 1906, settlers may lose their riparian rights and the water privileges all be granted to somebody else for fifty years. This proposed bill if it shall become a law is to be read back into the patents and deprive them of the rights they have already obtained under the patents that the United States have granted in pursuance of the act of 1906. If any such lands were heretofore subject to temporary permits, this bill would allow the extension of those permits for fifty years without any compensation to the owner of the land and without even notice to him.

Without entering at all into the merits of this proposition that the Secretary of Agriculture may grant water-power rights for fifty years, it is clearly new legislation and a change of existing law. Inasmuch as it is proposed to have this paragraph read back into the titles heretofore granted, it is so outrageous a proposition that I can not refrain from making the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman reserve it?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly, I will reserve it to permit discussion.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I can not agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the latter part of the provision he has read would have the effect of depriving the homesteader of his homestead rights. It clearly harks back to permits granted for power plants, and does not, I am sure, refer to any other sort of title. The reason for suggesting new legislation, for I concede at once that it is new legislation, is that complaint has been made, and, in the opinion of your committee, very just complaints, that the development of the country was being hindered by the present law, which provides that permits for such purpose can only be made which are of a revocable character and may be revoked at any time upon the will of the Secretary of Agriculture.

It seemed reasonable to your committee that a permit should be issued which would be good for a definite period, subject of course to compliance with the contract conditions under which it was issued. It was solely in the interest of development of the country that this new language was put in here.

Mr. PERKINS. Does not the gentleman realize that fifty years is a long term; that many changes take place in half a century?

Mr. SCOTT. That was placed in there as an extreme limit.

Mr. SMITH of California. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion? This has nothing to do with anything except a right of way over a possibly worthless mountain side. It in no manner touches water power.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. SMITH of California. Except that you can not use the water power unless you pass over the land.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is certainly mistaken.

Mr. SMITH of California. The water power comes from the State, not from the United States, and there is the seat of the whole difficulty and trouble.

Mr. MANN. The general law now provides——

Mr. SMITH of California. The general law does not give any water power in nonnavigable streams where these forest reserves are situated.

Mr. MANN. It gives the right of way.

Mr. SMITH of California. That is what we want.

Mr. MANN. This gives a permit for the power plant in the national forests.

Mr. SMITH of California. Of course you may want to occupy a little piece of ground to build your plant on, an acre or 3 or 4 acres, worth a dollar an acre.

Mr. MANN. How do you get the power plant?

Mr. SMITH of California. Build it.

Mr. MANN. How do you get the power plant in the forest reserves if this does not give the permit for it?

Mr. SMITH of California. I want to say in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York that we are dealing in this matter only with the trifling incident of a right of way, and maybe 3 or 4 acres of rough, worthless mountain lands on which to build a plant. We are not dealing with the principal thing—the water power. That comes under the laws of the State.

Mr. MANN. That is exactly what we are dealing with in this bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman from California allow a question? In the forest reservations I understand the title to the soil is, in the main, in the Federal Government, and, as the owner of the soil, of course it would own the riparian privileges. It would own the private waters and could grant, in all probability——

Mr. BONYNGE. Why, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Indiana will permit——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And could grant in all probability the necessary permission, grant leases to use the water power. Private water, nonnavigable water, belongs to the owners of the bordering lands. The title to the soil under a nonnavigable lake or stream is in the owners of the adjoining land, and the right to the use of the water, under the common law at least, is in them, and the Federal Government, being the owner of the land, it seems to me would have the right to the water, and a lease for a power plant would necessarily come from the Federal Government.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman could not be worse mistaken if he were to try. That is not the law of the West.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know what the law of the West is.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana propounded a matter of law in the form of a question to me, and I desire to say that the law of riparianism as announced by him is not the law which prevails in the Western States, and no one undertakes to say that it is.

In the hearings before the Agricultural Committee, the Chief of the Forestry Department expressly said again and again that the Federal Government has absolutely no ownership in the power, in the right to divert the water, but the only thing they have is the right of way, and maybe a few acres on which to plant the machinery. That is what we were discussing the other day when the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] announced that very extraordinary Democratic doctrine, that the Federal Government could go into a State and tax a local industry. I say it is a matter of the utmost seriousness to us in the West. This question must be settled, and settled right, as it will be I know, that the Federal Government has no right or authority to go into the State of California and lay one penny of tax on an institution that is entirely within the State of California, and it ought to be ashamed of itself if it undertakes to extort a tax by way of a right of way over a piece of land that is not worth $1 an acre.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to say that I stated what I conceive to be the law. I know it to be the common law of the country. It may be the common law in relation to riparian rights does not obtain in the Western States. I am sure the gentleman from California [Mr. SMITH] is right, because he knows more about the law there than I do. Now, I think in the interest of time I shall insist on the point of order. We have not disposed of a single paragraph of this bill to-day.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, Mr. Chairman, this is an exceedingly important matter, and I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order at this time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will insist on the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman does not understand how serious this is, or I think he would not insist——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am going to insist if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] does not. This paragraph will go out ultimately.

Mr. MONDELL. I shall insist if the gentleman does not, but I would like to have an opportunity to discuss this question.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Are we in general debate or should we try to make some progress with this bill? It will take us three weeks to get through with the bill if we go on this way. In the interest of time I do insist upon the point of order.

Mr. BONYNGE. Before the Chair rules I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] if he will not withhold his point of order. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] has gotten up and made a statement as to what the law is in reference to the water rights in these States.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My suggestion——

Mr. BONYNGE. We simply want to be heard on this proposition, that means so much to the people of the West and as to which the gentleman from Indiana and many other gentleman have entirely mistaken ideas.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I qualified my statement, Mr. Chairman. It would take two days to argue that law proposition.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to be heard on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know how the Chair is going to rule, but I would like to discuss the matter just briefly. I believe the point of order should be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was prepared to so rule. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wish, then, to make a point of order on page 24, line 10, to the word "hereafter."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, in the next dozen lines or so——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the chairman of the committee in reference to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to make this statement, if the gentleman will permit me: The word "hereafter" is new, and the words "or administration and in the protection and improvement of the national forests," and also the words "administration, protection, and improvement." Those are all new words which are introduced. The word "hereafter," I shall say, is not new, but is simply a repetition of the language in the current act, and the language was renewed in order that it might be included in the law, and the words "or administration and in the protection and improvement of the national forests" and the words "administration, protection, and improvement," simply that the——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman and I are not talking about the same thing at all. The gentleman is talking about some other line.

Mr. MONDELL. For the information of the committee, I would like to know what point the gentleman from Illinois made.

Mr. MANN. I made the point of order on page 24, line 10, against the word "hereafter."

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to know what the point is.

Mr. MANN. It is a change of law; it is not current law.

Mr. OLMSTED. Is not the whole paragraph a change of law, and, in that event, would not the word "hereafter" be all right?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can make a point of order on the paragraph, if he pleases. I am not obliged to make a point of order upon everything that is subject to the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is the gentleman afraid of the "hereafter," or what?

Mr. MANN. I am much more afraid of the "hereafter" than of my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if the point of order were made against the entire phrase in which that word "hereafter" is contained it would be subject to the point of order, but if it is allowed to remain I do not see how you can pick out one word and say it is out of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I still have a point of order pending and I would like to now make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. The Chair has a point of order before him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to inquire of the gentleman from Wyoming, who made a point of order to the whole paragraph, whether his point of order covers the language stated by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MONDELL. I shall insist ultimately upon the point of order from the word "and," in line 10, down to and including the word "value," in line 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that takes precedence to the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MANN. There is no question about it being subject to the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order——

Mr. SMITH of California rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SMITH of California. As I understood, the gentleman from Arizona has merely reserved the point of order and I desire to be heard to see if I could not prevail upon him not to make the point of order. I think it is a very meritorious proposition, and I hope it will be allowed to be put in the bill notwithstanding the rule.

Mr. MANN. It is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of California. No doubt about that.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to discuss the matter, but I shall insist upon the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I desire to make a point of order against the "hereafter," line 15, page 24, and also against the words commencing, line 19, with the word "and," and reading "and shall constitute a special fund which is hereby appropriated and made available until expended as the Secretary of Agriculture shall direct, for the payment of expense of said investigations, administration, protection, and improvement by the Forest Service, and for refunds of amounts heretofore or hereafter received in excess of the amount found actually due." I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, first of all, desires to ask the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] if he reserves a point of order against the whole paragraph?

Mr. MONDELL. I reserve the point of order against all of the language from the word "and," on line 15, page 24, down to and including the word "due," on the last line.

Mr. SCOTT. I submit that the only language subject to the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair ought to be allowed to say that the point of order undoubtedly takes precedence.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Wyoming makes a point of order against the entire paragraph, it undoubtedly precedes, and I want the point of order insisted upon.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I object to the reservation. I insist that the point of order shall be made or withdrawn.

Mr. SCOTT. On the point of order I desire to be heard one moment, and that is to say that the only language designated by the gentleman from Wyoming which is subject to a point of order is the language "or administration" and "in the protection and improvement of the national forests," and, further down, the language "administration, protection, and improvement." With the exception of the language I have just read, all of the other language is existing law. It was simply repeated in order that these additional provisions might be included.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not claim it is existing law now?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes; for the reason that the word "hereafter" was included in the current appropriation bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the entire portion of the paragraph. I make the point of order against the words just referred to by the chairman as being new.

Mr. SCOTT. I concede the point of order on those words, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. On what does the Chair sustain the point of order? Will the gentleman state what the point of order is?

Mr. MONDELL. My point of order was against the words beginning with the word "or" in line 17, down to and including the word "forests" in line 18, and from and including the word "administration" in line 22, down to and including the word "improvement" in line 23.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman's point of order cover the permanent appropriation in this clause?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it is not in order to pick out two or three words here and there in the paragraph which would be altogether out of order if the point were made against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman's point is well taken.

Mr. OLMSTED. The point does not cover any proposition at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] state again the language covered by his last declaration?

Mr. MONDELL. The language covered by my point of order is the new language of this part of the paragraph. It begins on line 17, with the word "or," down to and including the word "forests," in line 18. And it begins with the word "administration," on line 22, down to and including the word "improvement," on line 23. I make the point of order as against that language, Mr. Chairman, as I assume that the balance of the provision is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the balance of the provision, at least until we ascertain what the fact is. I did not find in the law that this is a permanent appropriation of this money. I beg to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] in what portion of the current law is it provided that the money that may be paid in as contributions shall become a permanent, special fund?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I was mistaken in saying the language was in the current law. It was in the act of 1906, and I read from the statute of that year as follows:

Hereafter all moneys received as contributions toward cooperative work in forest investigations shall be covered into the Treasury and shall constitute a special fund which is hereby appropriated and made available until expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, or for the payment of expenses of said investigations by the Forest Service, etc.

The committee will notice that the language I have read applies only to forest investigations. We desired in the present bill to allow that work to be extended to administration, protection, and improvement, and the language which is subject to the point of order is only such language as refers to administration, protection, and improvement.

Mr. MANN. So far as the point of order that I reserved differed from the one made by the gentleman from Wyoming, I withdraw it.

Mr. SCOTT. I may say that if the new words are to be stricken out, this whole clause might as well go out, because it is merely a repetition of what is in the act of 1906, and I have no objection to its going out.

Mr. MANN. Then I make the point of order, commencing in line 15 with the word "and," down to the word "due," in line 25. That leaves the law as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order against the words "in the District of Columbia and elsewhere," in line 23, page 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Wyoming whether his point of order covers any language on page 25?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order beginning with the word "and," on line 3, page 25, down to and including the word "department," on line 13. I reserved the point of order on all that language, which does not include, however, the language referred to by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, as much as I would like to listen to a discussion of the forestry subject, I feel that I ought to object to reserving the point or order, in the interest of progress.

Mr. OLMSTED. This seems to be a reservation within a reservation. First, the reservation was made to the whole paragraph, and then to a clause in the paragraph.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am directing my opposition to this very clause.

Mr. MONDELL. I make the point of order beginning with the word "and," in line 5, down to and including the word "Department," at the end of line 13. I think it is clearly new legislation. It provides for the advance of funds; authority which is not given the Department now.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, it is unquestionably new legislation, but it was put in because it was almost impossible to administer the service without that authority.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. I renew the point of order I made a moment ago. It includes the words "and for rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere," page 25, line 23.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, speaking to the point of order, in the current law a specific sum was set apart for rent for the use of the Bureau, not to exceed $20,000. That was the amount carried in the current law, and by the passage of a subsequent act of this Congress that amount was extended, I believe, to $60,000. The change to which the gentleman from Illinois has called attention was made merely in the interest of uniformity. All other bureaus of the Departments have a provision allowing them to expend funds for rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere. I suppose that every Department of the Government is renting buildings or other property either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, and I hardly see why that authority should be denied to the Department of Agriculture. I trust, therefore, that the gentleman will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. I must insist upon the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MADDEN. Was the point of order ruled upon?

Mr. BURLESON. I offer an amendment to line 18.

Mr. OLMSTED. Was the point of order ruled upon?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Illinois withdrew his point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. I beg the Chair's pardon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point of order was not withdrawn. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SCOTT. That is a point of order, it seems to me, which might be just as fairly applied to all the appropriation bills authorizing all the Departments of the Government to rent premises in which to carry forward the work which the law requires them to do, and I can hardly see how the Chair can sustain it. It is certainly a continuation of a work which has been begun and a necessary expense incurred therein.

Mr. MADDEN. It is a matter clearly in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations that all expenditures for the Departments within the District of Columbia come within the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee, except this Department. And I think this Department should come in the jurisdiction of the same committee. I submit that this is not a matter that should be included in this bill, and hence my purpose in making the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman does not mean to be understood as saying that no money can be appropriated for the Department of Agriculture to be expended in the District of Columbia through the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. MADDEN. I said except through that committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the Agricultural Department is the sole exception to the rule laid down by the gentleman from Illinois—that the Appropriations Committee has no jurisdiction——

Mr. MADDEN. What I said was, Mr. Chairman, that this is new legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been held over and over again that an appropriation for rent and repairs of buildings used for the public service was a continuation of a public work. It seems to the Chair, therefore, that the point of order is not well taken. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk. It is to amend, after the word "timber," in line 18, page 22, by inserting the following words:

To ascertain by investigation a means of preventing the ravages of the Phoradendron flavescens, commonly known as "mistletoe."

Mr. SCOTT. I quite agree with the gentleman that the animal ought to be exterminated, whatever it is, but I reserve the point of order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "timber," in line 18, page 22, insert the following: "To ascertain by investigation a means of preventing the ravages of the Phoradendron flavescens, commonly known as 'mistletoe.'"

Mr. MADDEN. I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. I reserve it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I object to the reservation of the point of order. If it is not subject to the point of order, let us have it settled now, and then the gentleman can debate the merits of his amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. It is not subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the mistletoe is a parasitic character in the North; is entirely different from its character pest which is destroying many of the trees in the South. It is in the South, where it is much more destructive to trees upon which it fastens. After a tree has become thoroughly inoculated with the poison of the mistletoe it dies within about seven years. It is a most pernicious and destructive parasite, and earnest efforts have been made by the thoughtful arboriculturists throughout the South to bring the destruction being wrought by this pest to the attention of scientists in the Agricultural Department; but because of the difference between this pest in the South and in the North, where it is comparatively harmless, the scientists in the Department of Agriculture have not seemed to attach the importance to the matter that they should. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask that he may read a communication from the secretary of the Audubon Society, in Texas, which pictures the severe damage being done there by the mistletoe and sets forth the damage to the forest that I am now seeking to bring to the attention of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read it in the time of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. May I inquire of the gentleman if this is the mistletoe we read about?

Mr. BURLESON. It is the same mistletoe around which so many tender memories cluster.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should like to ask the gentleman whether he is married or single? [Laughter.]

Mr. OLMSTED. Does the gentleman want to abolish the mistletoe in leap year? [Laughter.]

Mr. BURLESON. I realize that, to many, tender recollections cluster around this plant, but this is not a time for sentiment. This is a practical age. We are practical men here dealing with practical matters. I am a practical man, hence I offer this very practical amendment. It is in the interest of the forests of the country; it is in order to preserve from destruction our trees that I offer this amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman give up the memories of the past for the forests of the future?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Out of consideration for the gentleman from Tennessee will not my colleague withdraw this amendment? [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I wanted to find out whether I had any friends on this proposition.

Mr. BURLESON. I beg to assure the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee that I am his friend, but at the same time I am not unmindful of the importance of preserving our forests, and I love my State of Texas even more than I do my friend from Tennessee; hence must insist on my amendment. I ask the Clerk to now read, and I invite the attention of the Members of the House to this communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

SHOULD WAR ON THE MISTLETOE—AUDUBON SOCIETY URGES GOOD WORK ON ARBOR DAY—POISONOUS PARASITE IS KILLING TREES AT AN ALARMING RATE, AND IT IS TIME TO ACT VIGOROUSLY.

WACO, February 22, 1908.

The Texas Audubon Society respectfully urges that in addition to the planting of trees on the 22d of February, observers of Arbor Day take steps to destroy the poisonous mistletoe, which is killing trees about as fast as they are planted.

This pest is particularly prevalent in the Gulf States, and although the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture intends in the future to take up the work, so far scanty appropriations have prevented; hence it devolves on private citizens to take steps at once, if they would preserve their forests and their trees.

Every municipality in Texas is afflicted with the pest, and it has been stated by an authority that the life of a tree when thoroughly inoculated with mistletoe poison will terminate in about seven years. It is carried from one tree to another by certain birds feeding on the berries, and wherever it finds lodgment on trees susceptible to its deadly parasitic growth, its blight proves fatal in time, unless heroic treatment be applied. At this season while the evergreen parasite is clearly discernible upon the bare boughs the work should be done.

The Texas mistletoe (Phoradendron flavescens) differs materially from its kindred parasite evergreen of Europe (Viscum album), held in veneration by the Druids, which is kept in check in the Old World, but cultivated to some extent for winter decoration. The variety of the cotton States is far more pernicious, and must be wholly exterminated or the trees will all perish from its baleful blight. Anyone may observe from car windows that entire forests are being killed by mistletoe.

It is a beautiful, but horrible, parasite, and can only be destroyed finally by cutting off the entire bough on which the growth appears. Cutting out the parasite and leaving the limb affords temporary relief, but it is not the kind of treatment the case demands, for it will certainly reappear on the same bough at some other point.

An appeal has been made by this society to Mr. Gifford Pinchot, the National Forester, and he will, as soon as he can, no doubt send experts into the South to give the people advice about the destruction of the mistletoe.

The hackberry, which is popular in the cities as a shade tree, is one of the favorites of these poisonous parasites, and in nearly every city in this State where hackberry trees have been planted about 25 per cent of them have already died from mistletoe poison.

Propagating itself through its innumerable seeds, one plant growing on a bough will inoculate all the trees within a block, and each tree becoming the host of the parasite will extend the work of destruction to its neighboring trees. Thus the pest moves on until enormous areas are infected and the process of decay started. We urge that those who go out on next Arbor Day to plant trees will also go out armed with apparatus for pruning the boughs looking to the extirpation of the poisonous mistletoe parasite.

M. B. DAVIS,
Secretary Texas Audubon Society.

Mr. BURLESON. Now, Mr. Chairman, in all seriousness, I hope the amendment will be adopted. I shall not ask for an increase of this appropriation at all, but I do ask that this item be embodied in the bill, in order that the attention of the scientists of the Department may be directed to the ravages of this pest to the end that they may send to the South, not for the purpose of destroying this parasite, but for the purpose of discovering, if possible, a practical means of destroying it, and that this information be embodied in a bulletin and distributed throughout our section of the country. The people will, utilizing this information, for themselves destroy this parasite. The mistletoe has undoubtedly wrought great damage, especially to our shade trees in the cities of the South, and if the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture has no objection, I should like to have this item embodied in the bill. As stated, I will ask for no increase in the appropriation.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the Chair rule on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overruled the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL was recognized.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I think, under the peculiar circumstances, "X rays" ought to have something to say about this matter first.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Wyoming will excuse the Chair, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I thank my friend from Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, so far back that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary the mistletoe has had a history that clusters around memories near and dear to every man's heart in this House and out of it. Why, Mr. Chairman, the very reading of this article at the desk has resulted in the fair women leaving the galleries. It has instantly affected the upper House as it were. The gentleman from Texas says that this is an age devoid of sentiment and that it is one of business, and down South the mistletoe is growing on the shade trees, and therefore the mistletoe should be destroyed.

Mr. Chairman, I was reared in the South, and I have gathered about the shade tree, and often longed after I grew up for all the sweetness that I was told clusters around the mistletoe, just as you all did, and I never saw any there. There are too many shade trees in this world anyway. [Laughter.] I stand by the mistletoe, and long to stand by those who "stand under the mistletoe."

From what the gentleman from Texas says, I think he loves the shade trees more than he does the mistletoe. I am astonished that a man so full of sentiment as is the gentleman from Texas should want to destroy the mistletoe; that he should stand here in this great Hall, surrounded on the floor by gallant men, with the galleries dotted and adorned with beautiful women, and offer an amendment that the mistletoe is to be hunted to the death.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman could even reflect upon the thoughts of that immortal writer, Charles Dickens, who thus wrote of the mistletoe:

From the center of the ceiling old Wardle had just suspended with his own hands a huge branch of mistletoe, and this same branch of mistletoe instantaneously gave rise to a scene of general and most delightful struggling and confusion; in the midst of which Mr. Pickwick, with a gallantry which would have done honor to a descendant of Lady Tollimglower herself, took the old lady by the hand.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, the mistletoe is so inspiring that it begets gallantry not alone in the South, but in this case it moved this gallant to take even the old lady by the hand [laughter]— led her beneath the mystic branch and saluted her in all courtesy and decorum.

So characteristic of gentlemen from Texas.

The old lady submitted to this piece of practical politeness with all the dignity which befitted so important and serious a solemnity, but the younger ladies, not being so thoroughly imbued with a superstitious veneration of the custom, or imagining that the value of a salute is very much enhanced if it cost a little trouble to obtain it, screamed and struggled and ran into the corners and threatened and remonstrated—

If the gentleman will offer an amendment to stop that, I will vote for it [laughter]— and did everything but leave the room, until some of the less adventurous gentlemen were on the point of desisting, when they all at once found it useless to resist any longer and submitted to be kissed with a good grace.

And yet we are asked to be witnesses and particeps criminis to the destruction of this beautiful and inspiring flower by the American Congress.

Mr. Winkle kissed the young lady with the black eyes, and Mr. Snodgrass kissed Emily; and Mr. Weller, not being particular about the form of being under the mistletoe, kissed Emma and the other female servants just as he caught them. As to the poor relations they kissed everybody, not even excepting the plainer portion of the young lady visitors, who, in their excessive confusion, ran under the mistletoe directly it was hung up without knowing it.

Mr. BURLESON. I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I am not trying to destroy the mistletoe in Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman will never accomplish it by getting Tennessee to join Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, as delightful as this is, I shall have to object.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman is tired from my reading from the immortal Dickens in defense of the mistletoe, I will send to the desk two verses as a parting shot and ask to have them read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to have read by the Clerk the matter which he sends to the desk. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

What! Would they destroy thee, forgetting the past,
So long thou hast played in affairs of the heart,
Forgetting the days of the dear long ago,
The loves that enshrine thee, thou dear mistletoe?

The beauties who dared and the gallants who won,
The romances dear that by thee were begun;
Then surely has gallantry faded from earth
And departed forever life's pleasure and worth.

[Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, after a speech and reading as beautiful as that to which we have just listened, I rather regret to have to come down to earth and discuss the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], and while

I may be considered ungallant by my friend from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] for doing so, I am inclined to think that I shall favor the amendment. When the gentleman first read it, however, not being familiar with Latin, I imagined that he referred to an altogether different sort of bird.

Mr. OLMSTED. Some kind of a disease?

Mr. MONDELL. I imagined the gentleman had reference to some of the pests that the Forestry Service in the past has been endeavoring to exterminate. I simply want to say to him that if his amendment should pass, I hope and trust the Forestry Service will be more successful with the extermination of the mistletoe, within reasonable bounds, still leaving a sufficient amount for our gallant friend from Tennessee and his friends, and I think there is no danger but there will be quite enough mistletoe left for all proper purposes, even if this amendment should pass.

In view of the experience we have had in regard to some other investigations and attempts at extermination which have been taken up by the Forestry Service, I hope they will have more success than they have had in the extermination of other pests. For instance, a number of years ago they embarked upon a crusade for the extermination of a certain beetle that was ravaging the forests of the Black Hills of South Dakota and Wyoming. They first started in to prevent the spread of this pest, which was rapidly destroying the pine in that region, by putting an end to the infested timber cutting that the Interior Department had inaugurated for the purpose of putting an end to the extension of the work of the pest. Having done that, they invited the bugologists from the various Departments of the Government to go into that forest reserve wih their telescopes and microscopes and various other instruments for the examination of the destructive bug critter, and they spent something like a year or two endeavoring to find out what the habits of the animal were. Finally they concluded that perhaps the Interior Department was not so far wrong when it set about the cutting of the trees in advance of the forward movement of the army of pests, and so at altogether too late a day to be successful they returned to the policy that the Interior Department had adopted years before.

However, it was adopted at too late a period, with the result that they have been compelled to offer for sale practically every mature tree in that forest reserve, over half as large as the State of Massachusetts, and they have been compelled to sell it at any price in order to encourage the cutting of the timber. There is not sufficient demand, neither are conditions such as make possible the cutting rapidly enough to prevent the further spread of the scourge, and the beetle is now passing beyond the heavier forests of the Black Hills in South Dakota into adjacent regions in Wyoming. If the Forestry Bureau, with an expenditure of a large amount of money, is no more successful in the extermination of the mistletoe than it has been in the extermination of this pest in the Black Hills region, our friend from Tennessee need have no fear but that there will be plenty of mistletoe left.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to consume the five minutes time which I will have in discussing this question. The statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] will indicate that in a very short time, unless the mistletoe is destroyed, the forest will not only be injured, but will be greatly depleted. That, of course, would bring about an increase in the price of wood pulp and in other ways increase the price of timber products. Many of us in this House to-day have received telegrams insisting that we do what we can to protect the wood-pulp interests. As this question is one of vast importance, I will condense what I have to say in the very fewest possible words.

In his message sent to Congress on Wednesday, the 25th instant, the President said:

> I am of the opinion, however, that one change in the tariff could with advantage be made forthwith. Our forests need every protection, and one method of protecting them would be to put upon the free list wood pulp, with a corresponding reduction upon paper made from wood pulp, when they come from any country that does not put an export duty upon them.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order. The gentleman is not discussing the question before the House. How does the paper question have any relation to mistletoe?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is discussing the subject with reference to the forests. The Chair thinks the gentleman is in order.

Mr. WATKINS. The newspaper is one of the main civilizing agencies of the world. In this country it sheds its light in 15,000,000 homes. The family hearthstone is made cheerful by its presence, the labors of the office are made more congenial, politics are enlivened, policies are broadened, prejudices are subdued, and a broad, enlightened cizilization is consummated by it.

While to-day the newspaper industry is working in harmony with organized labor, its operating expenses are higher, because union labor is more expensive than unorganized labor was a few years ago. There is a tariff upon everything which goes to make a newspaper—the pulp, the type metal, the steel, the brass, the copper, print paper, coloring materials, and even the pencil which the editor pushes—but we still see some of the great city dailies selling for a cent apiece. Still, there it not a dollar of protection furnished this industry by the tariff bill.

The tariff on printing paper suitable for newspapers, valued at not over 2 cents per pound, is three-tenths of a cent a pound, or $6 a ton; on ground wood pulp, one-twelfth of a cent per pound, or $1.67 a ton. This is purely and simply a donation to the paper trust and a tax on the newspapers and other printing interest in the country, for there are no importations of these materials worth mentioning.

Mr. POLLARD. I insist on the point of order. The gentleman is not discussing the question before the House.

Mr. SULZER. The Chair has already ruled on that question.

Mr. POLLARD. The question before the House is the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] started out with the assertion that the effect of the mistletoe would be disastrous, if allowed to continue, upon the wood-pulp problem. Now, the Chair is not informed whether the mistletoe injures trees that are converted into wood pulp or not, but he assumes that that is the fact. The gentleman is in order.

Mr. WATKINS. The printing and publishing business ranks seventh in the line of manufacturing industries, coming ahead of cotton manufactures, woolen manufactures, and of boots and shoes, but being lower in rank than iron and steel, clothing, lumber, and timber, all of which industries are protected, except the printing business. When this stone wall of protection was constructed around the wood-pulp and print-paper industry the natural consequence followed—the paper trust was formed. It appears from the message of the President that an effort is to be made to organize good trusts. The cleaning of the "Augean stables" was pastime—mere play—compared to the task of forming good trusts.

> The devil was sick, the devil a saint would be—
> The devil got well, and the devil of a saint was he.

Let us glance at this paper trust, the child of the protective-tariff bill. The International Paper Company filed articles of incorporation in New York State January 31, 1898. Its capital stock authorized was $45,000,000 and authority to issue $10,000,000 in bonds, a total of $55,000,000. Twenty-four large paper mills were merged into the company and subsequently others were "taken in." This octopus alone is sufficient to deal with, without investigating the Great Northern Paper Company.

This trust proposed to reduce prices by eliminating long-credit sales, cutting out insolvent customers, by purchasing in large quantities at low prices, getting low freight rates, displacing salesmen and middle men, and so forth. When they organized they succeeded in finding a man who would act as president for $50,000 a year. The salaries of the vice-presidents and some of the local managers was fixed at $15,000 a year, and the superintendents at the mills had their salaries raised. Enormous sums of money were spent in buying up and maintaining old and dilapidated independent plants to keep down competition. That competition which had caused courteous treatment to customers and had placed honest goods upon the market being at an end, there was substituted a spirit of indifference and a shoddy class of goods, which made the change in the conditions of things bad enough; but the burden of the newspaper men became almost intolerable when the output of mills belonging to the trust were put upon the market.

Prior to consolidation the news-print paper mills received about 1¾ cents per pound, or $35 per ton for paper. They could not have made this consolidation if they had been left in open competition with the world; but the Dingley tariff bill closed out competition from Canada and all other foreign countries by increasing the duty on mechanically ground wood from $1.20 to $1.67 per ton, and the duty on news-print paper $6 per ton. Right then the American mills could make paper cheaper than any other mills in the world and no news-print paper was being imported into this country. The object of the increase in the tariff evidently was not for the purpose of raising a revenue, but was for the purpose of raising the price of paper.

In 1901, within three years, the price had risen from 1¾ cents per pound, or $35 a ton, to $41 per ton, making an increase of $6 per ton, if the form of the old and the new contract had been the same and if the quality of the paper for like grades had been the same; but under the new form of contract the difference was about $2 in favor of the mills, making a difference of $8 per ton. But they do not stop. The prices are still soaring; they are advancing by leaps and bounds. Mr. Herman Ridder stated in an address last October that the price of print paper had advanced $12 per ton upon a consumption of 900,000 tons, an addition of $10,000,000 in one year. He also states that the newspapers of this country pay $58,000,000 annually for white paper. How patient, how forbearing, how long-suffering have these newspapers been? As the molders of public opinion they could almost cause a revolution if they would.

The paper trust is only one of a large number of these "hydra-headed" monsters which are now tightening their hold upon the people. Then shall we not look on with horror when we contemplate the organization and perpetration of every line of industry into giant monoplies, encouraged and protected by the Government? If this is done, we will bid farewell to States rights, to individual liberty, to the equality of all men before the law, and humble ourselves in sackcloth and ashes before the plutocracy of the country and as suppliants bow down before the throne of our rulers.

During the foregoing the time of the gentleman from Louisiana expired, and by unanimous consent he was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. SCOTT) there were—ayes 38, noes 43.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 24, page 25, insert "that no other executive reservation shall hereafter exist within any forest reservation."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask the gentleman to reserve it for a moment.

Mr. SCOTT. I reserve it for five minutes.

[Mr. SMITH or Arizona addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, at the end of line 24, add:
"That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used to pay the transportation or traveling expenses of any forest officer or agent except he be traveling on business directly connected with the Forestry Service and in furtherance of the works, aims, and objects specified and authorized in and by this appropriation."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in support of this amendment I desire to call attention to the fact that this is a very large appropriation; that even should the appropriation ultimately be cut down, as I hope it will be, to the amount originally asked for or estimated by the Department, even then there will be $1,172,000 to be expended under the general discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture. And I desire to call attention in this connection to the fact that the itemized statement furnished to the committee indicates that very large sums of money have been used for traveling expenses, and that very large expenditures for the same purpose are in contemplation.

Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of common report throughout all the Western country that no important public gatherings can be held anywhere in that region—and I do not know but that it is true in regard to the East—without the presence at such gatherings of a considerable number of forest officers from Washington and other parts of the country. The Chief of the Forestry Bureau is quite generally invited to such gatherings as I have in mind, and also, no doubt, other officers of his Bureau; but, in addition to that, it is notorious that no important congress or convention has been held in the West in the recent past proposing an expression of public opinion on any subject or subjects directly or indirectly affecting the Forestry Service that we have not been blessed with the attendance of a large number of the gentlemen of this Bureau.

They are delightful gentlemen. The people of the West are glad to see them. Within reason they ought to travel about and become acquainted with conditions. But it is sometimes felt that these gentlemen appear in such numbers as to very largely control the sentiment of meetings held for an expression of the public opinion of the region. A meeting was held in Denver last summer, in June, if I recollect rightly, at which we had in addition to the presence of the head of the Forestry Bureau, who was there by invitation, the presence of a number of gentlemen whose fares from Washington and other parts of the country I have no doubt the Government paid, all of whom were exceedingly active, as I have reason to know, in making known the views of the Forestry Service in regard to certain matters, and attempting, with some attempt at disguising of it, to influence the final action of that meeting in the line of their views and in the support of the policy of the Forestry Bureau. There were, it is true, a very fair sprinkling of gentlemen of other bureaus, but my idea is that the Forestry Bureau probably furnished the largest quota.

The meeting held at Sacramento last fall, the National Irrigation Congress, witnessed a somewhat similar condition of affairs. A considerable number of gentlemen there were from the Forestry Bureau. A number of those from the Government bureaus were on the committees on resolutions, and so a meeting held for the purpose of obtaining an expression of Western opinion became a meeting at which the opinion of officers of the Government bureaus were recorded in resolution. These facts are notorious. You can not hold an important public meeting anywhere west of the Mississippi River for the purpose of getting an expression of public opinion that you do not have the presence of large numbers of Government officers. Now, we are fond of these gentlemen, but we do feel that this thing is being rather overdone. We like to have them at our gatherings, and the chiefs of these bureaus are always invited; but I doubt if it is a proper expenditure of public money to pay the car fare and traveling expenses of pubilc servants except when they are traveling on public business; and of course if these gentlemen attend public gatherings on invitation for the purpose of discussing public questions it is proper that their expenses should be paid, and this amendment would not interfere with that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to continue five minutes.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I will have to object.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask for a vote on my amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I have just one word to say in answer to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. The statements which he has made constitute a very severe indictment of the Chief of the Forest Service, who is responsible, undoubtedly, for such a condition of affairs as the gentleman has described, if such a condition exists. My information is entirely different from that of the gentleman. My information is that no member of this Bureau attended the meeting at Denver, going from Washington, except the Chief of the Bureau, who was specially invited. My information is that a dozen or so of the employees, supervisors and inspectors, engaged in forest work near Denver were asked to come in there at the time the meeting was held, in order that they might consult with the Chief of the Bureau over official work. I feel quite certain that such a condition as the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] described does not prevail, and in support of that I wish to quote the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Garfield, who, when brought before the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture last year, made this statement:

He says:

As a member of the Keep Commission, I personally went through the Forest Service and examined the various divisions, the methods of accounting, the methods of bookkeeping, the method of safeguarding the supplies and the issue of supplies, the system of handling correspondence and vouchers, the system of filing, the methods in vogue for attending to the work of the aforesaid Service so far as the records of the office were concerned—that is, the reports of the agents in the field, the officers in charge of the forest reserves, and the officers who were the general inspectors in the different districts—examining the reports sent in by these officers, and following through the actions by the Forest Service upon those reports or recommendations. The general result of this investigation was that the committee unanimously agreed that the general system in force in the Forest Service was one of the most complete and most satisfactory of any of the offices which were examined by the committee.

And in commenting upon that the Littlefield committee said:

We have no hesitation in saying, so far as we have been able to examine this Bureau from the testimony of its officials on oath before us, and our personal inspection of the work, that we heartily concur in the conclusions testified to by Mr. Garfield with reference to the efficiency and character of this Bureau.

Certainly such a statement as that in regard to the efficiency and character of the Bureau would not be given if the Chief of the Bureau were guilty of any such radical misuse of the funds at his disposal as would be implied from the statement which has been made. I have no objection to the amendment in itself, but I shall oppose it on the ground that it is wholly unnecessary, for the bill now before the House provides for "official traveling expenses" and with the word "official" before the phrase "traveling expenses" no other use can be made of funds for such purpose except "official use."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the gentleman has stated so positively that I must be mistaken, I think I owe a duty to the House to suggest that I have not made the statement that I have made without knowledge. I know that there were officials of the Forestry Service whose duties are generally and, so far as I know, always performed in Washington that were in Denver at that time. I do not know that the gentlemen may not have been detailed a short time before to some Western point and ordered from that point to Denver, but that they were present there is no question. It is notorious that Government officials were present in considerable number, and every man who was at that convention and is acquainted with these folks knows it.

I am also aware that public men of the West do not lightly make statements that may not be pleasing to the Forestry Bureau, for it is felt that it is not safe for a man to differ with the Forestry Bureau, or make a statement not favorable to it, for it has such influence over the country, and it uses that influence in such a way that a man's motives are likely to be impugned, and men are quite certain to be attacked in certain newspapers and certain periodicals of the country if they presume to even suggest that this Service is not entirely free from and above all criticism. I appreciate those facts, Mr. Chairman, in connection with the statements that I am making here, still I insist that there were a considerable number of the men of the Service at Denver and at other meetings, and I do not believe their presence was necessary there. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there are large sums—$169,000 in one sum—for traveling expenses that run through this book of items.

I have not had much opportunity to go over it carefully, but there are many items where the traveling and field expenses exceed all other expenses. Here is a vast sum, Mr. Chairman, that is used as the Forester desires to have it used; and the statement of the Secretary of the Interior, I call to the attention of the gentleman, in no way had reference to the character of the expenditures, but to the bookkeeping. I have no doubt they have a perfect system of bookkeeping. I assume they have; but I am quite confident that the Secretary of the Interior did not have the opportunity to go into the question of just how and for what purpose and as to the necessity for all of these expenditures. We of the West who have seen these things know of them, and we do know that the expenditures for this Service have been extravagant and, in my opinion, the appropriations have in part been used for purposes never contemplated by the law providing for the Service.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, on account of the statements made by the gentleman from Wyoming, I think we ought to have that amendment reported again, so we will know what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. I will ask the gentleman if he has any objection to inserting the word "provided" before "that," so that it will read, "provided that no part of this sum," and so forth.

Mr. MONDELL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the word "provided" be inserted at the beginning of that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection it will be so ordered.

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, to insert in line 8, on page 23, after the word "Department," the words "on request from them."

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Page 23, line 8, after the word "Department," insert the words "on request from them."

Mr. HACKNEY. This amendment is offered to avoid a duplication of work in the Department.

Mr. SCOTT. Doubt is expressed by gentlemen around me as to whether the words to which that amendment applies did not go out on a point of order.

Mr. HACKNEY. No; that was withdrawn by the gentleman from Wyoming. I asked then if there was no danger of a duplication.

Mr. SCOTT. I have no objection to that amendment going in.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I will take the time of the committee for only a minute or two. The people of our country are becoming very much interested in forestry and in the preservation of our forests so far as possible. New York was the pioneer in this work. It commenced the preservation of its forests before any other State and before the National Government. It has expended up to date more than any other State and more, I think, than all the other States combined for this purpose. It owns now about a million and a half of acres in forest reserves. The man in charge of the forests, fish, and game of our State is Hon. James S. Whipple. He is an able man, who has given much time and attention to this subject. On the 3d of February he delivered an address to the New York legislature in joint session. That address is not long, but it contained very much useful information on the question of forestry and forestation in this country and other countries and incidentally on the matter of the preservation of game and fish. It is also well written as to form and literary merit. You will enjoy reading it, and I ask unanimous consent to extend this address in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The address is as follows:

Address to the legislature of the State of New York by James S. Whipple, commissioner of forests, fish, and game.

As you know, the department has jurisdiction bounded by the limits of the State. It comprehends the enforcement of the laws relating to fish, including shellfish, game birds, game and fur-bearing animals, and the forests. It has a force of 75 protectors, 40 men engaged in fish cultivation, 750 fire wardens (subject to call), 4 scientific foresters, 5 inspectors, and 3 land appraisers, together with the office clerical force and a legal department.

The department gathers fish eggs each year and artificially propagates 255,000,000 fish, and plants them in the State waters, generally distributed. This requires painstaking, skilled labor.

A reasonable enforcement of the laws results in about 1,300 actions of all kinds each year, requiring the most active and energetic work on the part of the protectors in the first instance, and of the legal department finally. To handle each year more than 400 litigated cases, many in courts of record, and 900 lesser ones, with the small force we have is a task that keeps every man connected with that part of the work constantly busy.

The care of the forests, which extend over 110 miles square, protecting them from fire on the one hand, and from trespassers on the other, is in itself a difficult task. The rearing and planting of 500,000 seedling trees each year requires the labor of ten skilled men in this work constantly, and that of 100 more men in planting time. We expect to plant this year 1,100,000 trees. Two men plant about 1,400 trees per day. The careful examination of 100,000 acres of timber land offered for sale to the State each year requires the constant labor of three men skilled in such work. The examination of the titles offered for sale requires the constant labor of a good lawyer every working day in the year. The clerical work in receiving, answering and carrying on the correspondence between the two officers and the people at large, and also that necessary to manage the many men in the field and at the fish hatcheries is a task which practically swamps the clerical force of the Department. That work increases and multiplies as the activity of the Department and the interest of the people in the work increases.

The law in relation to all of these subjects is to some extent ill-advised, incongruous, contradictory, and in some respects entirely inadequate. These several observations are first made that you may better understand the scope and importance of the work.

These questions are naturally suggested: Why all this work and expenditure of money? By it, what is obtained? How are the people benefited?

We are here to-night to answer these questions and to appeal to you, the chosen representatives of the people, to lend every assistance in your power to carry on this work, which we believe is more important to the people at large than the work of any other Department.

The necessity for the propagation and distribution of fish and the necessity of the enforcement of the law is apparent when it is remembered that in this State there is annually consumed for food more than $41,000,000 worth of fresh fish; that more than $30,000,000 worth are taken from the waters in our jurisdiction; that very much of this valuable fish product may be destroyed by improper fishing, or by not stocking our lakes and streams, or by the loss of the forests of the State. We must never lose sight of the fact that the best inland lake or the best trout stream may have its fish supply destroyed in a single year were there no restrictions placed on fishing. Restrictive laws are necessary. Law is simply a rule of action. When there were few people and much forest, fish, and game, no restrictions seemed necessary. Now, when we have 8,000,000 people in the State, with a rapidly decreasing forest and less fish and game, we must have more restrictive laws.

The necessity for the law and its enforcement and the protection of our forests is better understood when it is remembered that the game birds, fur-bearing animals, and the game animals are worth annually more than $750,000, and that all this great value in animal product may be destroyed by nonobservance of the law or by loss of our forests, or both.

The necessity for the law and its enforcement is yet better understood when it is remembered that the shellfish product of this State twelve years ago amounted to about $1,000,000 annually, and now it is worth $10,000,000, having grown to this enormous amount under the liberal policy of the State, its fostering care, and the use of State lands.

The total of these products annually which come from our own State amounts to $40,750,000.

And then, finally, the necessity for the law, for its enforcement, the expenditure of $200,000 in doing all of this work, is thoroughly understood when it is remembered that there are 41,000,000,000 feet of lumber, board measure, in all this State on public and private lands, farm lots and all, and that last year there was cut from these woodlands 1,500,000,000 feet, board measure; that is 41,000,000,000 feet in all, but a loss of 1,500,000,000 feet each year.

With all these facts apparent, the reasons are plain why the work is necessary and that the amount expended might well be doubled or trebled to good advantage, and the cost would then be small compared with results and benefits obtained.

Then when it is remembered that the State owns 1,500,000 acres of woodland, which in the calculation must be deducted, and that at the rate of annual cut it will take only twenty-two years to cut it all, the necessity of our laws for forest preservation, for reforestation, and for acquiring more land passes all argument and stands uncontradictable.

To go a step further and consider the water supply of the State brings us to a subject of great importance, but too little understood.

Quite largely the total water supply of our State depends on the existence of its forests. It is true, without doubt, that, utilized to the uttermost, the waters of our State are worth more to our people than the coal mines of Pennsylvania are to Pennsylvania. If fully utilized they would furnish power to generate electricity, to turn the wheels in every manufacturing plant in the State, to light every plant, every house, every car. In addition, they would furnish electricity to run every car of all kinds in the State and cook all our food. All this wonderful power would be much injured and practically destroyed were we to allow all the forests to be cut from those two great upland plateaus—the Catskills and the beautiful Adirondacks.

A country without forests and without water is like a house without a roof, uninhabitable. Without forests, especially in a country like the State of New York, we can have but little water. We hear much these days about storage reservoirs. Before our woodlands were so badly cut, hacked, and scarred we did not need large storage dams. God, in His wonderful plan in creating the world and providing it with forests, planned for, and nature built, a reservoir never surpassed in usefulness by those built by man.

A study of this natural reservoir proves the importance and imperative necessity of preserving our forests. Let us examine it. The trees are part of it; the leaves on the trees are part of it; the twigs, old logs, limbs, and fallen leaves are a part of it. All of these catch, delay, and hold back the rain drops as they fall. (A reservoir merely catches and holds back the water.) If you will observe the conditions of the forest floor you will notice that between the trees there are little basins in the ground caused by the roots of the trees holding up the soil. These basins catch and hold the rain. Then underneath it all, formed from decaying leaves, twigs, limbs, and logs for a thousand years, is a black mold called humus. This humus has greater power to take up and hold moisture than any other known vegetable or animal matter. The humus is the principal component part of God's reservoir. Then the leaves, limbs, trees, the dead and decaying débris upon the ground, the little hollows or basins between the trees, and this humus are all parts of this perfect reservoir, built on nature's plan, detaining, holding, and keeping back the water, allowing it to soak into the ground to feed the little springs, thence the creeks, and keep the water flowing slowly from the hills all the year round.

On the other hand, when the forest is cut away the basins are broken down, all obstructions to the flow of water are removed, the humus is destroyed, and nature's reservoir is swept away, allowing the water to run quickly into the large streams, causing destructive floods. Many times great damage and sometimes unhealthful conditions follow. When the storm is over, the flood subsides, the water is soon gone, and dry creek beds appear.

Nearly every person can remember some stream close to his boyhood home, covered and protected by beautiful trees, its water supporting fish life, and running nearly full banks all the summer long. Since then the forests on the watershed have been removed, and now when he visits his old home the well-remembered swimming pool is dry, the trout brook is a dry creek bed, and the forests, which kept the cool water constantly running from the old hills, are a thing of the past. These evidences are to be seen on every hand all over the State.

When the Mohawk Valley was covered by a deep, dark forest, a great poet sang about the mighty Mohawk which he saw "run from early morn to set of sun." Could the poet have lived and seen the Mohawk last August, a rivulet, with ugly mud bars sticking out all along its winding course where the majestic river once flowed, he would at least have wondered why he ever wrote the song.

Last August the upper Hudson had no more than two inches of water where once it flowed deep and strong the year round. The water last August in Lakes George and Champlain was a foot and a half lower than ever before. Why this condition? Why reservoir agitation? The reason is plain: The old hills are uncovered; the valleys are bereft of their protecting forests; God's reservoir under the trees has been destroyed. Therefore, without forests we can not have water, except in flood time. Without forests there is no home or breeding place for birds or game animals; without cool and constantly supplied water we can have no fresh-water fish life, and much of that valuable product must be destroyed. Without permanent forests we can not have lumber.

Hence we must preserve and keep our forests. How shall it be done? There are only two methods. Both must be used. The State must acquire at least a million acres more in the Adirondacks and the Catskills, and then we must plant forests. Everyone who has nontillable land must plant trees. The State must help by furnishing trees at cost, or free to all who will plant. Why not? We are furnishing a hundred thousand dollars' worth of fish free each year to stock streams and lakes and the shore waters of the sea. Why not free trees? What are we going to do in a few years when we have no timber to cut? We must have lumber for the thousand purposes for which wood is used. The demand is constantly increasing. It increases faster in proportion than the population increases. There will always be a demand for lumber. The supply is decreasing even more rapidly than the demand for lumber increases. The situation is the same in every State in the Union, as well as in Canada. The forests are being removed with great rapidity. What are newspaper publishers to do for paper? For the newspapers there are required every year 2,000,000,000 feet of timber, board measure; 40,000,000,000 feet, board measure, are consumed annually in the United States. It is not being replenished. We must plant trees now if we are to have timber for the future. There is no class who use wood in any form that should show greater interest in this subject and do more for reforestation and the protection of the forests than the newspaper men. It would not only be profitable for them, but a benefaction to all their readers if they would constantly and consistently urge the planting of trees upon all denuded nonagricultural land. There is no business that will be affected quicker or more severely by a shortage in wood supply than the newspaper business.

There is probably no State in the Union where it is more important to keep the uplands covered with forests than in our own State.

You will remember that there are not more than four rivers of importance in the State, which have their source in the State, that do not rise in the Adirondack and Catskill regions. Therefore these particular sections of the State should always be covered with a good forest.

While we are trying to preserve our woodlands, and thereby the water of the State which they protect, we must not forget that quantity of water alone is not all that is required in this respect. The water should be pure. Polluted and impure water is a constant menace to the health of the people and all animal life that drinks it. There are in the State of New York 6,000 manufacturing plants of every kind and description, all pouring the refuse, much of it poisonous and dangerous to health, into the streams and ponds and lakes near which the establishments are located. The sewage from a thousand cities and villages, and the refuse of all kinds coming from these places, is run into and thrown into the creeks, rivers, ponds, and lakes of the State, polluting and defiling the water, making it unfit for domestic purposes.

It is almost criminal negligence on the part of all persons having the power to in any way better the present condition not to move in the direction of purification of the water supply of the State. It is a subject worthy of the consideration of this legislature and of all the people. Under the law, this department has only to consider it from the point of preservation of fish life, and even for that purpose the law should be amended by at least striking out the last two lines of the section of the law dealing with this subject.

Then, too, we must have forests because they regulate the temperature, affect rainfall, and protect from winds. In these respects the value of the forest to agricultural lands is very apparent and important. Forests are very important regulators and equalizers of the temperature. Slight observation will convince a person who will take the pains to examine this question that large forests, or a large number of small forests, to a considerable degree lower the temperature in the heated term and raise it in winter. If you will test the temperature of a tree in the forest when the thermometer anywhere in the vicinity of the tree registers 95° in July, and the test be applied to the tree 3 feet from the ground, you will find the temperature of the tree body to be at least 5° lower than that of the temperature about it. The reason for it is plain.

The tree in a way has a circulation like that in a human body. The tree gathers its sustenance from the cool ground, draws the moisture into the body of the tree, it circulates by capillary attraction through its whole length to its branches, and is evaporated largely from the under side of the leaves. The tree constantly throws off moisture as well as large quantities of oxygen. This circulation lowers the temperature of the body of the tree. When thousands of trees stand close together upon a tract of land it must decrease the temperature of the air not only in close proximity to the forest, but far removed therefrom.

Then, too, the thick covering which the leaves in summer afford to the ground, scarcely allowing the sunlight to penetrate to the forest floor, prevents rapid evaporation, excludes the heat, and in that way very materially lowers the temperature in and about the forest. The moisture being retained in the ground more steadily and longer helps to keep the ground cool and to cool the air that circulates above. This is undoubtedly largely the cause of much lower temperature in the Adirondacks than we have in the city of New York, or the cities and places in the middle, southern, and western part of the State. If any one imagines that the reason for a 25° lower temperature on the average at Lake Placid in summer is due to the fact that it is 100 or even 200 miles north of a given point in the State, and that alone is the reason, they are very much mistaken. If they imagine that it is because it is on a little higher altitude, they are also mistaken. This is illustrated in many ways.

In the section of the State in which I live, the Allegheny Valley in the southwestern part, the altitude is nearly if not quite as high as the general altitude of the Adirondacks. Lake Placid is not more than 200 miles north of that point. The altitudes are the same, yet in July on the average there is 25° difference in temperature. It therefore must be conceded that it can not be the altitude. It also must be conceded that it is not because of the distance farther north. Then it must be chargeable to the forests which cover such a large portion of the Adirondack country.

Many of you have observed in proof of this fact the conditions in winter. You undoubtedly have crossed an open field on a still day in winter, when the temperature was at zero or below, and you found much trouble to keep the extremities of your body warm. In a little time you entered a large woods, and before you had walked a great distance you were warm and comfortable. No wind stirring inside or outside of the forest; nothing to affect it except the great woods themselves. Whether you ever thought of it or not, if you had been prepared to have tested the temperature of the bodies of the trees in winter just above the snow line you would have found that they were from 3 to 5 degrees warmer than the atmosphere about them. In summer the ground beneath the surface is cooler than the atmosphere above it. In winter it is very much warmer than the atmosphere above it.

Therefore it is plain that forests are regulators of temperature. Then, too, they sensibly affect the rainfall of a locality. Moisture is being thrown off constantly through the leaves; the air about the woods is much cooler than far away from them; the higher elevations loom up cool in the atmosphere. The hot winds charged with moisture are blown across these cool ridges; the moisture is condensed as it comes in contact with them and is precipitated in rain, which falls upon the earth to bless it and all of its occupants.

The great importance of the forest to agricultural lands may be proven in many ways. One has only to read the history of China and France to understand it. Many hundred thousand acres of good agricultural lands in China have been entirely destroyed by cutting off all the timber and the drying up of the water.

More than three hundred years ago France, in an evil day, permitted that which we are now permitting, to wit, the cutting of all its trees, which left its hillsides and mountain tops uncovered. The agricultural lands were much injured; the water supply much reduced. It had no forest. The hillsides were eroded. The soil was washed away. Then a splendid man, realizing the enormity of the evil that had come to his country, started out on a campaign of education over France, urging the people to plant trees. Since then the French people have expended more than $200,000,000 in trying to reforest their waste land, and they have more work yet to do.

The German nation, having good common sense and being a farseeing, practical people, have been restoring and caring for their forests for a thousand years. They have planted as they cut, perpetuating their forests. The Black Forest of Germany is known and famed all over the world. Shall we, the supposed most intelligent and patriotic people of the world, shall we longer stand supinely by and heed not the lesson taught us by the experience of other nations? Shall we see our rivers dry up, our forest land denuded, our natural health resorts swept away, our fish and game destroyed and enter no protest, or raise not a hand to prevent this evil from falling upon us? If there is doubt in the mind of any that agricultural lands may be injured by the loss of water and trees, consider for a moment the condition of the arid plains of the West. There are millions of acres, worthless now, that would blossom as a rose if water should be turned onto them and trees were planted. Water and trees must exist in every country that is decent to live in.

We should remember that scientific forestry is not new, except with us. For a thousand years the city of Zurich in Switzerland has owned a planted forest. It has been carefully guarded, planted, and cut. For six hundred years it has produced a large amount of timber yearly, and to-day it is in better condition than ever before.

One-fourth of Germany is a forest; the value of the German forests is at least $1,500,000,000. Many cities and villages in Germany own their own forests, from which they get all the wood used by the people of the village, and enough more to pay all their taxes. In Germany when a tree is cut two or more must be planted in its place. That should be the practice in this country.

The cultivated forests of Germany are not at all like our natural forests. The best Adirondack forest never produced more than 20,000 board feet per acre. In a cultivated forest the trees are planted five feet apart that they may grow tall and shed their lower branches. Such a forest must be thinned at the end of twenty years and each succeeding ten years until the trees are fifty years old. About 40,000 feet, board measure, may be taken out in four thinnings, and at the end of fifty years, large, even, tall, cylindrical trees that will produce from 40,000 to 50,000 feet of lumber will be left standing on an acre of ground.

An acre of waste land worth not more than $5, planted with 1,700 pine or spruce seedlings, at an expense of $8.65 per acre, making a total value of $13.65, would yield a product by the necessary thinnings of $1,000. When the remaining trees were fifty years old they would yield on the stump a product worth at least $1,000. At that time there would be at least 40,000 feet left standing on the acre, making a total product in fifty years worth $2,000 on an investment of $13.65.

To obtain the exact result one would need to compute simple interest on $13.65 for fifty years and add thereto, and on the value of the product obtained by first thinning, valued at $50, for thirty years; on the value of the product of second thinning, valued at $150, for twenty years; on the value of the product of third thinning, valued at $300, for ten years, amounting in all to $350. This interest, with the three several amounts, together with the value of the product of last thinning at fifty years, $500, and the value of the remaining timber left on the acre, would amount to $2,350, total value in fifty years.

The interest on the $13.65 would amount to about $40.95, which added to the $13.65 would make a total of $54.60. The several amounts received from the forest, with interest thereon, would amount to about $2,350. Conceding that the acre of land used for pasturage would be worth something each year if devoted to that purpose, still the difference between its value for that purpose and its value for forestry purposes would be very great.

Italy is reforesting her much-eroded hillsides, too long neglected, at a cost of $20 per acre. France spent $50,000,000 on her harbors, and then expended $20,000,000 in cleaning out the silt that, because of denudation of the uplands, had been washed from them into the harbors. It costs France, because of conditions there, to wit, much erosion of the lands, $34 per acre to reforest. Yet it must be done.

We can reforest at the present time much of our denuded lands in the Adirondacks for about $8.65 per acre.

Canada has begun reforestation. Ohio furnishes seedling trees to her citizens free, and plants them, the owner paying for transportation and cost of labor only. Connecticut furnishes trees at cost. Kansas furnishes trees free.

The conifer trees will not restore themselves in any considerable quantity. It is true that the broad-leafed trees will restore themselves. They start from the seed, and also many sprouts come up. You cut down a maple, beech, or birch tree and many may sprout from the roots; but the conifers are only produced from the seed. The natural reproduction is very slow indeed. If they are to be had in any considerable quantity they must be planted.

Twenty-two years ago, when the first law to establish this department was put on our statute books, there was not a known educated forester or a school of forestry in the United States. Now there are fourteen or more schools and many educated, skilled foresters.

Many States have a forestry association. There are three national forestry associations. There are many learned men in these societies who are devoting their time to the study of our woodlands. Private individuals and business corporations, railroad companies, manufacturers, and others are commencing to plant trees and protect their forests with care.

It would be a wise policy if the State would raise broad-leaf trees for shade trees, and plant them at State expense on both sides of all roads built under the good-roads system. Such roads need shade and moisture. If they are not kept moist the friction of passing vehicles pulverizes the surface of the roadway into dust, which is blown by the winds into the fields. If kept moist the surface will recement itself and the roads last much longer.

Since I commenced discussing this important subject in public meetings two years ago, many lumber firms have concluded not to cut trees below 10 inches in diameter, and are giving much more attention to their woodlands for future use. The people respond and become interested as soon as the facts are earnestly presented, and I have well-grounded hopes that our forests will have better and more intelligent care in the future.

So far in the history of this work of forest preservation in the State of New York, which, as surprising as it may seem, only dates back to 1885, the work has been directed along the line of acquiring land in the Adirondack and Catskill region, and later on to the planting of some of the waste places with trees in the Adirondack Park. Very little or no consideration has been given by the people at large to the general necessity of keeping the hilltops and hillsides, where the land is less desirable for agricultural purposes, covered with a sufficient forest growth to furnish the necessary moisture that the agricultural lands of the State must have to be in the best, continuous productive condition.

Very little if any consideration has been given to the great importance of shelter belts against prevailing winds that at times so seriously affect the orchards on the farms of the State. Very little if any attention has been given to the gradually decreasing water supply that is so necessary for the people of the State, as well as for stock of all kinds, and which keeps the pastures and meadows green.

Very little, if any, attention has been given to the rapidly decreasing supply of timber on farm lots, and, without apparent thought of the havoc and disaster being wrought, the farmers of the State have been and are allowing their wood lots to be devastated, swept away, and destroyed by men with small sawmills, who move their mills about from place to place, seeking timber for the humming saw to devour, regardless of its service to the farmer, its service to the people generally as a regulator of the temperature, effect upon the annual rainfall, especially during those months of the dry season when water for the meadows and the pastures is so much needed.

The time has come when all of the agriculturists of the State should thoroughly understand that the value of their agricultural lands depends to a large extent upon a reasonable balance between forest-covered land and the tillable land. To make it perfectly plain in the shortest space possible, take this illustration:

If to-night, through some destructive power in nature, every tree and shrub in the State of New York should be swept from the face of the State, what would be the condition to-morrow? It requires no great stretch of the imagination to instantly comprehend the dire result. The home and breeding place of every bird would be destroyed. The home and breeding place of every game animal would be destroyed. Not only the source of every stream, but the whole stream bed, would be uncovered of its forest growth. The humus underneath the trees as it exists to-day would be destroyed. Every obstruction and hindrance to the rapid flow of the water as it falls from the clouds would be swept away. In flood time there would be raging, destructive torrents, strewing wreckage of destroyed property, bridges, and buildings along the flats. The water would soon recede and run away, and the springs, rivulets, creeks, and rivers would be dry. Property throughout the State would be decreased in value to-morrow morning 50 per cent. The meadows and pastures would dry out next season at the time when, conditions being properly balanced, they should afford splendid hay crops and fine pastures. The total amount of milk, cream, butter, and cheese produced in the State would shrink 50 per cent. In fact, the injury would be so great to the State that the people of this splendid Commonwealth would be appalled, and all because of the destruction of the woodlands of the State.

Can it be said that this is too vivid a picture of that which would follow? Is it not true, and would it not as surely happen, as it is that, by the revolution of the earth, if it is a clear day we will see the sun to-morrow? And yet this very thing is more than gradually transpiring every day. As heretofore suggested, a country without trees and without water is like a house without a roof—valueless and untenantable. It is as necessary for the farmers to preserve and maintain an even balance between agricultural lands and woodlands as it is to supply, keep, and preserve an even balance between the number of head of animals upon a farm and the acreage upon which they must subsist.

These things being true, then the question of the preservation of forests affects not only the Adirondacks and Catskills, where the larger tracts of forest land yet remain, but is important to the whole State of New York and the people of the State. The department is trying with great earnestness and incessantly to do all that lies in its power to protect, to reforest, and to impress upon every person in the State the great danger that now confronts us in this respect. But the Department alone can not do all that should be done. It must have the hearty cooperation and intelligent assistance of every member of the legislature and of all the people who have a desire for the prosperity and progress of the people of the State. It must have the help of all persons who are patriotic and are proud of the State in which they live. It must have the help of all persons who would not see this splendid Commonwealth lose its leading commercial position among the States of the Union.

We are to-day the foremost in this respect among the States. The State of New York has done more in planting trees and in progress along each line of this necessary work than any other State. In fact, it has planted nearly as many trees upon waste land as all of the States and the National Government combined. It is the pioneer in the work. It ought to lead in this as in many other things, because it is the greatest State in the Union. It has the greatest population; it has the most wealth; it has equal intelligence; its people are a proud and patriotic people. With all we have done we have, in fact, made but a small commencement. All of the work in this respect done in the United States thus far has been largely experimental. The time has now come when real work, based upon a given plan to be continued and followed for years to come, should be commenced. Instead of planting 500,000 trees a year, the State should plant millions of trees, and all of the people who have land adapted to tree raising should immediately commence the planting of trees thereon.

I have believed, and now believe, that when this whole subject is brought to their attention that they will rise to the necessities of the occasion, and that we will make such progress in the immediate future in preserving and planting trees as the occasion demands; and that in so doing, the State of New York will be a beacon light for other States to observe and follow.

We have no time to waste. It takes from eighty to one hundred years to grow a splendid, great, beautiful forest tree. A forest crop is not like the farmer's crop. One is gathered in a season at the end of a few months' or a year's growth, and the other is only gathered partially after twenty years and partially every succeeding ten years, and finally at the end of eighty or one hundred years. It takes time to rear a forest of commercial value. Already too much time has been thrown away. The work must begin generally all over the State now; and this legislature must make the first start. It must make the commencement by providing all the money that is necessary to establish immediately tree nurseries in proper places in which to raise seedling trees for distribution to all who will plant them under proper conditions and the supervision of the department. These should be distributed for actual cost, or better yet, if it may be done, free of cost.

It would seem to be sound policy and in aid of reforestation of denuded lands by the people to have the provision of the law providing for the enhanced value of land caused by the planting of trees relieved from increased taxation upon the land dedicated to tree raising.

It would be of vast importance if the legislature of the State, composed of the representatives of 8,000,000 people, would, without stopping for small things or minor details of some purely local matter, revise and enact a plain, general, concise, workable statute under which, without necessary trouble, the department of forest, fish, and game may enforce the law in relation to all the subject-matter under the charge of that department. To spend time over the question as to whether a rabbit shall be killed as late as the 15th of December or a partridge shall be shot earlier than the 1st day of October, or whether two or five tip-ups may be used in fishing through the ice in the winter is simply a waste of time. The larger things and the more important things ought to be considered. Those who have given it the greatest study, separating it from all local influences, with an idea of the general welfare of the State and success of the work, should be consulted in such revision.

The body of the law is so great, the State is so large, the conditions so varied, that to give it such examination as it is entitled to requires years of experience and careful study. But however done, it should be general, simple, and positive. It should comprehend, without question, the enactment of a hunting-license law, both for residents and nonresidents, because in no other way can the nonresident license be collected. In no other way can we protect the millions of birds that are the protectors of the forests, the trees, and the farms, and which should be protected from being slaughtered by a hundred thousand nonresidents of the State, who have little or no respect for those things. To preserve bird life to the fullest extent is very important. We are told that if bird life should be destroyed our forests would perish from attacks of hordes of insects.

With such a law all these things could be accomplished. It would afford a sufficient revenue to double the force of protectors, which is much needed, because we are trying to police the whole State of New York, occupied by 8,000,000 of people, with 75 men, when the city of Albany alone requires probably 180 policemen to enforce laws that are more generally obeyed than the forest, fish, and game laws. It seems a most ridiculous thing to think of a police force of 75 men enforcing these laws as they should be enforced among 8,000,000 of people, and in this great stretch of territory consisting of woods, farms, streams, lakes, and ponds innumerable.

Then, too, a revision should comprehend a just revision of the shellfish law, in order that the State may be fairly treated by those who occupy State lands for shellfish culture and that the whole thing may be regulated to the benefit not only of those occupying the lands, but the general public. To illustrate the condition, the State of Rhode Island receives $50,000 a year from its oyster lands; Connecticut, $11,266; Virginia, $99,480, and the State of New York received this year only $4,836.18. These figures illustrate the necessity of a revision of this law. But in this work selfishness and self-interest should be laid aside. It is a great work, worthy of the best efforts of the best men in this State.

I have been plain, positive, and to the point about all of these matters. This is a subject that needs plain, positive, and direct treatment.

So far we have considered the subject from a commercial or money standpoint. There are considerations even exceeding these. From the health standpoint alone, all our care and money expended is not too much.

The Catskill Mountains, some of them towering more than 4,000 feet above sea level, are so close to our great metropolitan city of 4,000,000 people that from the highest peaks one may see old ocean where it laves the shore of Long Island. This mountain land overlooking the historic Hudson, known the world over through the writing of the father of American literature, Washington Irving, reminding us of many things that transpired during the Colonial and Revolutionary periods of our history, full of legend, poetry, and romance, is to-day the Mecca of many travelers who come from far across the sea.

These mountains form the great divide between the Hudson and the Susquehanna, Schoharie, and Delaware valleys. A few hours only are required to reach the Catskill country from New York City. There are lakes like Mohonk—"Gems hem'd round by rocks ancient as the sun"—deep forests hiding trout brooks, the paradise of anglers, valleys as fair as the vale of Cashmere, mountain peaks that frown as darkly as when Rip Van Winkle slept his long sleep. It is a health resort and playground worthy of any people, more easily accessible than any other.

There are 50,000 persons in the State of New York suffering from tuberculosis. It has been demonstrated that 50 per cent of these in the incipient stage may be cured by going to the Adirondacks and abiding there for a considerable time. There is found nature's great sanitarium. The balsam-laden air, sweeping across 150 miles of dense woodland, cooled by the great mountain peaks, filled with oxygen thrown off by the forest foliage, produces curative qualities for this dreaded disease beyond the power of man's ingenuity to produce in any other way.

If we cast aside the commercial feature of it, perfected, reforested, and protected, the Adirondack and Catskill forests, kept for a health resort and a playground only, will reward us for all of our labor and money expended.

All things considered, the Adirondack forest is the finest park ground and forest preserve in the known world. Its close proximity to great centers of population, its exact right altitude, its fifty tree-crowned peaks, its thousand lakes and ponds, its hundred rivers, its beautiful valleys, grottoes, gorges, and dells make it at once the most beautiful, restful, and picturesque country in the world. There are fish to catch, deer to hunt, beaver, elk, and moose to see, canoe trips to take, beautiful places to camp, and the song of the hermit thrush to hear.

All of the 8,000,000 people in the State of New York could reach this beautiful country from their homes in twelve hours if they so desired; 8,000,000 more can reach it in an equal length of time. It is a magnificent heritage, created by the Maker of the universe, left us by our forefathers. We should preserve it, restore it, and protect it for ourselves and future generations.

J. S. WHIPPLE,
Forest, Fish, and Game Commissioner, New York State.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to follow the one I have just offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Insert, after line 24, on page 25:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid or used for the purpose of paying for in whole or in part the preparation of any newspaper or magazine articles."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, would that amendment cover advertising?

Mr. MONDELL. That would not include advertising.

Mr. MADDEN. Would it not be well to have it say that it shall not include advertising? They might want to advertise something.

Mr. MONDELL. It has been suggested that the amendment should exclude advertising. I do not believe that by any possible construction it could prevent the payment for necessary advertising expenses.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the amendment ought to be explicit on that subject, and I would not object to it if it was.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask that the amendment be reported again. I think it clearly does not cover that.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment. My point of order is that it is a limitation on the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to diffuse the information gathered in that great Department. Under the general law creating the Department of Agriculture the Secretary is authorized and directed to accumulate and diffuse information, and this is certainly a limitation on his authority and therefore new legislation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the amendment is subject to a point of order, and I think it is an exceedingly important amendment. It is popularly believed that a considerable portion of this appropriation is used for the purpose of paying in whole or in part for paper and magazine articles that appear under the names of contributors who contribute to such newspapers or magazines.

I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that in an itemized statement of the purposes for which it is intended to use the appropriation there is a provision for thirty collaborators, at $300 each; in other words, I assume that if this amendment is not adopted the Bureau would consider itself authorized to pay Tom, Dick, and Harry $300 each for the preparation of newspaper and magazine articles pucng its work, telling how it had reinvented the ancient process of creosoting ties, informing the world of its wonderful achievements in every department of science and industry, and particularly belaboring every man who has ever dared at any time to raise his voice anywhere, and particularly on the floor of Congress, against its policies.

Now, my purpose is, so far as possible, to prevent that kind of use of the people's money. I believe in the bureaus advertising their work widely. I am in favor of proper publicity in every important bureau of the Government. I know of several bureaus whose work of disseminating information through the newspapers and otherwise is most helpful. I approve of a proper bureau of publicity to give the public knowledge of what the Department is doing. But if I am correctly informed this Bureau has been doing a work beyond that. It has, directly and indirectly, been encouraging and paying for the preparation of newspaper and magazine articles placing an exaggerated value on its work, and particularly in encouraging people who see fit to impugn the motives or criticise Members of Congress and Senators and other men in public life who do not agree with some of the policies and some of the acts of the Bureau.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, has the point of order been withdrawn?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the amendment. I can not answer the argument of the gentleman from Wyoming in any better way than to read a letter from the Chief of the Bureau, Mr. Pinchot. I had heard of complaints against the Bureau touching this matter, and addressed a note to Mr. Pinchot asking him to advise me as to the facts, and I wish to read what he said in reply:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FOREST SERVICE,
Washington, February 14, 1908.

HON. CHARLES F. SCOTT,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SCOTT: I am very glad to make the statement which you asked concerning the educational work which the Forest Service conducts through the newspapers.

This work was undertaken because the most important immediate task which this Service has before it is to inform the American people of the objects and methods of forestry and because this can not be accomplished through the distribution of official publications alone.

The Forest Service is doing all it can to make its publications of wide use. It has of late put most of its printed matter into the form of brief pamphlets, cheaply gotten up and written in a nontechnical style. The purpose aimed at has been to make these pamphlets as succinct, as simple, and as effective for the ordinary reader as possible, and to print in large numbers at the lowest possible cost per copy. During the last fiscal year the number of single copies of Forest Service publications printed was 2,122,000, and the average cost per copy (including two publications which for special reasons required binding) was $0.0145. The Forest Service has now on its mailing list over 700,000 names, so classified that each publication can be sent to the class of people and the region especially concerned, without sending to the entire list; but the question of forestry is far broader than this list. Forestry must be made household knowledge, if it is to be applied soon enough and generally enough to preserve what forests we have left.

Ten years ago there was no general understanding in the United States of the relation of forestry to the public welfare, or of the fact that forests could be used profitably and at the same time be preserved. Enough has been done to awaken interest. But until we have developed that interest into action our part will not be accomplished.

The great mass of the American people do not yet understand how to make the best use of the forest. It is not a question of discovering facts and making them known to specialists, but of working into the everyday thought and everyday practice of great masses of men what the Forester already knows. It is necessary to convert scientific information into common knowledge. This means that not tens or hundreds of thousands, but millions of citizens need to be reached. The periodical press of the country affords the best means of accomplishing this, since everyone who reads at all reads newspapers.

The studies of the Forest Service and its administrative activities are legitimate subjects of news interest, and recognition of this fact brought newspaper men to the Service in search of matter which they had a right to ask for, before any means existed of seeing that they got it. The present methods of the Service have both advanced the ends for which it exists and benefited the representatives of the press. The Sunday editor of one important paper wrote one of the Forest Service editors last September:

"I wish there was an editor of your kind in connection with every Department at Washington. There is so much there in various Departments that we are always wanting and always trying to get, and which seems very difficult to secure. With such warehouses of information the departments seem loth to give any of it up. I frequently send a man down for articles on a dozen or so topics. If he spends a week there, and brings back material for three of these, he is doing very well. All because of the fact that information is so difficult to obtain from so many who should, it seems to me, be the gladdest to give it."

To sum up, the Forest Service has spent an increasing amount each year upon its publications, which reached $40,000 last year, without getting adequate results. We can not get these results through the distribution of our publications without vast and prohibitive expense. Consequently we are making the fullest possible legitimate use of the opportunity offered by the press.

To get information into the newspapers it is necessary to put it into newspaper form. The newspaper does not want essays, treatises, and reports, but news. Government publications too often fall practically dead from the press, not because they do not contain valuable information, but because this information is not in available form for the average reader. By employing men familiar with the peculiar requirements of newspaper work and familiar also with the work of this Service it becomes possible to carry on the work of popular education on a far more extensive scale and at a far lower cost than in any other way.

An example of what was done along this line in the last three months of 1907 will serve to make this point clearer. The circulation of matter prepared for the newspapers by the Forest Service was calculated for each of these months. This was done by adding together the circulation of all items known to have been used during the month. The circulation of each item was computed by taking every clipping received by the Forest Service, of matter which it had prepared, and looking up in Rowell's or Ayer's newspaper directory the circulation of the paper from which the clipping was taken. This method of calculation showed a total circulation for each of the three months which averaged over 9,000,000. The actual circulation secured was certainly much larger than this, since in many cases articles are used without knowledge of the fact reaching the Service. To print 9,000,000 copies of these articles would have cost the Government about $5,400, and envelopes and addressing would have cost $42,000. In addition, there would have been the cost to the Government of putting the printed articles into the envelopes (probably not less than $9,000) and of handling the matter in the mails.

If the Forest Service attempted to do this work directly, it would have to build up and maintain a mailing list of unheard-of magnitude. Its present mailing list of 700,000 names represents a cost for cards, indexing, clerical labor, etc., of $7,000. A mailing list of 9,000,000 names would mean an investment in the apparatus itself of $90,000, besides the cost of operating. Circulation through the newspapers, however, means the equivalent of a mailing list far greater than this, for different kinds of articles are made use of by different classes of newspapers, and in different regions, so that the circulation of one month is by no means identical with that likely to be secured the following. Practically the mailing lists available for the use of the Service, by putting its information in a form acceptable to newspapers, is the entire newspaper circulation of the United States.

The work of putting this matter into the special form necessary is assigned to two men, with some assistance from a third, but engages only a part of their time.

The method employed is to require the whole working force of the Service to keep the section of information acquainted with what is going on in the various lines of work. This is done promptly through memoranda, reference of correspondence, and other papers, and word of mouth, which makes it possible for the section of information to write up whatever has news value at the time when it is news. Since the members of this section are fully informed of the purpose and methods of our work, the matter is so written up as to carry the maximum of illuminating information. I also see, whether I am in Washington or in the field, a copy of every statement given out.

In my annual report for the last fiscal year the work of the section of information for the current year was outlined as follows:

"Special attention will be given to the popularization of technical information concerning forests, the requirements and life activities of forest trees, and the practice of forestry. Economical methods of utilizing wood and other forest products will also be presented. But above all, the relation between the public welfare and the perpetuation of the forests, the loss of which would mean an impairment of the nation's wealth, will be illumined whenever possible."

I recognize that this publicity work exposes the Service to danger of criticism from those who do not understand its purpose, and that if not scrupulously confined to its legitimate field of education it might easily become an altogether improper form of activity. Whether or not the Service is in any degree running a press agency to put itself in the most favorable light before the public, or to advocate special measures which it is the duty of Congress to pass upon, your personal examination already made of the files of matter given out in December will enable you to judge. The files of matter given out are open to examination by anyone at all times. Whatever is done is done publicly, and I shall be most glad to have brought to my attention any published matter suspected to have been given out or in any way inspired by the Forest Service which transgresses the limits of propriety or the strictly legitimate field of the Service.

In point of fact, however, any press bureau activity would certainly defeat itself. It could not hope to escape discovery by the corps of newspaper correspondents in Washington. The arts of the press agent are transparent to any newspaper man. Attempts at self-laudation by the Forest Service would simply be cut out of matter transmitted by the correspondent, so that the result sought would be lost, while a very different result would be obtained—the discovery by the correspondents of a transgression of official propriety which would suffice in their hands to give the Service quite enough of public notice for the time being.

Far from seeking to advertise the Forest Service, the effort has been made in preparing this news matter to avoid, wherever possible, mentioning the name of the Service. This is, indeed, important to the success of the work. The subject of forestry is one in which the public is genuinely interested and concerning which it will read much, but any considerable volume of matter about the Forest Service would mean the rejection of most of it by the newspaper correspondent and editor, who want variety in their papers.

The object of this work is to give out facts. The matter furnished can be had by any newspaper man, no matter what his attitude or that of his paper toward the Forest Service. When he has it, he can use it in whatever way he pleases. If he desires further facts, every facility is given him to find out what he wants to know. If he believes that the Forest Service deserves criticism, he is perfectly free to make it. The Service could neither stifle criticism nor palm off ready-made views, even were there any desire to do so. Everything that is given out or sent out goes from the office bearing indication of its source. Whatever is done is done in the full light of day, and any improper activity could only injure the Service.

Very sincerely, yours, GIFFORD PINCHOT, Forester.

I take the liberty of inclosing three extra copies.

Mr. LEAKE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman how these articles appear in the newspapers? Do they bear the stamp of the Department?

Mr. SCOTT. I have been having all the articles referred to sent to my office every day for the last month, and I have selected from among that number a very brief one, which will serve as a sample of all of them, and I will read it because I can read it in a minute. It is as follows:

COOPERS FIND SUBSTITUTE WOODS.

The coopers of the United States are probably suffering more at the present time for want of a supply of timber than the men of any other wood-using industry.

This condition is caused largely by the great decrease in the supply of those woods considered necessary for cooperage stock and the lack of knowledge of the merits of such species of wood as might possibly be used as substitutes. A few years ago the cooperage manufacturers of the Pacific coast obtained their supply of timber from the East, using very largely the better cooperage woods, such as white oak and elm. Recently these manufacturers have been using, with reasonable success, various species of wood native to their immediate section. Sitka spruce is now largely used on the Pacific coast for such slack cooperage as flour, sugar, lime, and bottle barrels; tight cooperage, such as vinegar, pickle and cider barrels, butter and cheese cooperage, buckets and pails. Recently wine barrels have been made from Sitka spruce, these being coated inside with a high grade of paraffin. Douglas fir is also used to some extent. Inferior grades of slack cooperage, such as salt and lime barrels, are sometimes made of white fir.

The committee will see that even the name of the Forest Service is not mentioned. In the greater number of articles that I have examined the name of the Service does not appear at all.

Mr. LEAKE. It would seem then that this manufacturing of public opinion, which the President so strenuously condemned in one of his messages, depends for its morality upon whether it is for or against the policies of the President himself, would it not?

Mr. SCOTT. I do not think it can be properly characterized as "manufacturing of public opinion." It is, rather, the dissemination of useful information. The Bureau of Forestry has simply devised this method of creating widespread interest in the subject of forestry and of diffusing information upon the subject by giving news to the people through the newspapers instead of printing bulletins as other bureaus of the Department do.

I do not believe any money is expended by the Bureau in paying for the insertion of any matter in a newspaper or magazine or paying for the preparation of any of this matter, except, as is suggested here, by the employment of two or three men in the office of information within the Bureau itself, and their duty is wholly to prepare articles of interest and value such as I have read.

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. BONYNGE. Who are the persons who are employed to prepare these articles? Are they newspaper men—men working on different newspapers?

Mr. SCOTT. No; they may have been men of newspaper experience, but they are now engaged in no other way except that of preparing this news matter in the Bureau.

Mr. BONYNGE. I am asking for information, because I do not know as to it. I heard the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] say that the estimate of the Secretary called for thirty collaborators, at $300 each per annum. I of course realize that no man is going to work for $300 per annum, and I assume it must be a man engaged in some other business, and it naturally occurred to me that as this was newspaper work, men engaged in newspaper work would be employed. Is not that the fact?

Mr. SCOTT. I do not think the gentleman from Wyoming meant to give the impression that these thirty collaborators were to be employed in this publicity work. The collaborators estimated for by the Secretary were undoubtedly men located at various State experiment stations and elsewhere, whose collaboration was desired in connection with the scientific or technical work of the Bureau, the matter of testing the strength or lasting qualities of timber, carrying on of investigating work which the Bureau is doing, and so forth. The only work that is done in the line of publicity at all that I know anything about is the work that is done in the office of information in the Bureau, and is done by two or three men. One of them was formerly a resident of my own State, and has been employed in this Bureau—engaged in this publicity work—for several years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BONYNGE. I ask unanimous consent that his time may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BONYNGE. Do I understand the chairman of the committee to state that there are two or three men employed by the Bureau, engaged in the office of the Bureau, who devote all of their time to this work?

Mr. SCOTT. They devote all of their time to preparing bulletins and——

Mr. BONYNGE. No; newspaper and magazine articles we are talking about now.

Mr. SCOTT. To preparing bulletins and such items of news as I read a moment ago.

Mr. BONYNGE. And they are regularly employed for that purpose in the Bureau?

Mr. SCOTT. Regularly employed; and if the gentleman will go over to the Department of Agriculture he will find a dozen or more men regularly employed in similar work for the other bureaus.

Mr. BONYNGE. What I want to know is whether or not this work is done by people outside of the Government service or by those only who are employed by the Government and devote their time to the Government?

Mr. SCOTT. So far as my information goes it is done by those who are employed by the Government and are giving their entire time to the Government and have no other connection whatever.

Mr. BONYNGE. When these articles appear in the newspapers or the magazines, do they appear as Government official publications signed by anybody, or as a matter of news?

Mr. SCOTT. They appear absolutely as matters of news. A representative of a newspaper goes to the Bureau of Forestry and asks if there is any news in which the public would be interested, as he has a right to do of that or any other bureau in this Government, and from this office of publicity there will be given out any item in regard to forestry which the publicity office may think may be of interest. It rests then with the newspaper reporter as to whether it is of sufficient interest to print in his publication. It is simply carrying out, in a very much more effective way than is done in any other Department of the Government that I know anything about, the idea that we should disseminate useful information which the people in this Department are accumulating.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit in the time he has remaining, all I desire to say in answer to what the gentleman has said is this: That if this is official information given out from a Government bureau to take the place of a bulletin or pamphlet, it ought to be issued in the name of the Government official who does issue it, signed by him, appearing in the paper as a Government publication, if you please, and not appear as a matter of news giving public information without knowing who is responsible for the publication. [Applause.]

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to have about three minutes more.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that debate close in eight minutes on this amendment. There are other amendments.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear much of what was said between the two gentlemen, who had a long colloquy—a kind of family colloquy—over there, and I would like to know from the chairman, the gentleman from Kansas, who is in charge of the bill, whether or not any of these articles which have been written at the Department of the Interior cover the public land grants that the railroads have wrongfully or otherwise acquired from the Government, covered in part, say, in Senate document 60, and first session, Senate, Sixtieth Congress, No. 279.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not know of any documents which have been issued from the publicity office of the Bureau of Forestry which do not relate directly to the forest interests.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Chairman, it would seem that this printing that has been going on may have been even wise, but it has omitted a thing that Congress thought to be so important itself as that Congress is about to consider it, directing the Department of Justice—or about to direct—to look into these land grants, and yet all this money has been spent giving "news."

Well, it may not be exactly news, but since 1866 down to the recent months the railroads and other concerns throughout the United States, and particularly of the West, have been engaged in taking lands wrongfully from the Government. Now, if this news concern had brought before the people these wrongful acts, had brought before Congress these wrongful acts, had brought before the courts out West these wrongful acts, had brought before the grand juries out West these wrongful acts, and done that long ago, instead of sending out pictures of bacteria and birds and beasts and fowls and rivers and various other things that we were getting in the newspapers without paying for it, there might be something really genuinely good in this "news" bureau. I do not know what they have been printing. I have never seen any of this matter; I have not time to go reading the magazines; I do not go to the magazines to get the matter; I go to Joel Grayson or Mr. Sumner of the House document room. I went out there a few moments ago to get some documents or data on this matter, preparing for the future. I did not know what was pending before the committee—got no notice whatever from the committee. I went out and asked him to load me up on these railroad land grants.

He said that the document was down in the Secretary of the Interior's office, but he gave me all he had, which is Senate Document 279, Sixtieth Congress, first session, to which I have just alluded, which is a letter from the President, dated February 17, 1908; one from the Attorney-General of February 14, 1908, and the subject-matter is the Oregon and California railroad land grants. Now, if this has been published from time to time in these little squibs, or paid-for propositions, there might not be so much opposition. I do not know now whether I am opposed to it or not. If it is doing any good or trying to relieve the people of this wrongdoing, and as long as I stay here in Congress, as much trouble as I am giving to some of my friends, I intend, gentlemen, to stick at it until it is dug up and brought before Congress, in the newspapers, or in the committees, or in the House, or wherever I am. I have no personal interest in this on earth. I work day in and day out, eighteen hours every day, and I try to attend to all this public land wrongdoings and good doings I possibly can, and if this publishing concern down in the Bureau has not been publishing these facts, and it seems they have not, then there has been a remissness, or at least a delinquency, which, I hope, if this money is to be appropriated, will not obtain hereafter, and that we will get all the facts about this land-grant question and forestry question.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, my amendment was not intended to prevent the Department giving out in a proper way all proper, useful, and helpful information with regard to its work and with regard to the results of its investigations. I fully appreciate the fact that in the expenditure of large sums of money for the purpose of making investigations and inquiries it is exceedingly important that the people of the country shall have the opportunity to learn the results of those investigations, to know the facts developed by the investigations, and against any dissemination, no matter how widespread or extensive, of facts brought out by investigation or of useful and helpful information, I have certainly no disposition to raise my voice. But, Mr. Chairman, my amendment will not cut it out.

Mr. SCOTT. Would not that cut it all out?

Mr. MONDELL. My amendment could not cut out the dissemination of information by the Bureau under its own name and seal, sending it out officially as emanating from the Bureau. I have not any thought of doing that. I think, however, that all of the information emanating from Government sources should clearly indicate that it emanates from such bureaus, and that whatever effect it shall have in informing the people, in forming public opinion, should be had with the full knowledge on the part of those who receive such information that it comes from and through the Bureau. I understand that the Bureau does not ordinarily indicate that the information comes from the Bureau, although the very innocuous, harmless, and innocent article which has just been read by the chairman is the first of all the newspaper articles I have seen emanating from the Bureau that did not contain a large puff of its work and accomplishment.

For the first time in this case they seem to have failed to call attention to their work. I desire to put an end to the dissemination of information or misinformation, as it may be, at public expense throughout the country without anything to indicate that it emanates from governmental sources, and particularly do I desire to put an end to a practice that I believe has been somewhat indulged in, to wit, the use of Government money for the purpose of preparing or, at least, suggesting and skeletonizing articles to be published in the newspapers and the magazines of the country reflecting upon public men who see fit to differ with this Bureau. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MONDELL. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 51, noes 27.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MONDELL. The amendment is to follow the amendment just adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Following the amendment just adopted add:

"Provided further, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used for the administration of any land in a national forest in a township in which less than 50 per cent of the land is public land and less than one-fourth of such public land is timber."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. What was the point of order?

Mr. SCOTT. The point of order is it changes existing law. And I move, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on this question close in five minutes, with the distinct understanding that at the end of the remarks which are to be made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] I have liberty to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the motion of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that debate close in five minutes and at that time the Chair shall rule on the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I shall not have anything to say on this, but suppose this turns out to be something important?

Mr. SCOTT. I reserve the point of order for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I doubt if the amendment is subject to a point of order, and I call the chairman's attention to the language under which the forest reserves were created. The first was the act of March 3, 1891:

That the President of the United States may, from time to time, set apart and reserve, in any State or Territory having public land bearing forests, in any part of the public lands wholly or in part covered with timber or undergrowth, whether of commercial value or not, as public reservations, and the President shall, by public proclamation, declare the establishment of such reservations and the limits thereof.

And then, following that, the later act of June 4, 1897:

No public forest reservation shall be established except to improve and protect the forest within the reservation or for the purpose of securing favorable conditions of water flows, and to furnish a continuous supply of timber for the use and necessities of citizens of the United States; but it is not the purpose or intent of these provisions, or of the act providing for such reservations, to authorize the including therein of lands more valuable for the mineral therein, or for agricultural purposes, than for forest purposes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, territory of the sort described in my amendment, included in a forest reserve, is not properly within the reserve. I provide that if 50 per cent of the land shall be in private ownership, and not more than 25 per cent of the remaining land shall be covered with timber, that no part of this appropriation shall be used for the purpose of administering such territory clearly illegally within a reserve. I regret very much, Mr. Chairman, that there has disappeared from my desk a map of a portion of the Bear Lodge Forest Reserve, in my State, clearly indicating that in a part of this particular reserve—and I use it only as an illustration of conditions that exist largely throughout all the States and Territories containing reserves—that this particular portion of this reservation, averaging about 5 miles wide and about 13 or 14 miles long, being in the shape of an hour glass, narrow in the center and wide at the ends, within that territory there is less than 50 per cent of the land in public ownership; that as regards the balance of the territory, it is clearly indicated in petitions I have in my hand—and I may say that I have personal knowledge of the territory, as it has a public road its entire length, over which I have driven and ridden many a time—that not over 10 per cent has any forest whatever, and no part of the territory contains merchantable timber.

I have a petition here which was filed with the Chief Forester, I think about a year and a half ago, signed by over 240, as I recollect it, people living immediately surrounding this territory and within this territory, protesting against the inclusion of this land in a forest reserve. When they inclose land in a forest reserve it compels those living in the country around about, whether they intend that their stock should drift upon the reserve or not, to take our permits for the grazing of their stock, lest, perchance, in the drifting of stock, as it drifts in that territory, on the open range, it might wander upon Government land, and a farmer living 4 or 5 miles away be subject to be haled before a Federal court 500 miles away and his property and liberty placed in jeopardy.

Mr. Chairman, the inclusion and maintenance of such territory in forest reserves is a shame, and yet we have appealed in vain to have this territory restored to the public domain that farms and homes may be established. In a letter which I wrote to the Chief Forester in regard to this matter I called his attention to the fact that in all conscience we have little enough land in our country that can be profitably farmed without taking farming land for forest reserves. This territory consists of a long slope of mesa running from a low mountain top to the valley of the Belle Fourche River, and is largely adapted to farming. The Chief Forester says that if it were adapted to farming the farmers would have settled there long ago. Why, surrounding it there are millions of acres of land that will some time be farmed, and the same argument would apply to that, and thus justify its inclusion in a reserve. Such territory does not belong in a forest reserve, and if placed in reserve should promptly be excluded.

Mr. SCOTT. The amendment clearly places a limitation upon the authority which the Secretary has now under the general law. I insist that it is out of order and make the point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Kansas, in charge of the bill, Was there any other limitation on the whole provision offered by the committee?

Mr. SCOTT. As I recollect the amendment, it deprives the Secretary of the authority to sell timber or to issue grazing permits on the land referred to. Undoubtedly he has the right to do both of those things under existing law; and yet it gives no money to do them, and if this appropriation is denied, then his authority, practically, is denied, because he will not have the means wherewith to carry his authority into effect.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that this amendment is simply a straight limitation upon the appropriation.

Mr. SCOTT. May I have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. SCOTT. It seems to me that the amendment seeks indirectly to declare that there shall be no timber sold nor grazing permits issued on certain land described. Now, it is clear that a parliamentary body can not do indirectly what it is not permitted to do directly; and therefore the point of order ought to be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. Some months ago we were legislating in regard to Soldiers' Homes, appropriating money for the support of Soldiers' Homes, and an amendment was adopted providing that none of the money so appropriated shall be used for any Home where intoxicating liquors were sold. Now, it seems to the Chair that this is clearly analogous to that—this withholding the appropriations in certain forest reserves.

Mr. POLLARD. May I have just a word? It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this is a very different question. Under existing law the Secretary of Agriculture has authority to administer forest reserves in general, such as are described by this amendment—that is, where 50 per cent of the land is held by private parties. If this amendment carries, the effect of it certainly is to take from the Secretary the power to administer these reserves under such conditions, and to that extent is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman does not deny that Congress might withhold the entire appropriation.

Mr. POLLARD. That is very true.

The CHAIRMAN. So here it simply reserves a part of it, and controls or restrains to that extent.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. On the point of order, Congress could do that, but would not that in itself be a change of law? It seems to me that here is not only one limitation, but here are two.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been held so, according to all precedents.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the Chairman will indulge me a moment, if we took all the money away from the Secretary of Agriculture, we certainly would change existing law, because the law is that certain things shall be done and that we shall do them and pay for them. Now, they would not and could not be done unless they were paid for, and by taking away the money to do them to that extent certainly would be a change of existing law. If we can do it in one of the things, we can do it in all of the things. Now, I do not know what virtue there is in the amendment, or the law, nor what evil it undertakes to cure, but I am talking about a parliamentary proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that this is a straight limitation upon this appropriation, and so the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. I call for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming a question about the phraseology of that amendment. He talks about the "administration of the land." What does that mean?

Mr. MONDELL. A forest reserve consists of land.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But I am talking about the use of the word "administration"—the "administration of the land." I do not believe that is a phrase that anybody can understand.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know what other word I should use. You could not say in this case "administration of the timber," for there is no timber.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know, but that would be worse than this.

Mr. MONDELL. I am using the only words, so far as I know, that would apply.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What do you mean by the "administration of the land?"

Mr. MONDELL. The word "management" might please the gentleman better and might be more appropriate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is not a matter of pleasing me.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the Department will understand that they are not to use this appropriation for any purpose within the reserve.

Mr. REEDER. Does not this amendment provide that if there is the heaviest kind of timber on a portion of a township, if it does not come up to a certain amount, then that timber can not be taken charge of by the Forestry Department?

Mr. MONDELL. If there is not 25 per cent of the half of the land owned by the Government that has timber on it, then it can not be administered.

Mr. REEDER. Suppose there is 20 per cent of the township which is heavy timber?

Mr. MONDELL. That is a very violent supposition, so far as my knowledge goes.

Mr. REEDER. That is true of many townships in the West, and suppose that this 20 per cent is all that is in the forest reserve. Then the Forestry Department can not control it if your amendment becomes law.

Mr. MONDELL. No; but they can cut down the forest reserve until it shall include only the timber land, and then they can administer it; but so long as they keep all creation within the reserve they could not, under the amendment, administer. They could not administer all of a State under forest reserve regulation, because there may be a patch of timber here or there on some mountain side.

Mr. REEDER. Suppose in a particular township there is 20 per cent solid timber, and that 20 per cent and no more of the township is in the forest reserve. According to your amendment they can not control that timber.

Mr. MONDELL. They can.

Mr. REEDER. They can not.

Mr. MONDELL. They can, by the very simple process of changing its status by a proclamation excluding from that township of the reserve the nontimbered lands.

Mr. REEDER. I have already excluded that in my supposition. There is nothing but heavy timbered land in the 20 per cent of the township which is covered by the reserve.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, the gentleman does not understand the amendment. The amendment does not apply. It says that where only one-half of it is in forest reserve.

Mr. REEDER. It does apply, and I ask for another reading of the amendment. I want to show the gentleman that it does include just what I say.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I send to the desk an amendment which I offer——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We are appropriating a great deal of money here, and showing a great deal of solicitude about forest preservation. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what are we doing especially, if anything, toward preserving the tree or the forest from which we get the wood pulp?

Mr. SCOTT. The wood-pulp tree has the same protection that every other wood has, and no more.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are we doing anything to grow more trees?

Mr. SCOTT. No; except in a general way, by propagating and preserving the forests.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why I ask the question is that we know that there is a great deal of solicitude being expressed about the destruction of forests from which we get the pulp wood and of which we make the paper to print newspapers and books. We have heard a number of learned arguments on the subject. Some say that the forests will soon be destroyed and made into paper, etc.

The idea has been suggested from time to time that where we permit one great tree to be cut down in the forest, we ought to require the man who does it to plant two more of the same kind. I made a suggestion like that myself three or four years ago, when we had up a Wisconsin park matter, and I think the policy should be adopted.

I was reminded of this by receiving a telegram since I have been on the floor, addressed to me, from William J. Ewing, manager of the National American, of Tennessee. It says:

Please use all your influence toward advancing the putting of wood pulp on the free list.

I have been doing that and have successfully failed. [Laughter.] But I am not discouraged, not in the least; we will show the people by our works here in the minority what we would do if in the majority. There are some people who don't fully realize yet that the Democrats do not control Congress. I have been twelve years here in prison, legislatively speaking. [Laughter.] A Republican Administration all the time. I would like to have the tariff taken off of wood pulp. I do not think we will get it off until we reduce the Republican majority to minority.

Away back yonder near the beginning of legislation about the trust question Mr. Sherman, that great economist and great student, said that if the tariff protected the trusts, or made the trusts, he would at once free list the monopolized article. He said that in 1884 or 1890. Other great Republicans, Mr. Reed, Mr. HALE, and others said, before 1890, the same thing about the salt monopoly. A number of great thinkers to-day have suggested that remedy as a cure for the trusts. You all know that this paper trust exists and I am not talking politics. I asked the gentleman from Kansas a business proposition, and I make these suggestions as the best proposition for the present and looking into the future. We are not going to live always, but there will be Representatives here and they and the people will have to have newspapers and books, and certainly we should at once rid the present of this trust and begin to protect this wood-pulp tree. I submit that we ought to start a plan that would require any man who cuts down one of these trees on Federal property to put out two more in lieu thereof, and a State law should cover in the same way the State lands.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee says that he has been in prison twelve years. I would like to ask him if he has anything to his credit for good behavior? [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I behave as well as I can in a legislative menagerie such as we have here, which always runs counter to the wisdom which I suggest. [Laughter.]

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing some statistics on the Appalachian Park measure.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I must object to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina. I should like to state that when the committee rose last Saturday night I asked unanimous consent for general leave to print on this bill for five legislative days, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] objected, which was clearly within his right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment which I have sent to the desk read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the negotiation of any sale of timber in any national forest at a price above what would constitute a fair and reasonable price for such timber were it sold in competition with timber of a like character in the same locality on land in private ownership.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SCOTT. I reserve a point of order against that amendment, and I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 55, noes 34.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not take a quorum for the committee to rise.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. SCOTT.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to withdraw the demand——

Mr. PAYNE. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

The committee divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 57, noes 47.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 19158, the agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, the following concurrent resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution 48.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made for a project of improvement of Wood River from the point where it empties into Klamath Lake in Klamath County, Oreg., to the head of navigation, and report the same to Congress—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 5589. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 4831. An act for the relief of Pembroke B. Banton—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 6257. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to expend $300,000 in protecting the banks of the Mississippi River at New Orleans, La.—to the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River.

S. 3023. An act to amend the national banking laws—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

S. R. 71. Joint resolution to provide for the removal of obstrucions from the main ship channel, Key West Harbor, Florida—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas, that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 65, noes 45.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, in order to save the time of the House, I demand the yeas and nays upon that proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 102, nays 88, answered "present" 3, not voting 195, as follows:

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20062) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1341), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19859) to provide for the payment of certain volunteers who rendered service to the Territory of Oregon in the Cayuse Indian war of 1847 and 1848, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1343), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2969) for the relief of O. Maury & Co., of Bordeaux, France, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1344), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles, which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19987) granting an increase of pension to Allen Demarer—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 20061) granting a pension to Edgar C. Sturges—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: A bill (H. R. 20062) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors—to the Private Calendar.

By Mr. GARDNER of Michigan, from the Committee on Appropriations: A bill (H. R. 20063) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes—to the Union Calendar.

By Mr. CARLIN: A bill (H. R. 20064) to provide the United States Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and National Guard with a suitable rifle range for small-arms practice near Washington, D. C.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAMLIN: A bill (H. R. 20065) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Lexington, Mo.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 31, 1908.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. KEAN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. MCKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill S. 5589, an act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PROPOSED RAILROAD LEGISLATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen of the United States, which, in the absence of objection, will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 31, 1908.

Hon. CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS,
President of the Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The undersigned, a committee representing a union meeting composed of 1,000 delegates representing the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen from thirty States, held at Masonic Temple, Washington, D. C., March 30, 1908, respectfully submit for the consideration of the Senate the following memorial adopted by said meeting:

Resolved, That we favor the early consideration and passage by Congress of the Hemenway-Graff bill, requiring common carriers to equip their locomotives with automatic self-dumping ash pans, thereby doing away with the necessity of men exposing themselves to danger by being compelled to go under locomotives.

Resolved, That we favor the passage by Congress of the La Follette-Sterling employers' liability bill, as against the Knox bill, the former being broad in its application and plain and explicit in its terms, thereby furnishing protection to a greater number of employees and their families, and being capable of intelligent understanding by those who would benefit by its provisions, while the latter bill is limited in its scope, less liberal to the employees, and contains principles which are experimental and untried in legislation and which would not be understood by many affected by it.

Resolved, That we are unalterably opposed to the passage of the Townsend bill, entitled "A bill to provide for the investigation of controversies affecting interstate commerce," as we believe said bill aims at Governmental regulation and control of labor disputes, is a step toward compulsory arbitration, and therefore threatens our liberties, both as employees and as citizens.

Resolved, That we view with increasing alarm the steady and gradual encroachment upon our liberties by Federal judges through the abuse of the power of injunction in labor disputes, such power having already been extended so as to prevent workingmen from striking and from organizing. We protest against this abuse, and demand the passage by Congress of such legislation as will preserve to us our civil rights and prevent the abuse of such power in the future.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN M. HALL,
WILLIAM A. CAHOON,
Committee.

Mr. CULLOM. I have been requested by some portion of the committee in charge of the resolutions to ask that they be printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The resolutions will lie on the table.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BURKETT submitted an amendment relative to the settlement of the account of Noah M. Brooks, late a delegate to the Universal Postal Congress at Rome, Italy, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment providing that hereafter the judges of the district courts of the United States shall be allowed $6 per day as expenses for travel, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE. Yesterday I introduced two amendments, which are, as it appears by the title, amendments to the fortifications appropriation bill. They were both sent to the Committee on Military Affairs. I want to have them go to the Committee on Appropriations, which has charge of that bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

LAND FOR MILITARY POST AT FORT SHERIDAN, ILL.

On motion of Mr. FRAZIER, it was Ordered, That Mrs. W. A. McNeill is authorized to withdraw from the files of the Senate all papers accompanying Senate bill No. 5665, Sixtieth Congress, entitled "A bill for the purchase of land for the use of the military post at Fort Sheridan, Ill.," no adverse report having been made thereon.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF THE LATE SENATOR WILLIAM JAMES BRYAN.

Mr. TALIAFERRO submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committee appointed by the Vice-President in arranging for and attending the funeral of the late Senator from the State of Florida, Hon. William James Bryan, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. KEAN subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported favorably the foregoing resolution, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That Mr. STEWART be appointed to fill the vacancies in each of the following committees:

Chairmanship, on Industrial Expositions;
On Fisheries;
On Five Civilized Tribes of Indians;
On Public Health and National Quarantine; and
On Revision of the Laws of the United States; said appointments to take effect April 1, 1908.

THE UNITED FRUIT COMPANY.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I submit a resolution and ask the indulgence of the Senate to make a brief statement about it.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Department of Commerce and Labor be, and is hereby, directed to make an investigation into the character and operation and the effect upon interstate and foreign commerce of the combination or organization known as the United Fruit Company and allied concerns engaged in the growing, purchasing, importing, selling, and distributing of bananas and other tropical fruits, with a view to disclosing whether there is any contract, combination in the form of a trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade and of commerce among the several States and Territories or with foreign countries in said industry; also whether the prices of said fruits have been controlled in whole or in part by the United Fruit Company and its allied or absorbed concerns; and if so, to investigate the organization, capitalization, profits, conduct, and management of the business of such corporations, companies, and corporate combinations, and to report thereon at the next session of the Sixtieth Congress according to law; and to report, further, whether or not said United Fruit Company, or its allied concerns, have made any contracts or agreements with any Central American republic in pursuance of any combination or attempted monopoly in said industry, whereby said republic has assisted or is to assist the operations of said combination.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent to make a brief statement in regard to the resolution just read. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I have a statement of facts prepared by Messrs. Wheeler, Curtis & Haight, a reputable firm of attorneys in the city of New York, in regard to this case. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the papers be printed in the RECORD, and referred, with the resolution, to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the papers were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT RELATING TO THE FRUIT INDUSTRY IN THE UNITED STATES.

[Prepared by Wheeler, Curtis & Haight, attorneys, New York.]

The United Fruit Company, a New Jersey corporation, was formed in 1899. Its capital stock is $20,000,000, of which sum $16,000,000 have actually been issued. It was the successor of the Boston Fruit Company, a corporation which had previously absorbed a number of independent fruit companies, and which was doing an interstate and foreign business, chiefly to the port of Boston, and chiefly in bananas. Prior to the organization of the United Fruit Company there was a large number of independent importers who carried bananas from the West Indies and Central America into the Atlantic and Gulf ports of the United States, and there sold to jobbers throughout the country, making their shipments by rail to such jobbers. Competition existed between them, both at the points of purchase of fruit abroad and at the various points of sale in the United States.

The United Fruit Company, at the outset, combined, by merger or otherwise, with some ten fruit companies, most of which were large importers. These included the Boston Fruit Company, of Boston, the Buckman Fruit Company, of Baltimore, the American, Dominican, and Monumental fruit companies, together with a number of others. During the years following its organization the United Fruit Company became the owner of a controlling interest in the stock of the principal importers who had not already become associated with the United Fruit Company. Thus it purchased a controlling interest in the Bluefields Steamship Company, which brought bananas from various Central American ports into New Orleans, and sold them throughout the United States; the Orr-Laubenheimer Company, which conducted a similar business; the Camors-McConnell Company; the Thacker Brothers Steamship Company, and the Belize Royal Mail and Central American Company. In each case the stock held by the United Fruit Company was either one-half or one share more than one-half, with the exception of certain instances in which the whole, or a great majority, of the stock was purchased. In no case did the United Fruit Company for any length of time remain the holder of a minority interest in any company. A great deal of the stock was held in the names of various officers, especially Andrew W. Preston, its president, and Minor C. Keith, its vice-president. Indeed, in the majority of the companies acquired subsequent to 1899 the name of the United Fruit Company does not appear as a stockholder. In some few instances, doubtless, the stock held by its officers was owned by them individually, but in a great majority of instances it has been held for account of the United Fruit Company.

The Boston Fruit Company, prior to the formation of the United Fruit Company, had organized a selling agency known as the Fruit Dispatch Company, and this was retained and its operation greatly extended by the United Fruit Company, which owns all its stock. The Fruit Dispatch Company became the exclusive selling agent of the United Fruit Company in its southern ports, and sold, and still sells, the majority of its fruit in the northern ports. It has also handled the entire importations of the allied companies, with the exception of the Thacker Brothers Steamship Company and the Atlantic Fruit Company. During its existence since 1899 it has had full control of the sales and prices of the fruit imported by all the corporations named, which comprised altogether some 80 to 90 per cent of the importations into the entire country. The Fruit Dispatch Company has two main divisions, the eastern division and the southern division. Prices are fixed for the eastern division by a committee which meets every Friday in New York, and the prices thus fixed are communicated to the various branch offices in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. The prices for the southern division were formerly fixed by a committee meeting in the same way each week in New Orleans, and consisted of representatives from each of the allied companies. It is understood, however, that latterly the prices for the southern division have been fixed by the New Orleans manager of the Fruit Dispatch Company in consultation with the New Orleans manager of the United Fruit Company. These prices govern sales in New Orleans, Mobile, etc.

From time to time since the existence of the United Fruit Company the Fruit Dispatch Company has deliberately destroyed fruit for the avowed purpose of maintaining the market price which it desired to establish. This has been done even when the fruit destroyed has been in good condition and saleable at a profit, although at a price less than that fixed by the Fruit Dispatch Company's pricing committee. From time to time, too, the amount of fruit to be imported by subsidiary companies has been restricted at the direction of the United Fruit Company, in order to avoid overstocking the market and preventing the competition which ensues from such a condition.

The pricing committee at New Orleans has before it regular weekly reports from the Fruit Dispatch managers throughout the country, which are used as a basis for fixing prices. These reports show the number of cars sold in the particular district from which the report comes by the Fruit Dispatch Company during the week, and a similar report as to the fruit sold by each independent operator. The reports state what jobbers buy of the independents, what measures of competition are being adopted to stop independent sales, and in general the advice of the various branch managers is asked with reference to that end, and is given in the reports so laid before the pricing committee. These reports are on regular printed forms. Presumably the New York pricing committee has a similar system of reports.

By this means the two bodies of men meeting, respectively, in New York and New Orleans are able to tell at a glance every car of bananas sold by any independent operator throughout the entire country and are given elaborate data on which prices for the ensuing week are fixed. There have been many instances where jobbers were threatened with loss of their business if they continued to deal with independent importers, and accordingly such independent importers have been forced to lose their fruit for lack of a purchaser. There have also been instances where fruit has been given away by the Fruit Dispatch Company, in order to prevent the independents from selling what they had imported.

After the formation of the combination, there were a number of independent operators left outside it. Practically all of these have been put out of business in one way or another. For example, the firm of Henry Bayer & Co. had carried bananas into the United States for some thirty years, running chiefly to the port of Charleston, S. C. The United Fruit Company began to run its steamers there, the importations being handled by the Fruit Dispatch Company. Jobbers in the vicinity were warned that the Fruit Dispatch Company would not tolerate purchases from Bayer. Each time one of Bayer's ships arrived, the Fruit Dispatch Company would drop its prices far below the margin of profit, and thus compel the sale of the independent fruit at a loss, since owing to its perishable character, it was necessary to dispose of it without delay. When Bayer & Co. had disposed of its cargo, the Fruit Dispatch Company's prices would at once go up to a very high figure, to be held there until the next independent cargo arrived.

While this meant doing business at a loss for the combination as well as for the independent, the large resources of the United Fruit Company, and the large profits which it was able to make at places where there was no competition, enabled it to push competition with independents to an extreme, and to bring about a condition where it was merely a question of which side could stand the loss of money longest. Practically all of the independents, being small concerns, were forced to suspend. Bayer & Co. were successively driven out of Charleston and Galveston. The Alabama Fruit Company was driven, by similar methods, out of Mobile and, like Bayer, forced to go out of business, and the Verley Fruit Company, which ran to Providence, met the same fate. A similar competition was begun by the combination against the Di Giorgio Importing and Steamship Company, which imported through the port of Baltimore. In this case, as in most others, the competition took place at the foreign ports where fruit was purchased and grown, as well as at the domestic ports where it was sold, and the Di Giorgio Company lost money rapidly until it was finally forced to suspend, and the Atlantic Fruit Company was formed as its successor. This company encountered a similar opposition and was practically ruined when the United Fruit Company bought up a majority of its stock at about 30 cents on the dollar. The Atlantic Fruit Company is now doing a large and profitable business as a member of the combination.

The annual reports of the United Fruit Company from year to year show that its investment in the stock of other companies is about a million and a half dollars. Its annual importations, shown by such reports, as compared with the total importations into the country, shown by the official statistics of the Government, indicate that about 90 per cent of the importations of the country are controlled by the United Fruit Company and its associates. The one or two small independent importers who still run to New Orleans are believed to be working under an arrangement with the United Fruit Company, whereby their business is restricted, but of this there is at present no certain proof. The other facts cited above are capable of proof by legal evidence.

In connection with the American Banana Company, it appears that that company acquired and planted a large tract of ground lying along the Sixola River in Panama. There had been a dispute as to boundary between that Republic and Costa Rica, and the boundary had been fixed in the year 1900, several years before the American Banana Company acquired this land, by the arbitral award of the President of France. At the time when the first cargoes of bananas were about to be shipped by the American Banana Company a body of Costa Rican guards took possession of the portion of its plantation which lay upon the northerly side of the river, which portion contained the only port for shipment, and declined to allow the work to continue. It has subsequently appeared that the United Fruit Company has obtained an alleged title to this land from the Government of Costa Rica, which title was acquired subsequent to the acquisition of the land by the American Banana Company, and it further appears that the United Fruit Company has indemnified the Government of Costa Rica against any claims which may be made by the American Banana Company because of its ouster from the plantation. A copy of this agreement is annexed hereto.

Prices of bananas have gone up considerably since the formation of the United Fruit Company, and even in cases where it sells fruit to jobbers direct, without the intervention of the Fruit Dispatch Company, these sales are so safeguarded as to insure the absence of competition with the Fruit Dispatch Company. In Baltimore, for example, each jobber who buys from the United Fruit Company is required to state to what point he expects to send his fruit and where it is to be sold, and sales which conflict with those of the Fruit Dispatch Company are not permitted. The restraint of trade is exercised not only by the fixing of prices through the agency of the Fruit Dispatch Company and the consequent control of sales, but also, in the past at least, by the destruction of fruit at the ports of shipment in foreign countries, as well as at those of entry here.

In addition to the companies above named, the Camors-Weinberger Banana Company became a part of the combination about the year 1899 by a purchase of a majority of its stock by the United Fruit Company. In that company, as well as in the Camors-McConnell Company, the Bluefields Steamship Company, and the Orr-Laubenheimer Company, half, or more than half, of the directors have been representatives of the United Fruit Company, usually employees or officers of it.

THE UNITED FRUIT COMPANY.

[Translation of and extracts from "Berichte über Handel und Industrie," March 6, 1906. From a report of the imperial consulate in San Jose, Costa Rica, to the German Government.]

The United Fruit Company occupies in more than one way a peculiar position among American trusts. While almost all others are active in one field of industry and seek to monopolize the manufacture of one article, the United Fruit Company is an agricultural trust. It is engaged mainly in the production and marketing of a natural product, and one, too, that belongs to the Tropics—the banana. The other great staple articles of the Tropics, such as coffee, caoutchouc, and cocoa continue up to the present, even in the United States, in free markets. Up to the present time the banana is the only tropical product that has been monopolized by a trust.

The banana in Germany is as good as unknown, and even in America occupies relatively a minor position. As great as the use of bananas is in the United States, it is, nevertheless, inconsiderable when compared with other provisions and delicacies, such as grain, meat, coffee, sugar, etc. The company has, nevertheless, been able, by continued pursuit of its aim on this relatively small basis, to establish an economic power of the first rank, so that it to-day is the greatest of all purely agricultural enterprises to be found.

The trust was established in the year 1899 by the combination of different small enterprises. Of these the first in importance were the Boston Fruit Company and the Tropical Trading and Transportation Company, which latter company was organized by the American promoter, Keith.

The United Fruit Company controls not only almost the entire export of bananas to the United States, but has recently taken up exportation to England with success.

In the year 1905 the company operated with a capital, in round numbers, of 84,000,000 marks. Of this amount, 71,500,000 marks were in shares of stock, on which 7 per cent—that is to say, almost 5,000,000 marks—dividends were paid. In addition to this the company owed 10,500,000 marks in 5 per cent obligations, the interest on which amounted to 550,000 marks.

The main business of the company consisted, as already noted, of the cultivation and exportation of bananas. In the fiscal year ending September 30, 1905, the company shipped 30,000,000 bunches to North America and England. If the selling price be reckoned at 2 marks per bunch, the total for bananas alone would be 60,000,000 marks a year.

Further, the company owns extended plantations of sugar cane at Banes, Cuba, and manages a sugar mill there that can turn out 220,000 centner, a production that even now should be doubled.

Other branches of business of the company are the breeding and exporting of cattle, particularly from Costa Rica to Cuba, also the exporting of oranges (about 300,000 boxes annually), cocoanuts (about 30,000,000), and pineapples to the United States.

The landed property of the company is scattered in six tropical countries; it covers about 130,000 hectares. Its total capital invested in foreign countries is about eighteen to nineteen million dollars, almost half of which is invested in Costa Rica.

Exportation is carried on from seven tropical points: Jamaica (Port Antonio), Santo Domingo (Sanchez), Cuba (Banes), Colombia (Santa Marta), Panama (Bocas del Toro), Costa Rica (Limon), and Honduras (the Republic and British Honduras). There are also three stations in the West Indies, three in Central America, and one in South America. All of the important export points are represented except Nicaragua, which in the year 1904 shipped 1,700,000 bunches to North America. In the division of business in seven different countries there is a measure of safety against the political, economic, and meteorological disturbances, which are so frequent in this section of the world. In spite of their separation, however, the situation of the various plants is such that they can be conveniently reached from the United States.

As already noticed, the company has the larger part of its capital invested in Costa Rica. Cuba, Jamaica, and Panama follow in order, while its possessions in Santo Domingo, Colombia, and Honduras are relatively inconsiderable. Honduras is the only country where the company is not possessed of any landed interests, but simply buys its bananas.

In the export of bananas Jamaica stands at the head, with Costa Rica, Honduras, and Cuba following, but the Costa Rican bananas are the largest and finest.

The company's methods and facilities for transportation are noteworthy. Where the plantations for the most part lie near the coast, the building of extended railways is not necessary. In 1905 the United Fruit Company had, in round numbers, 260 kilometers of its own railroad in operation, mainly in Bocas del Toro, Panama, and Banes, Cuba. In addition to this, the company controls the entire Atlantic railroad system of Costa Rica, 385 kilometers.

More important than the railways is the company's system of water transportation. Two lines carry the British flag—the Belize Royal Mail and the Central American Steamship Company. Also the Tropical Fruit Steamship Company belongs outright to the company. It is also interested in Reederi, Elders & Fyffes, of Manchester, who bring the bananas to England. These three lines handle, however, only a small part of the necessary tonnage required for the transportation needs of the United Fruit Company. An entire fleet of vessels of various nations is necessary to bring the bananas from their point of shipment to the ports of entry in the United States. In part entire vessels and in part a certain space on vessels are chartered for years. As a measure of safety, the ships handling this company's trade fly various flags and are divided among various countries—Germany, Norway, England, and America. For example, the Atlas Line, formerly English and now German, carries all of Costa Rican bananas for New York.

A characteristic of the shipment of bananas is that they require considerable room and must be transported quickly to avoid loss. The shipping ports of the United Fruit Company have thereby a trade of relatively large, fast vessels and a convenient connection with the United States, which is far from corresponding with its economic importance in other respects. The number of banana ships of the United Fruit Company annually coming to the United States is almost a thousand. During the height of the season as many as forty steamers are sent weekly to North American ports. The cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Mobile, and New Orleans are supplied with fruit directly from the vessels. Shipments for the interior are sent by way of New Orleans and Mobile and thence by rail. For this purpose, the United Fruit Company has organized another company—the Fruit Dispatch Company—that serves the inland consumers in a number of ways, and pushes its activities across the continent to the Pacific Ocean. This company handles annually more than 30,000 carloads. To protect bananas from freezing in winter, it has erected large warehouses in Springfield, Mo., and Cairo, Ill., the first of which can take care of 40 carloads and the second 80 carloads.

In order to utilize its landed estates, the company, in addition to the raising of bananas and sugar cane, also carries on the breeding and exportation of cattle. In the year 1905, the company handled 12,000 head of cattle, and 3,000 horses, mules, and asses. Here, too, Costa Rica takes the lead.

But this does not constitute all of the company's operations. It has large warehouses in Banes, Bocas del Toro, Limon, and Port Antonio. These permit development of imports in small countries, such as Panama and Costa Rica. The company furthermore conducts hotels, hospitals, and telephone lines, among them a 160-kilometer line between Limon and San Jose.

As already repeatedly stated, Costa Rica is headquarters of the company and in it, it has the most capital invested and represented in many branch lines. This position of the United Fruit Company in Costa Rico is the creation of one man, Minor C. Keith. The banana industry of Costa Rica and its development is due to him. He set the first plantation to work. He was manager of the Tropical Trading Company and later the vice-president of the United Fruit Company. He carried his plans through with finished judgment, wide survey, and iron energy. It would take us too far here to describe the gradual development of the company and follow the paths by which it has reached its present status. It is sufficient to say that it has developed to-day in Costa Rica a mighty unassailable position as the uncontested lord of the land. The relation of this giant trust to the little Government is readily seen in the fact that the revenue of Costa Rica, in round numbers, is 12,000,000 marks, over against which the receipts of this company for sales, of bananas is about 60,000,000 marks annually. The development of the United Fruit Company has operated on the economic life of the countries in the following ways:

The entire export of bananas in Costa Rica is in the hands of this company. Not a single bunch of bananas leaves the country without its assistance. It in part raises the bananas, in part secures them from independent planters, who are required to turn over to the company the entire yield at a fixed price.

In the year 1904 the banana exportation of Costa Rice was 6,000,000 bunches. Cost Rica furnished one-quarter of the total export of the company, and was surpassed in this respect only by Jamaica. Of the total yield, 1,300,000 bunches went to England (by the line of Elders & Fyffes) and the rest went to the United States.

The banana lands of Costa Rica are half in the possession of independent planters and the other half in the possession of this company. The company is steadily increasing its own possessions. That is because the larger establishments are more economical, and to secure its hold for the future existing contracts of the United Fruit Company with the planters run to 1908. By that time the company will have so increased its own possessions in Costa Rica and elsewhere that it will not have to deal with the planters. It will be in a position to lower the price, and under certain conditions to compel them to turn over their properties to the company at cheap rates.

But the United Fruit Company controls not only the raising and exportation of bananas, but also controls the necessary means of transportation therefor. It is one of the principles of the great American trusts to make themselves as far as possible independent from the source of production to the close of consumption, and so bananas remain from their planting in Costa Rica to the point of entry in the United States in the hands of the United Fruit Company or its dependent companies.

The United Fruit Company, in the years 1900 to 1902, built the Northern Railroad in order to thereby develop its banana estates. The old English Ferrocaril de Costa Rica, likewise controlling large banana properties, was interested. After a bitter contest, the Northern Railroad finally leased, in 1905, the entire line of the English company to San Jose and Alajuela, so that at the present time on the Atlantic side of the Republic there is only one railroad system, that of the United Fruit Company. The harbor of Limon, the only port of entry on the Atlantic coast, is in the hands of this company, and it controls piers belonging to the connecting lines of railroads. The Government has contracted not to grant any acquisitions from any other piers and would hardly be able to do so anyhow, as the harbor hardly offers sufficient room.

It is hardly necessary to state that the control of the water transportation is bound up with this. All the vessels of transportation to the United States and a part of those to England—that is to say, approximately three-quarters of the entire means of transportation—are in the service of the company. The transportation from Limon is the creation of the United Fruit Company. With a trade of over 600,000 tons annually, Limon is now the most lively port in all of Central America between Colon and Vera Cruz, and has attained an importance beyond all proportion in comparison with the country back of it, all through the banana industry of the United Fruit Company. Without this the shipping trade of Limon would be as unimportant as that of the other little harbors of Central America, and would have a slight trade only in time of the coffee harvest.

What bananas mean for the water transportation of Limon is seen in the fact that a bunch of bananas occupies about the same space on a vessel as a sack of coffee. Costa Rica ships, in round numbers, about 300,000 sacks of coffee and 6,000,000 bunches of bananas, according to which the bananas require twenty times the amount of space on board vessels as the other leading product of the land. The entire postal service of Costa Rica with the United States and Europe is taken care of by the United Fruit Company. Mail comes and goes once weekly by way of New Orleans or Mobile on the banana ships of the company, and it goes a farther distance on the Atlas steamers to New York with the bananas destined for that market.

Not only the port but the city of Limon and the region beyond can thank this company for their development. Limon, which used to belong to the unhealthiest spots on the coast is now kept in a measure under sanitary conditions. Cases of illness that now occur are taken care of in a hospital constructed and supported by the company. The banana regions, too, that formerly were isolated and unhabitated wilds, are to-day under cultivation and relatively thickly populated. This settlement has been made almost exclusively through immigration, of which nine-tenths has come through the United Fruit Company. The immigrants are mostly Jamaican negroes who work either for the company itself or for the planters. In this influx of negro element lies a great danger for the country.

The company plays an important rôle in the importation of the country, as it carries on its own business for the needs of its own employees, that approximately calls for one-tenth of the total imports of Costa Rica. More important yet is the fact that more than half of all the important goods coming into the country come in the ships of this company. That the United States has secured imports in a greatly preponderating measure over all other countries, together is due in no slight degree to the frequent, convenient, and fast transportation connections with America that the banana ships afford. The goods transported by this company—bananas, oranges, and cattle—are even now a half of the total exports of the country. Inasmuch as the other leading product of Costa Rica, coffee, has remained stationary for years, this percentage will constantly increase in favor of the United Fruit Company. Costa Rica in early years had a passive balance of trade, as the net receipts from coffee were not sufficient to cover the needs of the country for foreign goods, but now, on account of the huge shipment of bananas, the relation of imports to exports has been reversed.

In close connection with this stands the question of currency. Since 1900 Costa Rica has had the gold standard, and holds it yet. That it has been successful is largely to be ascribed to the United Fruit Company, as it pays the independent planters and negro workers in American gold. The gold import of the company in the year 1904 reached a sum of over two millions.

This account of the fields in which the United Fruit Company operates makes no pretense of being complete. The business operations of the company are so many sided that it is difficult to find the field in which it does not exercise an influence. Thus, for example, the coffee production of the country is due in not the least degree to the United Fruit Company. But, on the other hand, the company controls all means of transportation on the Atlantic side of the country, and by the raising of freight rates is in a position to cut down one of the main products in favor of another product.

All these operations and influences together have made Costa Rica in recent years quite another country. It has been lifted out of stagnation, put in touch with the world's trade, and takes part in the rapid development of the United States. Costa Rica is the only Atlantic State in Central America possessing on its east coast a flourishing harbor connected by rail with its leading (capital) city. All the other Central American independent States face the Pacific Ocean and are only now making attempts to open the door to the eastward.

AGREEMENT OF INDEMNITY.

[Translation.]

Juan Francisco Echeverria, secretary of state in the department of the treasury, in pursuance of instructions from the President of the Republic, on the one hand, and on the other, R. J. Schweppe, of lawful age, bachelor, citizen of the United States of North America, as fully empowered agent of the United Fruit Company, whereas they have taken account of the following facts and circumstances:

I.

That the judge of "administrativo contencioso" of the Republic, by a legal and valid decree of 1 p. m. of January 26 last, dictated in the respective document of denouncement, adjudged to the Northern Railway Company ownership of 5,850 hectares, 5,915 square meters of wild land (unoccupied public land), situated in the jurisdiction of the Comarco of Limon, in the region of Talamanca next to the river Sixola, which, according to the status quo regarding divisional limits between this Republic and that of Panama, and recognized in an explicit manner by both, is under the exclusive jurisdiction and sovereignty of Costa Rica.

II.

That H. L. McConnell, citizen of the United States, has attempted to acquire the area in question, without acquiring it by any legal method, suit or title, only by virtue of an occupation, in fact, which implies a penal usurpation, and that the Costa Rican authorities having notified him that he could not exercise possession of these lands or make use of them until he should acquire them in conformity with law, said gentlemen, both by himself (on his own account), and working in the name of a certain company, which he calls the "American Banana Company," has solicited the protection of the Government of the United States, instituting before it, as it appears, a claim for damages and prejudice—i. e., costs and damages—against the government of Costa Rica, which the latter rejects as hasty and unfounded.

III.

That the region where the lands denounced by the Northern Railway Company and adjudged to it by the said decree is included in that portion of territory which will pass under the sovereignty of Panama if the treaty relative to its boundaries which both republics are trying to formulate and which is pending ratification by their governments and congresses shall be definitely approved, as is to be expected.

IV.

The said decree of adjudgment of these wild lands to the Northern Railway Company has been submitted to the necessary approval of the department of state for treasury, in conformity with article 529 of the Fiscal Code.

V.

That although the adjudication is founded on a denouncement presented and carried through in conformity with law with relation to lands belonging to the public domain as wild (unoccupied) lands, and the state by virtue of its jurisdiction and sovereignty denies all right of McConnell in the region in question, it is convenient, by way of extreme precaution against the unforseen, to take into account the claim of said gentleman, however much it may lack foundation, and so the Government of the Republic has declared it.

Therefore the undersigned secretary of state and the agent of the United Fruit Company have agreed on the following:

1. The United Fruit Company declares that it takes upon itself the pecuniary responsibility of whatever kind and whatever may be the amount which may be collected from the government of Costa Rica, either in the unexpected case of said McConnell or said American Banana Company, of which he is said to be the president, should succeed in the unjustifiable claim aforesaid, or for other unforseen claims which may be presented in respect to said lands, and in consequence the United Fruit Company agrees, through the exponent, its agent, that it will pay to this government the amount of whatever sum it (the government) may have to pay for such reasons.

2. This department of state by virtue of the agreement set forth in the preceding clause, will approve on this date the decree of adjudication above alluded to, in order that the title of ownership may be executed, which by reason of such judgment has been issued to the Northern Railway Company.

In testimony whereof the executors sign in the city of San Jose on the 10th of the month of March, 1906.

J. F. ECHEVERRIA.
R. J. SCHWEPPE.

San Jose, March 10, 1906.
Let this contract be approved.
Signed by the President. ECHEVERRIA.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I wish to state briefly that the United Fruit Company is a New Jersey corporation, organized in 1899, with a capital of $20,000,000, of which some $16,000,000 has been issued in stock. Upon its organization it combined some ten or twelve companies engaged in this business, and since that time it has acquired many of the other companies engaged in the same business, either by the purchase of stock in the names of its various officers or otherwise, so that it now controls 90 per cent of the fruit trade in the United States.

This company has not hesitated to throw overboard cargoes of its fruit in various ports of the United States for the purpose of maintaining prices, and in other cases, according to these papers, it has given away fruit at competing points in order to destroy competition. It is also shown in these papers that the price of fruit is fixed weekly in New York and New Orleans by the agents of this company.

A few years ago an Alabama corporation, the Alabama Banana Company, thinking that it had the right to engage in this business, purchased a large tract of land in Panama, on the Sixola River, and proceeded to clear it and plant it in bananas. Just as the first crop was ripening and ready for shipment to the United States the United Fruit Company, by giving a bond of indemnity, procured the Government of Costa Rica, without any trial of the right of property, without any proceedings in any court, to seize the plantation and absolutely stop the exportation of a single banana from the property of the company. I have sent a copy of this bond to the desk to be printed in the RECORD to show that the United Fruit Company was the real actor in this lawless act.

The Alabama Company brought suit against the United Fruit Company in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of New York, and upon the hearing of the cause recently the court declared that although the seizure might be unlawful, and although the plaintiff might be greatly damaged by the taking, it appeared upon the proceedings that the Government of Costa Rica had taken possession of this property and no court of the United States could render a decision against a sovereign power.

When it was stated in these papers, as I read them first, that the seizure was illegal, without any warrant of law at all, and at the most opportune time to destroy the business of the Alabama corporation, I had some doubts about it; I did not think it could be possible. But I have since been furnished with a report made by the German consul in San Jose, Costa Rica, to his own Government in regard to this trust. In the course of that report, which has been sent to the desk, speaking of this trust, the United Fruit Company, he says:

It is sufficient to say that it has developed to-day in Costa Rica a mighty, unassailable position as the uncontested lord of the land. The relation of this giant trust to the little Government is readily seen in the fact that the revenue of Costa Rica, in round numbers, is 12,000,000 marks and the receipts of this company for sales of bananas is about 60,000,000 marks annually.

Mr. President, this resolution is intended for our Government to take steps to see whether the laws can be defied, and whether a trust grown rich and powerful, having driven out all competitors down to 10 per cent, can shield itself behind the shadow of some little republic and defy this Government. The purpose of the resolution is to have the Department of Commerce and Labor make this investigation and see whether a trust, grown so great and powerful in this country, can use the agencies of other foreign governments to protect them in their nefarious operations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. C. LATTA, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

On March 26, 1908:

S. R. 58. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to establish harbor lines in Wilmington Harbor, California; and

S. 626. An act authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to locate a right of way for and granting the same and a right to operate and maintain a line of railroad through the Three Tree Point Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the Grays Harbor and Columbia River Railway Company, its successors and assigns.

On March 27, 1908:

S. 4922. An act providing for the platting and selling of the south half of section 30, township 2 north, range 11 west of the Indian meridian, in the State of Oklahoma, for town-site purposes;

S. 6135. An act providing for the disposal of the interests of Indain minors in real estate in Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash.; and

S. 3416. An act to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the extension of Meridian place NW.," approved January 9, 1907.

On March 28, 1908:

S. 4046. An act to authorize the cutting of timber, the manufacture and sale of lumber, and the preservation of the forests on the Menominee Indian Reservation in the State of Wisconsin.

CLAIMS OF AMERICAN CITIZENS AGAINST VENEZUELA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, on motion of Mr. LODGE, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

In response to a resolution of the Senate, dated February 26, 1908, requesting the President—

"If not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate the correspondence with the Government of Venezuela in relation to pending controversies with that Government concerning wrongs done to American citizens and corporations in that country by said Government"—

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers.

Respectfully submitted.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 31, 1908.

SNAKE RIVER DAM, WASHINGTON.

Mr. PILES. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, some Senators who have announced that they intend to participate in the discussion of the bill to-day are not present in the Chamber this morning. They requested me to see to it that it should not come up for consideration until they could be here. I know one Senator who has left the Chamber intends to participate at once in the discussion of the bill. I suggest to the Senator from Washington that it had better be deferred, inasmuch as no one expected the bill to come up before 2 o'clock, it being the unfinished business.

Mr. PILES. I am not particular about pressing it now, I will say to the Senator from Idaho.

MINING TECHNOLOGY BRANCH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the first business on the Calendar be announced.

The joint resolution (S. R. 35) to provide for a mining technology branch in the Geological Survey was announced as the first business in order on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] the joint resolution will go over.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

The bill (S. 48) to reimburse depositors of the late Freedman's Savings and Trust Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the commissioner of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company and his successors in office be, and the same are hereby, authorized and directed to pay, or cause to be paid, under such regulations as said commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, to all the depositors of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company whose accounts have been properly verified and balanced under existing laws, or to their legal representatives, a sum of money equal to the verified balances due said depositors from said company at the time of its failure, less the amount of dividends which may have been paid from the assets of said company; and for this purpose the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, said amount to be placed to the credit of said commissioner by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purpose in this act specified. That the clerical expense for the settlement of these claims be paid out of the money herein appropriated: Provided, further, That any money not called for within two years after the passage of this act shall be used for the education of the colored youth of the South, under such rules and regulations as may be adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I ask that there be a division of the question, so that the portion which it is proposed to strike out may be stricken out, and then, by agreement with the Senator in charge of the bill, I desire to offer two amendments to the portion which is to be inserted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the Senator offer his amendments now. It will be in order.

Mr. MCLAURIN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi proposes an amendment to the amendment reported by the committee, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 24, after the word "appropriated," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That any money not called for within one year after the passage of this act shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCLAURIN. There is another amendment which I desire to offer. The Senator in charge of the bill has agreed to accept it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, beginning with line 25, strike out the remainder of the amendment, in the following words:

Provided further, That any money not called for within two years after the passage of this act shall be used for the education of the colored youth of the South, under such rules and regulations as may be adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

And to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person to directly or indirectly accept or receive from any such depositor, or from any heir or legal representative of any such depositor, or from any beneficiary of this act, any compensation for any service or supposed service rendered or claimed to be or to have been rendered either in the procuring of the passage of this act or in the collection or payment of said deposit. Any person who shall violate this section shall be punished by a fine of double the amount so accepted or received and not more than $1,000 in addition thereto, or by imprisonment of not more than one year, or both.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. FLINT. There is a report accompanying the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report submitted by the committee.

Mr. BACON. If it is not long I should like to hear it read. If it is long and the Senator from California will state substantially what it is, that will probably serve the purpose.

Mr. CLAY. With the permission of the Senator from California, before he proceeds——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FLINT. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. My impression is that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] objected to the consideration of this bill, and I am sure he said he desired to be heard when the bill was considered. The Senator from South Carolina is now confined at his home sick. I am not able to say when he will return. Of course I would not ask that the consideration of the bill be postponed for the session, but if the Senator from South Carolina desires to be heard in regard to the measure, I hardly think the Senator from California ought to press it in his absence when he is sick, and when there is any reasonable hope of his returning to the Senate during the session. I am sure he desired to be heard upon the measure, for he so stated in my presence.

Mr. GALLINGER. I introduced the bill and on my motion it went to the committee of which the Senator from California is a member, and it was reported from that committee.

I will say to the Senator from Georgia my recollection is that whenever the bill has been reached on the Calendar the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] has asked that it should go over, and I do not think that in the Senate the Senator from South Carolina has made a suggestion of that kind. He may have done so privately, but I feel sure that it has been upon the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi that the bill has gone over, and he wished it to go over for the purpose of offering the amendments he has offered this morning.

Mr. CLAY. I will say to the Senator that I am not absolutely sure the Senator from South Carolina objected on the floor of the Senate to the consideration of this measure. I am inclined to think he did. I know the Senator came to me and asked me to watch it, and he said he desired to be heard when the bill was considered. I know nothing of its merits; I have not looked into it; but I am absolutely sure that the Senator from South Carolina desires to be heard in regard to the measure.

Mr. MCLAURIN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly; I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. MCLAURIN. When the bill was first called on the Calendar I objected to its consideration. I examined the bill afterwards and I then, as now, think it is a bill without merit, but I thought if I could get certain amendments adopted, that would safeguard the bill against what I thought was probably an effort on the part of certain persons who had been for some time urging Senators and Representatives to the passage of the bill, I would raise no further objection to it.

In the first place, there was a provision in the amendment of the committee that the money not called for within a certain period should be turned over to certain authorities for the education of the colored youth of the South. I did not think that that was constitutional. I do not think now that it is under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution. I do not think that there can be made any discrimination against the white youth of the South any more than there can be against the colored youth of the South. So it was agreed that that be stricken out, because the Senator with whom I consulted agreed with me that there was very great question at least about the constitutionality of that provision.

Then I thought another amendment, which had been adopted, that no person should receive or accept any compensation for any services rendered, or to be rendered, or claimed to be rendered, or supposed to be rendered, in procuring the passage of the act, or in collecting the payment of the claim of any of the depositors, would prevent any grafting by any combination of people who had gotten together for the purpose of getting Congress to pass this law. With these two amendments agreed to, while I do not think the bill is a meritorious one even with those amendments, and I did not intend to vote for the bill, I did not propose to make any further objection to its consideration.

Mr. CLAY. I hope the Senator from California, in charge of the measure, will at least not press it to-day until I can communicate with the Senator from South Carolina. I would prefer, at least, to do so.

Mr. FLINT. I have no objection to the bill going over if the Senator from Georgia insists upon it, but I was not aware that the Senator from South Carolina objected to the bill. The Senator from Mississippi did object to the bill each time it was reached on the Calendar, and it has gone over. After some consultation with him we agreed upon certain amendments, and those amendments have been adopted. I did not know that there was any further objection to the bill. If, as a matter of fact, the Senator from Georgia insists upon his objection, the bill may go over.

Mr. CLAY. I hope the Senator will agree to let it go over without my insisting upon it.

Mr. FLINT. If the Senator from Georgia desires to communicate with the Senator from South Carolina, I have no objection to the bill going over.

Mr. CLAY. I feel, in justice to myself, that I ought to communicate with him, because he communicated with me in regard to it.

Mr. FLINT. And if the Senator from Georgia thinks the Senator from South Carolina will be here during the present session, I would not like to have the bill go over for the session.

Mr. CLAY. I would not ask to have it go over for the entire session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR.

The bill (S. 4812) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

J. DE L. LAFITTE.

The bill (S. 5268) for the relief of J. de L. Lafitte was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

UNIFORM WAREHOUSE RECEIPTS.

The bill (S. 1474) to make uniform the law of warehouse receipts in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill was read yesterday.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIRED MATES, UNITED STATES NAVY.

The bill (S. 5337) for the relief of Mate William Jenney, United States Navy, retired, and the eight other retired mates who have been placed on the retired list with the rank and pay of one grade above that actually held by them at the time of retirement was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments, in line 3, after the word "That" to strike out the word "Mate" and insert "Mates;" in the same line, after the name "Jenney," in insert "William W. Beck, Thomas W. Bonsall, William Boyd, John Griffin, James Hill, Frank Holler, Robert Robinson, and Silas T. C. Smith," and in line 6, after the word "retired," to strike out "and the eight other retired mates;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That Mates William Jenney, William W. Beck, Thomas W. Bonsall, William Boyd, John Griffin, James Hill, Frank Holler, Robert Robinson, and Silas T. C. Smith, United States Navy, retired, who have been placed on the retired list of the Navy with the rank and pay of one grade above that actually held by them at the time of retirement by reason of their creditable civil war service, under the provisions of the acts of Congress approved March 3, 1899, and June 29, 1906, shall be credited with all their prior actual service, either as officers or enlisted men, in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, in computing their pay on the retired list from the date of their advancement under the provisions of said acts.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Mates William Jenney, William W. Beck, Thomas W. Bonsall, William Boyd, John Griffin, James Hill, Frank Holler, Robert Robinson, and Silas T. C. Smith, United States Navy, retired, who have been placed on the retired list with the rank and pay of one grade above that actually held by them at the time of retirement."

MICAIAH R. EVANS.

The bill (H. R. 13735) to correct the military record of Micaiah R. Evans was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 4, after the word "desertion," to insert "from draft;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from draft on the records of the War Department against Micaiah R. Evans, of Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to give us a statement in regard to this matter. I do not think, unless there is some reason for it, that the bill ought to be passed.

Mr. WARREN. The report is not a long one, and it might be read, but I will state the case in just a few words. This is a soldier who enlisted in 1861 and served as a private soldier until honorably discharged. He enlisted a second time, was made a corporal, and while he was absent from home performing his duties as a soldier he was drafted. This occurred one month after his second enlistment and while he was in the field. Later on he entered the service and completed another and third term of enlistment and was honorably discharged. So the sum total of this soldier's service was some four or five years as a volunteer and during almost the entire war, but his record is tarnished with a technical desertion, so called, from the draft. This is to correct his record.

Mr. BACON. I understand, then, from the Senator that the soldier was never actually a deserter?

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no; he was simply serving his country in the field at the time he was drafted. I will say, however, that under the laws and regulations he ought, when he completed his second term, to have reported under his draft, but the officers under whom he was serving at the time told him that there was no reason for it. The fact is that at a later time he enlisted again and served honorably and had honorable discharges from all the other services. This is a technical flaw against his record that should be removed.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AMENDMENT TO PURE-FOOD LAW.

The bill (S. 42) to amend an act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend an act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," as follows:

Section 6, after the words "of National Formulary," insert the words "or in the Homeopathic Pharmacopœia of the United States," so that the section as amended shall read:

SEC. 6. That the term "drug" as used in this act shall include all medicines and preparations recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia or National Formulary or in the Homeopathic Pharmacopœia of the United States for internal or external use, and any substance or mixture of substances intended to be used for the cure, mitigation, or prevention of disease of either man or other animals.

The term "food" as used herein shall include all articles used for food, drink, confectionery, or condiment by man or other animals, whether simple, mixed, or compound.

Amend section 7, first subdivision, by inserting after the words "or National Formulary," wherever they occur, the words "or in the Homeopathic Pharmacopœia of the United States," so that the section as amended shall read:

SEC. 7. That for the purpose of this act an article shall be deemed to be adulterated:

First, if when a drug is sold by a name recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia or National Formulary or in the Homeopathic Pharmacopœia of the United States it differs from the standard of strength, quality, or purity, as determined by the test laid down in the United States Pharmacopœia or National Formulary or in the Homeopathic Pharmacopœia of the United States, official at the time of investigation: Provided, That no drug defined in the United States Pharmacopœia or National Formulary or in the Homeopathic Pharmacopœia of the United States, shall be deemed to be adulterated under this provision if the standard of strength, quality, or purity be plainly stated upon the bottle, box, or other container thereof, although the standard may differ from that determined by the test laid down in the United States Pharmacopœia or National Formulary or in the Homeopathic Pharmacopœia of the United States.

Mr. BACON. I should like to have the report in that case read. The bill might affect very important interests, although I presume it is all right.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. LODGE. Let the report be read.

Mr. BACON. I have asked for the reading of the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read at the request of the Senator from Georgia.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. HEYBURN March 30, 1908, as follows:

The Committee on Manufactures, to whom was referred the bill (S. 42) to amend an act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," have considered the same and recommend its passage.

The purpose of the bill is to include the Homeopathic Pharmacopœia of the United States as a work of reference in determining the character or standard of certain articles mentioned in sections 6 and 7 of the pure-food act. In view of the fact that the school of homeopathic medical science is of such wide and general recognition the justness of this legislation is apparent.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I will add just a word to the report. When the pure-food bill was enacted, it was provided that the National Formulary of Pharmacopœia, which is recognized by the allopathic school of medicine, should be the standard for determining certain definitions, and the homeopathic school was not included. As the report states, it was found that the Homeopathic Pharmacopœia contains a number of articles that are not included in the other pharmacopœia or formulary. So the necessity of including the Homeopathic Pharmacopœia is obvious.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT GUARANTIES OF FOODS AND MEDICINES.

The bill (S. 3043) to prevent fraudulent representations as to Government guaranties of foods and medicines, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Manufactures with an amendment, in section 1, page 1, line 7, after the word "guaranteed," to insert "by the Government of the United States," so as to make the section read:

That it shall be unlawful for any person, association of persons, or corporation to place any mark, sign, or insignia upon any package, label, covering, or wrapping of any article of food or medicine stating in words or effect that the contents of such package are guaranteed by the Government of the United States under the pure food and drug act of June 30, 1906, or are guaranteed or recommended in any manner by the Government of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENLARGED HOMESTEAD.

The bill (S. 6155) to provide for an enlarged homestead was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. That seems to be a pretty important measure. As I do not see the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who reported the bill, in the Chamber at this moment, I think it had better go over, especially as there is no printed report accompanying the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice. This completes the Calendar under Rule VIII.

PACIFIC PEARL MULLETT.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if the Calendar, under Rule VIII, has been completed, I ask that a bill which was reached on the Calendar and passed over some days since upon the request of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] be now taken up. It is Calendar No. 235. I do not know whether it now is on the Calendar under Rule VIII or Rule IX.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill referred to by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1517) for the relief of Pacific Pearl Mullett, administratrix of the estate of the late Alfred B. Mullett.

Mr. BACON. I ask unanimous consent that that bill may now be taken up and acted upon. It has previously passed the Senate several times.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Pacific Pearl Mullett, administratrix of the estate of the late Alfred B. Mullett, $2,062.06, in full for the balance due her husband, on account of compensation and his actual expenses incurred as commissioner appointed from civil life on the Navy-Yard Commission under the provisions of the act of August 5, 1882, making appropriations for the naval service, the balance being based upon vouchers heretofore issued and approved by the Secretary of the Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC LAND ACCOUNTS WITH STATES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar, under Rule IX, is in order. The Secretary will state the first bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 415) regulating the settlement of the accounts between the United States and the several States relative to the disposition of the public lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, that is a very important bill, and I do not think it ought to be taken up at the present time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN WASHINGTON CITY.

The bill (S. 122) authorizing the purchase of grounds for the accommodation of public buildings for the use of the Government of the United States in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been heretofore read.

Mr. CLAY. Let the bill be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I think there is objection to that bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I did not observe that this bill had been reached. I thought it was another that was under consideration. It will be recalled that I introduced a resolution a little time ago directing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to ascertain the purchase price of these various blocks of land. I have information that the Commissioners have taken that work up diligently and that they will soon report to the Senate the result of their labors. I trust the bill will go over and await that report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

SCHOOL OF FORESTRY IN NORTH DAKOTA.

The bill (S. 560) granting the State of North Dakota 30,000 acres of land to aid in the maintenance of a school of forestry was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], who is not in his seat, is opposed to the consideration of that bill. Therefore I ask that its consideration be postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SNAKE RIVER DAM, WASHINGTON.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I ask what has become of Order of Business No. 74, being House bill 7618?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That bill has been made the unfinished business and will come up at 2 o'clock.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES], who has the bill in charge, desires to have it taken up. I want to submit some remarks on it, and I ask to have it taken up now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I should like to submit some remarks on this bill, or on the law touching this proposition, and I will do so now, with the indulgence of the Senate.

The bill involves, directly and indirectly—perhaps more indirectly than otherwise—a very important constitutional question. It is a question that, to my mind, is very clear, and it has been disposed of by the Supreme Court of the United States on sundry occasions, some of the decisions being at least 65 years old.

Recently there has grown up a new idea in this country—and it has been very prevalent in the last few years—that whatever might be suggested to be for the public interest should be carried on by the General Government without reference to whether there was authority to do it or not. I am inclined to make some remarks that I would not make, perhaps, on this bill or any other, if it were not for the repeated assertion that has been made in high public circles that whatever ought to be done we should find a method of doing.

Not long since the Secretary of State—and I am going to send to the desk and have read his remarks, as I have taken them from the public press and I have no doubt they appear therein correctly—in an address called attention to the fact that the States were not exercising the powers conferred upon them by their constitutions and recognized by the National Government as pertaining to them, and he said when they did not do so they must not complain if the Congress should assume the right to do what they had failed to do. As that spirit seems to be a very general one now, and is very prevalent, I want to say a few words about it. I want, in the first place, to have read at the desk an extract from the public press.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

Extracts from the speech of Hon. Elihu Root, Secretary of State, delivered at a banquet given by the Pennsylvania Society, in New York City, on December 12, 1906.

Mr. Root said in part:

"If any State is maintaining laws which afford opportunity and authority for practices condemned by the public sense of the whole country, or laws which through the operation of our modern system of communications and business are injurious to the interests of the whole country, that State is violating the conditions upon which alone can its power be preserved. If any State maintains laws which promote and foster the enormous overcapitalization of corporations condemned by the people of the country generally, if any State maintains laws designed to make easy the formation of trusts and the creation of monopolies, if any State maintains laws which permit conditions of child labor revolting to the sense of mankind, if any State maintains laws of marriage and divorce so far inconsistent with the general standards of the nation as to violently derange the domestic relations which the majority of the States desire to preserve, that State is promoting the tendency of the people of the country to seek relief through the National Government and to press forward the movement for national control and the extinction of local control.

"STATES NOT ALIVE TO DUTY.

"The intervention of the National Government in many of the matters which it has recently undertaken would have been wholly unnecessary if the States themselves had been alive to their duty toward the general body of the country. It is useless for the advocates of State rights to inveigh against the supremacy of the constitutional laws of the United States or against the extension of national authority in the fields of necessary control where the States themselves fail in the performance of their duty.

"The instinct for self-government among the people of the United States is too strong to permit them long to respect anyone's right to exercise a power which he fails to exercise. The governmental control which they deem just and necessary they will have. It may be that such control could better be exercised in particular instances by the governments of the States, but the people will have the control they need either from the States or from the National Government, and if the States fail to furnish it in due measure, sooner or later construction of the Constitution will be found to vest the power where it will be exercised, in the National Government."

Mr. TELLER. The words "United States of America" describe to the world the nation known as the United States.

It has a written Constitution, the preamble of which provides:

We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

It is a Government of delegated, limited, and enumerated powers.

And every exercise of power by the nation must find its authority in the Constitution of the United States as originally adopted or in the amendments thereto.

When I speak of the Government as one of delegated, limited, and enumerated powers, I do not in any way deprecate it or deny to it such powers as are provided for in the Constitution or that must follow such enumerated power in order that there may be an efficient exercise of the power specifically declared.

But I can not agree to the doctrine, now somewhat popular, that by legislative or judicial construction powers certainly withheld may be exercised, because such exercise may be beneficial, or because powers withheld to the people or to the State may not be exercised, or if attempted to be exercised, may not be so exercised as to meet the approval of the executive, legislative, or judicial departments of the Government.

I do not stand for any hair-splitting theory, but for a fair and honest determination. What did the framers and makers of the Constitution intend to authorize to be done?

However desirable it may appear to me that certain powers ought to have been given to the Executive or Congress, the question is, What did the creators of the Constitution, that is, "We the people * * * do ordain and establish the Constitution"—what did they mean to do? And the only way to determine what they meant to do was by what they did do.

We can never consider the question properly unless we consider the conditions at the time the Convention was held to form the Constitution, and what defects in the then existing Government were to be cured by the change in the character of the Government.

It may seem to be a waste of time to detain the Senate with a statement of the conditions of the United States at the time of the assembly of the Constitutional Convention, and it may appear to be a reflection on the intelligence of the Senate to call attention to what ought to be and doubtless is well known to us all.

But, Mr. President, we have reached a period in our country's history unlike any other period to which we can point.

We are met with the declaration not once, but many times, from those whose duty it is to discharge high and important public duties, that their efforts are obstructed by a lack of administrative power. Evils are pointed out that ought to be suppressed, but the inquiry is, Where is the authority to do it. And if we point to the powers of the States, we are told the State will not do it. Evils have been pointed out that should be remedied. Congress has been admonished to find some way by which such evils can be remedied or checked, and we have been told that Congress ought to find out some way to do it, some way not apparent to our advisers, nor to us.

Mr. President, it will be noticed that the Secretary of State does not indicate that there is any proposition to amend the Constitution. The last utterance read would indicate that he expected this change to be made by construction, and whether that construction is to be given by the legislative department, the executive department, or the judicial department is somewhat uncertain from his words.

I do not think that to a body which is composed largely of lawyers I need say that it is not possible, either legally or morally, to change the Constitution of the United States by construction. We may differ as to what the Constitution means. The Supreme Court may one day say that it means one thing and another day that it means another thing; but there has never been any court yet that has attempted to construe the Constitution except to construe it according to its meaning. No court has ever said "it ought to mean this, and therefore we will hold that it does." That is the theory upon which of late appeals are made to us to act.

The President of the United States not long since in addressing Congress said there were certain evils that Congress ought to find a way to remedy. The duties and the powers of Congress are carefully delineated in the Constitution of the United States; and if we have sometimes, perhaps, proceeded contrary to that delineation, we could rely upon the courts to determine whether we kept within the constitutional limit or whether we exceeded it.

The Secretary of State is one of the most illustrious lawyers in the United States, and I have no doubt, if the question were put to him, he would say frankly "you must proceed according to the Constitution to make any change in the general theory of the Government." But, in accordance with the general idea that we have not time to amend the Constitution when it needs it, you must find your remedy now, right away, and you can possibly find it by the enactment of some law here, subject of course to the supervision of the Supreme Court of the United States, or it is possible that the Supreme Court of the United States might determine also that they had power to construe the Constitution differently from what their predecessors had done or differently from what it means; but up to this time that never has taken place, and I do not suppose the time will ever come when the Constitution of the United States will be construed by the Supreme Court except in accordance with its terms and its original meaning.

It would seem to be unnecessary for me to say that the powers of the General Government are limited and restricted by the Constitution of the United States, and that no power can be exercised by the General Government unless the authority for its exercise can be found positively in the Constitution, or properly inferred from what is in the Constitution. There is a pretty general rule of law among lawyers—and it has been sanctioned by the Supreme Court on more than one occasion—that a statute absolutely clear in its meaning can not be construed otherwise than in strict accordance with its language, and statutes that do not admit of any controversy need no construction whatever.

Mr. President, I want now to approach this question of the power of the General Government over the States. I know that State rights is not a very popular idea; I know very well that when you speak of State rights you array against you an old prejudice which has existed for many years, and which culminated in its intensity during the great civil war and immediately thereafter; and yet the hope and the expectation of this country must be in the preservation of the State governments. I will not take much of the time of the Senate to go into that. I only want to say that the forty-six sovereignties who come, each of them, nearer to the people of their respective jurisdictions than does the General Government are better calculated and better qualified to maintain order and peace within their respective boundaries—and that is the great purpose of State governments—than is the General Government. When the time comes that the people in New England shall determine what the people of Oregon and of Washington shall do locally, and when the people of Oregon and Washington shall determine what the people of New England shall do locally, we shall be practically at the end of this Government of ours.

We ought to pay some heed to the lessons of the past. There has never been in the history of the world such a confederation of sovereignties as that which exists in this Government of ours; but, Mr. President, there have been innumerable confederacies of a different character that have existed and flourished for years and then have fallen. I venture to say now—and history will bear me out—that in practically every case where there has been such a confederacy and it has been ultimately dissolved, it has been dissolved because of a failure to respect the rights of each individual member of the confederation.

No people in the world probably were better qualified at one time for self-government than were the Greeks. They organized a confederacy that lasted for a few years, and when it disappeared it disappeared because Athens, the great city of intellectual culture and of art, became the oppressor of the other members of the confederacy, who no longer felt that they were allies, but subjects. So, when the Persian power came down on Greece, those who were dissatisfied with the ruling power of their own confederacy either withheld their assistance from Athens or took the other side. Then the confederacy of Delos, perhaps the most remarkable in all history, disappeared simply because there was not that cohesion which is necessary to maintain, and always has been necessary to maintain, different confederacies or different national associations.

I am not particularly careful, perhaps, about the word "confederacy." It is quite immaterial whether we are a confederacy in the strict sense of the term. We have retained for the States the right to do certain things. We speak of these frequently as the police powers. There are certain things that we can not take away from the States, and we can not increase their rights. That is one of the things that is settled and distinctly understood.

I am not one of those who would minimize in the slightest degree the national power. I have believed for many years that in all questions appertaining to national affairs this Government of ours is as supreme as any other government in the world in times of war and in times of peace.

Mr. President, I remember a few weeks ago a distinguished member of the Supreme Court of the United States made a speech in the city of New York in which he said that the National Government is supreme in all things appertaining to nationality and the States are supreme in all things appertaining to the States. I intended to present that as an epitome of the real theory of this Government, but I mislaid my copy. It was the justice from Kentucky, Mr. Harlan, long on the bench, and who by his devotion to duty and his well-known patriotism has shown himself the peer of any man who has sat on the bench, in modern times at least. That ought to be the watchword. The Federal Government should exercise all of the powers necessary for the General Government; the State should exercise all the powers necessary for local administration and local affairs.

The proposition before us here to-day is to build a dam on a navigable river. I do not deny the power of Congress to authorize the building of a dam on a navigable river, with locks and canal so as not to obstruct navigation. It has been done on several occasions. It has been done in a number of cases recently. That is not the question. Should the Government of the United States authorize the building on its rivers of dams that in any way might interfere or disturb its constitutional right to control the navigation of the stream? We have fallen into an idea that if the lower waters of a river are navigable the river is navigable to its source. In other words, we have fallen into the idea that if the Government has control over the first 400 miles of a river, it ought to have control over the upper and farther end. That is not the law. Under the English rule, the civil law, rivers are navigable as far as the tide ebbs and flows and no farther. Our rivers are navigable just as long as a boat can traverse them, and the Supreme Court has so held.

Nobody in any of the States or in any section of the country denies the right of the Government of the United States to control the commerce of the rivers and the Great Lakes. The question is, Under what conditions must it be controlled? The Government may control them in every possible way that is necessary for commerce. In other words, the Government may control the agencies of commerce, but the Government has not any control over the river, nor has the Government any control of the land under the river.

I assert that as having been decided by the Supreme Court more than sixty years ago and repeated at least thirty times since, and I have here, and shall present before I get through, the law on the subject. How it happens that anybody in these days should suppose that the Government of the United States owns the waters and the rivers, navigable or nonnavigable, I can not conceive, in view of the fact that the courts have held for so long, and every law writer of any consequence in this country, taking Story, taking Kent, and all that class of men, have asserted the doctrine that the waters of a river and the waters of arms of the sea belong to the State and do not belong to the General Government. The Supreme Court very early determined that the right to fish, to plant clams and to gather them was to be controlled by the States and not by the General Government.

I wish to make another statement for which the authorities will bear me out. The Government of the United States can not obstruct a national river. I mean by a "national" river a river that is entitled to be called a "navigable" river. It has no more power to do that than a private citizen—not a particle. Whether I shall present authorities for that or not I am not certain, in the multiplicty of cases that I am going to call attention to, but it can be found in the decisions of the court and in the early law writers upon the subject.

Mr. President, I do not want to spend too much time, yet I must take a minute to call the attention of the Senate to the adjudications that have been made by the court. One of the last cases decided by the Supreme Court was that of the State of Kansas against the State of Colorado. It was not a very satisfactory decision in some particulars, but it decided some things positively. This is what is decided in that case: That the State may determine whether the old doctrine of the common law as to streams shall prevail or another and different rule; that this is a Government that can claim no powers not granted to it by the Constitution; the Government of the United States is one of delegated and limited and enumerated power. (See p. 13 of the opinion in pamphlet.)

It is still true that no independent and unmentioned power can pass to the National Government or can be rightly exercised by Congress. (P. 13 of pamphlet.)

Referring to the second paragraph of section 3 of Article VIII, which gives Congress power to dispose and make all needful regulations respecting territory and other property of the United States, the court says:

> But clearly it does not grant to Congress any legislative control over the States, and must, so far as they are concerned, be limited to authority over property belonging to the United States within their limits. (See p. 14.)

But the proposition that there are legislative powers affecting the nation as a whole, which belong to although not expressed in the grant of powers, is in direct conflict with the doctrine that this is a Government of enumerated powers (p. 14).

RECLAMATION.

The court sustains the reclamation laws because the Government is the owner of large areas of land within the States where the system is to be applied, and specifically declares that this system could not be applied to States where the Government did not own land (p. 16). But did not declare the water belonged to the United States and said nothing that can authorize its control by the Government as against the State.

But in sustaining the law of reclamation, the court says:

> We do not mean that its legislation can override State laws in respect to the general subject of reclamation (p. 16).

That the land under the streams navigable both above and below high tide belongs to the States, and, speaking of such lands, the court says:

> It properly belongs to the State by their inherent sovereignty. Such title being in the State, the lands are subject to State regulation and control, under the condition, however, of not interfering with national regulations concerning public navigation and commerce (p. 17).

Again, the court says:

> It (the State) may determine for itself whether the common-law rule in respect to riparian rights or that doctrine which obtains in the West of the appropriation of water for the purpose of irrigation shall control (p. 17).
> Congress can not enforce either rule upon any State (p. 17).

The court in Kansas v. Colorado decided that the States owned their own waters, and it decided also that if a State did not choose to recognize the old common-law riparian rights the State had the power to change the law. Perhaps I need not dwell on that, but it is important in determining what are the rights of our Western States when it comes to the question of irrigation. We have abolished in most of the Western States the doctrine of riparian rights. The constitution of Colorado and that of some other States, although I will not undertake to say now of which States, provide that the water of the State belongs to the people of the State, and is under the control of the State and is not under the control of the people owning the land abutting on the rivers or streams.

The Supreme Court in the Colorado-Kansas case say that that is a right which belongs to the States to determine. We determined that. Wisconsin determined in 1846, if I recollect correctly, that the water belonged to that State. I think every States in the Western country where the question has ever been presented has so declared. Wisconsin declared it by statute. I think I could quote some others, but I am not going to try it.

Mr. President, there is another thing that I want to call attention to, which I think is very essential for us to understand. The Western States which are now young in years are sometimes supposed to have come into the Union on conditions different from those attaching to the original thirteen States. The Supreme Court has declared again and again that every State is the equal of every other State under the law, just as we say here that every Senator is the equal of every other Senator under the law. It may be a new State; it may be the last State; it may be the smallest in population or it may be the greatest; it has no other rights than any other State, and it rests under no burden that every other State in the Union does not rest under.

When a State is admitted to the Union it is on an equal footing with the original States. This is usually, if not always, so declared in the act of admission, but if that is not done, the situation or relation of the new State is the same as the other States, and the Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly so declared.

I believe that every State that has been admitted—certainly all that have been admitted since I have had any knowledge of the matter—has come into the Union with a declaration that it came in on an equal footing with the other States. The Supreme Court in 1842 declared that Alabama was admitted exactly like and had the same power and was under the same obligations as the other States which came in under the original compact—the thirteen original States. An effort was made to show that there were some reasons why Alabama might have come in on different conditions and might stand on a different footing from the others. The court laid it down squarely in a case I shall cite later that Alabama had the same rights, not because there was a difference in the condition, not because she had been ceded by Georgia to the United States, but because of the fact that all the States were to come in on equal footing when they came in, and every State should stand alike in power and in right.

Now, of course, in the original States there was no Government land. The old original States owned the land, or if they did not, the people inside the States owned the land. There was no public land in the old original thirteen States. Virginia had a very large tract of land that was ceded to the United States; Connecticut ceded; Massachusetts ceded some land to the United States. That was mainly or perhaps entirely in Ohio.

Mr. President, the United States became a great landowner, and that is what I want to call attention to for a few minutes. It became a great land proprietor. I find that a good many of our people in these days suppose the Government of the United States holds this land as a sovereign. The Supreme Court has said and repeated it again and again that this nation holds its land not as a sovereign, but as a proprietor. We do not tax the public land. We do not tax it because we stipulated that we would not tax it. Both Judge Sawyer and Judge Field, who were both Federal judges, but prior to being Federal judges were California judges, have declared that but for that provision saying we would not tax the land, the Government of the United States would be compelled by law to pay taxes on the land, because the land was not held to perform a Government function. If it had been, there would have been a different ruling on that subject. The Supreme Court has said it so often that it is hardly worth while for me to cite what they have said about it. I want to read just what was said in the California case by Judge Sawyer, who is now dead, but who, I think, we all recognize as one of the great lawyers of this country. Judge Sawyer, in the case of People v. Shearer (30 California, p. 658), said:

> If it had not been for the stipulation to the contrary in the act of admission, the United States might have been required to pay taxes on the land owned by it situate within the limits of California, like any other proprietor of land. The relation of the United States to the public lands since the admission of California into the Union is simply proprietary—that of an owner of the lands, like any citizen who owns land, and not that of a municipal sovereignty.

See also 5 Minnesota, State v. Batchelder, page 234; 2 Minnesota, Camp v. Smith, page 155; and 12 Iowa, Stockdale v. Treasurer of Webster County, page 538.

Judge Field declared it when he was on the State bench, and he reiterated it from the Federal bench.

If it is asserted that the United States as the proprietor of the public lands becomes the owner of the water of the nonnavigable streams flowing over or along its land, the Government has by its legislation authorized the appropriation and use of the water of such streams; and the courts of California and the United States have treated the prior appropriation of water on the public lands of the United States as having the better right than the subsequent appropriator, on the theory that the appropriation was allowed by license of the United States, and after 1866 by statutes of the United States. (Lux v. Hagan, 10 Pacific Reporter, p. 721.)

And if the State does not own the water of the nonnavigable streams, the United States, as owner of the public lands, must, under the common-law rule of riparian ownership, when it conveys its right to the soil, conveys its right to the water, and the holder of the patent becomes the owner, and the Government has by such patent ceased to be the owner of such water. (10 Pacific Reporter, supra, 722.)

Unless running water (not navigable) is reserved, it passes by grant or patent, supra.

Of course there has been an argument made and frequently made that because the King of Great Britain held all of the lands and the title was in the King, it must be that the Government of the United States, being the sovereign, held the land as the sovereign. It has been so often declared by the court to be otherwise, in accordance with the decisions I have just read, that contention must be abandoned. We can not draw any inference from the fact that the King of Great Britain could parcel out the land and even sell the land under the rivers and bays. That can not be done by the United States. Neither can it be done by the States, according to the rulings of the court. I want to read from Angell on Tide Water. This is an authority which at least in former times was considered entitled to credit. I do not know whether it is now or not, but it was fifty years ago when I was a law student.

> These inherent privileges are those of navigation and fishery, privileges which are classed among those public rights denominated "jura publica" or "jura communia." Those are contradistinguished from "jura coronæ" or the rights of the Crown. They are said to exist of common right, which, according to Sir Edward Coke, is only another epithet for common law. The common law of England is known by the various appellations of "right," "common right," "public right," and "communis justitia." When, therefore, it is said a man has a thing by common right, it is understood that he has it by common law. The common law is furthermore denominated common right because it is the common birthright or inheritance which people have for the protection and safeguard of their privileges. "And it is the excellency," says Sir Edward Coke, "of common law that the receding from the true institutions thereof introduces many inconveniences, and that the observation of it is always accompanied by peace and quiet, the end and center of all human laws." (Angell on Tide Water, pp. 22 and 23.)

> The right of property in tide waters, and in the soil and shores thereof, is "prima facia" vested in the King, to a great extent at least, as the representative of the public. To such an extent that to the right of navigation and fishery he has no other claim than such as he has as protector, guardian, or trustee of the common and public rights. Hence, the King has no authority, and since "magna charta" has never had, to obstruct navigation or to grant exclusive rights of fishing in an arm of the sea. (Angell on Tide Water, p. 22.)
> And by the law of nations the use of the shore is also public, and in the same manner as the sea itself, and for this reason any person is at liberty to place a cabin there, in which he may harbor himself, and for the like reason to dry nets and draw them from the sea. By the common law, the waters of the sea and the shores of the same are as much subject to public use as they are by the civil law; but the essential difference above referred to between the two relates to what is just mentioned as the doctrine of the civilian, viz, that such waters are the property of no one. The policy of the common law is to assign to everything capable of occupancy and susceptible of ownership a legal and certain proprietor, and accordingly make those things which from their nature can not be exclusively occupied and enjoyed the property of the sovereign. The King in England is regarded as the universal occupant, and the presumption is that all property was originally in the Crown. Hence, it is said that all lands are holden mediately or immediately from the Crown, and that the King has the "absolutum et directum dominium"—a fiction of law adopted not for the aggrandizement of the throne, but for the benefit of the subject. (Angell on Tide Water, p. 22.)

Every reader of history knows that the King was not the original owner of the soil. The original owner of the soil in Great Britain and for a thousand years after the Romans settled in it were the people who occupied it and used it.

In the case of Smith v. Maryland (18 Howard, p. 74), Justice Curtis said:

> Whatever soil below low-water mark is the subject of exclusive propriety and ownership belongs to the State on whose maritime border and within whose territory it lies, subject to any lawful grants of that soil by the State or the sovereign power which governed its territory before the Declaration of Independence. * * *
> But this soil is held by the State not only subject to, but in some sense in trust for the enjoyment of certain rights, among which is the common liberty of taking fish, as well shellfish as floating fish.

While the State may own and does own the lands under these tide waters, it can not part with them in such a way as to interfere with the navigation of the waters.

In the case of United States v. William G. Cornell (2 Mason, p. 60), opinion by Justice Story, is found the following:

> The purchase of lands by the United States for public purposes within the territorial limits of a State does not of itself oust the jurisdiction or sovereignty of such State over such lands so purchased.

Mr. President, I want to show before I get through that the withholding of land from sale does not give the Government of the United States any right over it except that of a proprietor, except under that provision of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to dispose of and make all needful regulations.

Justice Story says further:

> Exclusive jurisdiction is the necessary attendant upon exclusive legislation. The Constitution of the United States declares that Congress shall have the power to exercise "exclusive legislation" in all "cases whatsoever" over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings.

There is not a man here who does not know that the fact that the Government has the title to the soil does not give it exclusive rights to govern it and does not deprive the State of its jurisdiction over it, because the courts have settled that often, as I shall show before I get through.

Justice Story continues:

> When, therefore, a purchase of land for any of these purposes is made by the National Government, and the State legislature has given its consent to the purchase, the land so purchased, by the very terms of the Constitution, ipso facto, falls within the exclusive legislation of Congress, and the State jurisdiction is completely ousted.

The United States may build a building, putting in any amount of money it may choose, and the State jurisdiction is not lessened or impaired in the slightest degree unless the State so declares it shall be. Justice Story also said—this is a declaration which I have no doubt some of our friends would question, but I believe it is the law, and I believe it can be supported—

> For it may well be doubted whether Congress are, by the terms of the Constitution, at liberty to purchase lands for forts, dockyards, etc., with the consent of a State legislature where such consent is so qualified that it will not justify the "exclusive legislation" of Congress there.

We have taken some land, you know, the State reserving to itself a quasi jurisdiction over it, and Story says in this very case I have cited that it is doubtful whether the Government can hold it under that quasi relation, but the Supreme Court, in what I shall call the "Leavenworth case," which I will cite later, held that such could be done.

Mr. President, fifty years ago Chancellor Kent was supposed to be good authority for almost any proposition of law. I myself doubt whether there has been any man in the United States since his death who was better qualified, or as well qualified, to determine questions of this character. In his lecture on real property he says:

> The sovereign is trustee for the public, and the use of navigable waters are inalienable. But the shores of navigable waters and the soil under them belong to the States in which they are situated as sovereigns. (3d vol. Kent, 13th ed., p. 427; Pollard v Hagan, 3 Howard, 212; Canal appraisers, 17 Wendell, 571; Gavit v. Chambers, 3 Ohio, p. 496.)

Mr. President, I do not want to take up the question and distinguish very much our condition in those States from some others. I am speaking now of the arid West. Our condition is different from what it is in other parts of the country. There are some sections in the State of Colorado that were under irrigation before Columbus discovered America. There are plenty of lands in the Territory of New Mexico and some in the Territory of Arizona that had been watered and cultivated under the laws then existing, crude as they may have been, long before Columbus sighted land in his famous voyage.

The use of water for irrigation in the arid region is a natural want, and the supreme court of the State of Ilinois, in the case of Evans v. Merriweather (3 Scammon, 495), where irrigation has never been very practical, says:

> In a hot and arid climate water, doubtless, is absolutely indispensable to the cultivation of the soil, and there water for irrigation would be a natural want.

I want Senators to keep that in mind. There is not a Western State that has not thousands of acres which, while the climate may not be torrid, fall under that description, and the use of water there for irrigation is a natural want.

In Evans v. Merriweather (3 Scammon, p. 495), the court said as I have read. Then the court adds, on page 496:

> From these premises would result this conclusion: That an individual owning a spring on his land, from which water flows in a current through his neighbor's land, would have the right to use the whole of it, if necessary, to satisfy his natural wants. He may conserve all the water for his domestic purpose, including water for his stock.

So far, then, as natural wants are concerned, there is no difficulty in finding a rule by which riparian proprietors may use flowing waters to supply such natural wants.

Mr. President, that is the law in a country where the riparian doctrine is in force.

Mr. PILES. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. I would just like to ask the Senator if I am understanding him correctly. I understand the Senator to make the point, or he is leading up to the point, that it is not within the power of Congress to charge for water taken out of the navigable rivers of the United States for irrigation purposes.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that that is my position, and I will demonstrate before I get through that it is absolutely absurd for Congress to claim the right to charge for water.

Mr. PILES. I am not antagonizing the Senator's position. I just wanted to get his line of thought as I thought I had it in my mind.

Mr. TELLER. I understand. I am going even further, for I am going to say it is absolutely not in the power of this Government of ours to prevent a citizen of my State from using the water for his natural wants, and that is irrigation. The Government might control it when we were a Territory, as they attempted to do, and did do. The Government may control how the water shall be carried across its lands; but when it comes to the beneficial use, the State only can determine how it shall be used and what use shall be made of it.

Mr. PILES. Then, as I understand the Senator, he takes the position that it is not within the power of Congress to exact a charge for water taken out of a navigable river for either power or irrigation, or, in fact, for any other purpose; he contends that that power belongs solely to the State.

Mr. TELLER. The Government has not the slightest interest in the water, not even in the navigable waters.

Mr. PILES. I get the Senator's position.

Mr. TELLER. The court has said that all the Government has in navigable water is an easement, the right to run a ship or a boat over it, the right to see that it is not obstructed. Of course that follows its right to regulate commerce.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DILLINGHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. PERKINS. May I ask the Senator from Colorado his construction of the law or if the courts have decided it in a case where the source of a stream is in one State and it flows through that State into another State or another Territory? Has the first State a right to appropriate the water and to deprive the second State through which the stream passes of the water?

Mr. TELLER. The court has held the right of the people of the State to use the water. There has not been a case, I will admit, where all the water has been appropriated, but the case that I cited from 3 Scammon, Evans v. Merriweather, holds that the man who has a running stream through his farm may use it all and let his neighbor go dry.

In England and in Massachusetts a man may, by appropriation, which is supposed to mean a grant originally, take out the water of a stream and absolutely control it to the extent that nobody else has anything to do with it. He can build a mill race, and if he has held it twenty-one years in New England and twenty-one years in England he becomes the absolute controller of that water.

Mr. President, much more is that the case in a country where the whole question depends as much upon water as upon air. You could no more live on thousands and thousands of square miles belonging to the United States unless you could put water on it than you could live if the air should be taken away. To take away the water would be equivalent to taking away your life.

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if he contends that it would be within the power of a neighboring State, subject to the paramount right of navigation, to dispose of the waters of a river flowing through the State to such an extent that there would remain no water in the adjoining State which might be used or disposed of by that State for irrigation or power purposes, because there would not be sufficient water, we will say, remaining in the river for that purpose without disturbing the navigation of the river?

Mr. TELLER. If the use of water for irrigation is a natural want, then the first appropriator may use it all, even to the destruction of those differently situated persons, just as you may save your life even at the expense of another.

That brings me to the question of what Congress has a right to do and what Congress would do if such a thing occurred. That question has never yet arisen. It probably never will arise.

Mr. PILES. I merely want to get the Senator's view on that point.

Mr. TELLER. I will take the Arkansas River. It runs a couple of hundred miles in Colorado; it runs down into Kansas, then it runs into Arkansas, and then it runs into the Mississippi and into the sea. That is not a navigable river until you get into lower Arkansas and in the Indian Territory. Then it becomes a navigable river.

This question might be presented, Mr. President. I want to be fair about it. Suppose that was a navigable river on which there was a great commerce up near Oklahoma, say, in the Indian Territory, and suppose Kansas and upper Arkansas and Colorado should use all the water so that there was no water along in that river. Then it would be a question as to what, under the power to preserve commerce, the Government could do. What do you suppose, Mr. President, a government would do? You must presume that whenever you legislate in Congress you legislate with respect to the interests of the whole people—the greatest good to the greatest number. If you have a million people in Kansas, a million people in Colorado, and a half million more perhaps in Arkansas using this water, would anybody suppose that the United States, unless there was a tremendous necessity for it, would intervene and say you could not use that water? Would you make it a desert? That is the question the Supreme Court put the other day in the Colorado case. They did not decide it; they only said that is where it might go. We have not got there because we have never used all the water of that river; it has run across into Kansas. We have minimized it, they say, somewhat; we have not destroyed it; but in ten years after the irrigation begins the river where it crosses the line will be a larger river than it was before, except in flood time.

Mr. President, I will be diverted a moment just to mention one thing that has happened in my part of the country. We have an irrigating country. We have irrigated there for forty-five years. I do not like to bring myself particularly into evidence in a matter of this kind, but I have had absolute, actual, positive knowledge of irrigation for almost fifty years. I have seen water spread out on the land, and I have seen the desert where there was not grass enough to keep a goat on an acre selling for $200 an acre because of its fertility by the use of water. This is in the State of Colorado. Our farmers this year had $11,000,000 paid to them for beets that they have raised on irrigated land. Twenty million dollars will be paid in Colorado this year, and not a beet would have been raised, not a pound of sugar would have been made, except for the fact that we were allowed to use the water that flows down eventually into the Mississippi River and thus goes into the sea.

Could a better use be made of it, Mr. President? We have built up there a civilization that has no superior on the American continent. From Denver to Fort Collins, 75 miles, there is an unbroken farm. I doubt whether there is to-day another equal area in the United States that would sell for as much money or that will produce as much to the men who till it. Without water, I repeat, it would be a desert. I have seen it when it would not produce anything but the wild grass, and not much of that.

I am not going to be anxious as to what will happen when we have used up all the water, because we know that Congress will never make a desert of a country like that in order that a few boats may run on the lower Arkansas River. I do not know but the Government could do it, but a government that would do that would not last very long, in my opinion.

Mr. President, I did not intend to take up the irrigating question, but I am brought into it by the suggestion made by the Senator from Washington, which is one that has presented itself to me many times. I prepared an article on that subject. I said when we have destroyed the commerce on any river, then it will be time enough for the Government to complain, and then the question will be, What will the Government do? I assume that it would do what an individual would do. If an individual owned the whole property, he would preserve that which was the most beneficial to the human race.

Mr. President, we are met now by the claim that the Government of the United States owns the water in the State of Colorado; that the Rio Grande River, a river running into the Gulf of Mexico, is under the control of the United States. I deny that. I deny that the Government of the United States has any control over the water that is in the State. It has of course absolute control over the water of the Territory of New Mexico, and that question probably will be presented some day. There is a little boat down on the lower Rio Grande River running up 70 miles from the Gulf once a week. Mr. President, there is more for human happiness in a square mile of irrigated land in New Mexico than there is in running a boat once a month or once a week or once a day on that river. The great interest of the agriculturists will give way when the time comes, if it ever does come, not while the people are sane, but only when power shall simply desire to exercise itself to show what it can do. That time will never come, in my opinion, in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, I have been somewhat diverted, but I do not know that I care; it gives me at least an excuse for saying some things that perhaps I would not otherwise say. I appeal to some Senators who hear me. I know that they have seen the same things that I have. I know that the California Senators have seen it. I know that they have seen a country made a garden where it was a desert. I have been in the Territory of Arizona and I have seen where there was no more grass on an acre than there is on this floor to-day, and yet I have seen in ten or twelve years the country blossom. I have seen fine roses; I have seen lemons, oranges, figs, grapes, and dates growing where a few years ago there was an absolute desert.

Mr. President, one-third of this whole country must be irrigated, and when it is irrigated that third will produce more that goes to make life endurable in the country than the remaining two-thirds. In the country west of the Mississippi River, not all arid, but more than three-fourths of it arid, we produce more than one-half of the wheat of the United States. We produce more cattle than any other section of the country. We produce more sheep. We produce nine-tenths of the wool that is produced. Are you going to dedicate a country like that to silence and solitude because the Government of the United States has control of the waters? I deny that the Government has control, and I deny, too, that you would do it even if the Government had control. Our safety lies, and we intend to stand by it, in holding that the water belongs to the State and that we mean to keep it.

Mr. President, I want to cite another authority as to the proprietorship of the United States simply in its lands. If the Government of the United States is the sovereign and holds it by sovereign power, then we are the serfs of the General Government. We are not.

I have another California case. I cite this, for that was the first section of the country where irrigation began in earnest, except the little that was in New Mexico, Arizona, and in southern Colorado, which was exceedingly small and of but little value. As I said, undoubtedly that had been in existence long before the discovery of America.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the fact that irrigation in the Western country began in my own State before it did in any other State, before it did in California. As early as 1847 the people of Utah were successfully irrigating their land.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I overlooked that, because the Utah people did not make quite as much noise over it as our friends from California did.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We never do.

Mr. TELLER. But, Mr. President, I can testify in support of my friend from Utah. I saw almost fifty years ago the irrigation of Utah. It was the first large irrigation I had ever seen, or which, I think, perhaps, at that time, any American had seen, because California was really a cattle country for many years and not an agricultural country.

What I have said about Colorado as to prosperity may be said about some parts of Utah, and many parts of it, too, for that matter.

Judge Sawyer, in the case of Woodruff v. North Bloomfield Gravel Mining Company (18 Federal Reporter, p. 772) said:

> Upon the cession of California by Mexico—

Mr. President, I cite this because some people will say, as I have heard it said:

> Why, of course there is a difference between the land that was ceded by Virginia to the Government and the land that the Government got from Mexico.

I want to show that the doctrine is the same:

> Upon the cession of California by Mexico, the sovereignty and the proprietorship of all the lands within its borders, in which no private interest had vested, passed to the United States. Upon the admission of California into the Union, upon an equal footing with the original States, the sovereignty for all internal municipal purposes, and for all purposes except such purposes and with such powers as are expressly conferred upon the National Government by the Constitution of the United States, passed to the State of California. Thenceforth the only interest of the United States in the public lands was that of a proprietor, like that of any other proprietor, except that the State, under the express terms upon which it was admitted, could pass no laws to interfere with their primary disposal, and they were not subject to taxation. In all other respects the United States stood upon the same footing as private owners of land.

Mr. President, that has been the law repeatedly declared in other cases. Again, it was said in the same State, but in the Federal court, by the Supreme Court of the United States:

> This is a Government by law and not by men.

By this it is meant that the Government must be administered by laws enacted by the proper authority—that is, by the legislative department.

This means that no man, whatever his position may be, can substitute his will or his opinion for the law. If he is an executive officer he must be governed by law. He must act in accordance with the law as declared by the legislative department.

The ninth circuit court has said:

> As to nonnavigable waters, Congress has nothing to do with them beyond the rights of the United States as a riparian proprietor, which are the same as the rights of other riparian proprietors, except it might limit the right of purchase from the Government of lands owned by it and sold subsequent to the passage of the act under which such land sales were made. (Woodruff v. The Bloomfield Gravel Co., 18 Fed., p. 772.)

Speaking of the admission of California as a State, the judge said:

> Thenceforth the only interest of the United States in the public lands was that of a proprietor, like that of any other proprietor, except that the State, under the express terms upon which it was admittted, could pass no laws to interfere with their primary disposal, and they were not subject to taxation. In all other respects the United States stands upon the same footing as private owners of land.

The United States, in the disposal of its lands, acts as a proprietor and not as a sovereign.

In the case of Pollard's Lessees v. Hagan, which I have before cited, the Supreme Court said, speaking then of this provision, but in the State of Alabama, that they would not interfere with the primary disposal of the soil by the Government and would not tax. That has since been put in all the States, I guess, where there was any public land, at least. The court says:

> This authorized the passage of all laws necessary to secure the rights of the United States to the public lands and to provide for the sale and to protect them from taxation. (3 Howard, 225, or 15 U. S., 397.)

With the admission of a State the navigable waters of the State and the land under them became the property of the State, and also the nonnavigable water became subject to the sovereignty of the State and not that of the nation. The General Government can only exercise sovereignty when the Constitution provides it may or it follows logically from provisions of the Constitution.

The Supreme Court, in the case heretofore cited of Pollard v. Hagan, declared that—

> The National Government does not hold the public lands by municipal sovereignty it may be supposed to possess or have reserved by compact with the new State for that purpose. (3 Howard, 227, or 15 U. S., 396.)

It may be claimed that the case of Pollard v. Hagan is not in point, because Georgia had made a cession of part of its territory for the purpose of creating the State of Alabama, but the United States had claimed the lands of Alabama by virtue of the purchase from France in 1803.

The Supreme Court of the United States, after considering the question of the right of the Government of the United States to the lands in Alabama, says, in the case of Frank v. Neilson (2 Peters, 309; 15 U. S., 116):

> So that Alabama was admitted to the Union as an independent State in virtue of the title under the treaty of April, 1803.

The court declared that the Government held the lands just as it held other lands, and there was no exception, and the court declared also, over and over again, that the United States held them in trust for the public. I call attention to the summary in this case. It is a very long case. This is the case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan et al., decided in 1845 by the Supreme Court of the United States, which will be found in 3 Howard, page 230. The court says, after a considerable discussion and argument:

> By the preceding course of reasoning we have arrived at these general conclusions: First, the shores of navigable waters and the soils under them were not granted by the Constitution to the United States, but were reserved to the States respectively. Second, the new States have the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction over this subject as the original States.

This was the original declaration of the supreme court of Alabama, which the United States court took up and approved:

> Third, the right of the United States to the public lands and the power of Congress to make all needful rules and regulations for the sale and disposition thereof conferred no power to grant to the plaintiffs the land in controversy in this case. The judgment of the supreme court of the State of Alabama is therefore affirmed.

Mr. President, I have here a good deal of material that I am going to skip. I shall be glad if any Senator would like to look over it any time to furnish him a list of authorities I have not time to read. I have furnished it to some of my acquaintances.

Mr. PILES. I suggest that the Senator put them in the RECORD, anyway.

Mr. TELLER. I will put in enough of them. I can cite, I think, at least forty decisions of the Supreme Court practically to the same effect. The courts have spent a good deal of time determining what was a shore and what were the rights of the abutting landowners, and so forth. I do not care to go into that, because while I believe California still maintains the riparian doctrine, that is, I think, the only Western community that does. I do not know about Washington, but I know that Montana and Idaho and some other States do not.

I have tried to select a few of these, so as to show that it was not the same judge making the same decisions, but that different judges were passing upon this question, all coming out at the same place.

Chief Justice Waite, in the case of McCready v. Virginia (94 U. S., p. 394), said:

The precise question to be determined in this case is whether the State of Virginia can prohibit the citizens of other States from planting oysters in Ware River, a stream in that State where the tide ebbs and flows, when its own citizens have that privilege.

This is a navigable water.

The principle has long been settled in this court that each State owns the beds of all tide waters within its jurisdiction, unless they have been granted away. (Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan, 3 How., 212; Smith v. Maryland, 18 How., 74; Mumford v. Wardwell, 6 Wall., 436; Weber v. Harbor Commissioners, 18 id., 66.) In like manner, the States own the tide waters themselves, and the fish in them, so far as they are capable of ownership while running. For this purpose the State represents its people, and the ownership is that of the people in their united sovereignty. (Martin v. Waddell, 16 Peters, 410.)

This is taken from the decision:

The title thus held is subject to the paramount right of navigation, the regulation of which, in respect to foreign and interstate commerce, has been granted to the United States. There has been, however, no such grant of power over the fisheries. These remain under the exclusive control of the State, which has consequently the right, in its discretion, to appropriate its tide waters and their beds to be used by its people as a common for taking and cultivating fish, so far as it may be done without obstructing navigation.

Mr. Justice Field, speaking of the condition of California, in the case of Weber v. Harbor Commissioners (18 Wallace, p. 65), said:

Although the title to the soil under the tide waters of the bay was acquired by the United States by cession from Mexico, equally with the title to the upland, they held it only in trust for the future State. Upon the admission of California into the Union upon equal footing with the original States, absolute property in and dominion and sovereignty over all soils under the tide waters within her limits passed to the State, with the consequent right to dispose of the title to any part of said soils in such manner as she might deem proper, subject only to the paramount right of navigation over the waters, so far as such navigation might be required by the necessities of commerce with foreign nations or among the several States, the regulation of which was vested in the General Government.

Not many members of the Senate were born when this decision I am going to read was made. In the case of Corfield v. Coriel, reported in the Fourth Washington Circuit Reports, opinion by Justice Washington, the court says (p. 379):

The grant to Congress to regulate commerce on the navigable waters belonging to the several States renders those waters the public property of the United States, for all the purposes of navigation and commercial intercourse, subject only to Congressional regulation. But this grant contains no cession, either express or implied, of territory or of public or private property. The "jus privatum" which a State has in the soil covered by its waters is totally distinct from the "jus publicum" with which it is clothed. The former, such as fisheries of all description, remain common to all the citizens of the State to which it belongs, to be used by them according to their necessities or according to the law which regulates their use.

In the case of Mumford v. Wardwell, in 1867 (6 Wallace, 435 and 436), the Supreme Court held, in a case that came from California, as follows:

California was admitted into the Union September 9, 1850, and the act of Congress admitting her declares that she is so admitted on equal footing, in all respects, with the original States.

I think that is found in every act of admission—

The settled rule of law in this court is, that the shores of navigable waters and the soils under the same in the original States were not granted by the Constitution to the United States, but were reserved to the several States, and that the new States since admitted have the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction in that behalf as the original States possess within their respective borders.

When the Revolution took place the people of each State became themselves sovereign—

Mr. President, you want to keep in mind that there was no sovereign that had the power over all these colonies. The court continues—and in that character hold the absolute right to all their navigable waters and the soils under them, subject only to the rights since surrendered by the Constitution.

Necessary conclusion is, that the ownership of the lot in question—which was under water—

when the State was admitted into the Union, became vested in the State as the absolute owner, subject only to the paramount right of navigation. (6 Wallace, pp. 435–436.)

That is the Alabama case, where they had filled up the river and made the land.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. PERKINS. I would state to the Senator from Colorado the fact, which he will remember, that in making appropriations—and I have been associated with him upon committees—that he has always insisted in every case of a proposed improvement bordering on tide lands or overflowed lands, that there should be an easement granted by the State to the General Government.

The Navy Department of the Government especially has declined in numerous instances in California to make an expenditure for a naval station, as has the Treasury Department, for light-house stations and other fortifications in California, until the easement of the State to the overflowed or tide lands is ceded to the General Government.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, that is a fact, because we have been of the opinion that the State had control over those waters, of course subject to the right to pass over the navigable waters; but that the land adjoining those waters, which was necessary for the use of the Government in connection with its work, belonged to the States and must be ceded by the States.

As I have said, Mr. President, the court has held in two or three cases—and one of those I shall probably cite if I do not overlook it—that the only authority the Government has got is to regulate the agencies of commerce on the rivers—that they have no title in the water; in other words, the courts say the Government has an easement on the water; and that is all there is of it.

Mr. President, I ask leave to put in some of this matter without reading it, if no one objects.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

By the English common law a river is navigable as far as the tide flows, upon the theory that it is a part of the sea.

This doctrine was all right in England, where the rivers are short and where the tides flow even above where they are navigable in fact. But in the United States rivers are navigable in law as far as they are navigable in fact, and no attention is paid to whether the tide flows or not.

By the English common law the Crown owns the land covered by the water of navigable streams in trust for the public use.

According to the English common law every river is navigable as far as the tide ebbs and flows and it is a royal river and belongs to the King by virtue of his prerogative, but in every other river, even if navigable in fact, there the King's prerogative does not attach, but the right of public use does attach. They are, as the authorities declare, "under the servitude of the public interest," to be used as water highways. They are public rivers, not as to their shores or the land under them, for these are in the riparian proprietors, but only in reference to public use.

At common law land bounded by a river extends to the center of the stream. In Alabama the streams that are navigable in fact the owners of land bound upon it can not assert their right to the soil under the stream.

The right of navigation under both civil and common law is a paramount right. This right is so important that even the sovereign can not obstruct it, nor can the United States.

The King of England can not assert his prerogative to obstruct navigation.

What is the shore?

A piece of land bounded on the shore of the sea or a river.

By the civil law the shore is where the highest tide comes or where the greatest wave extends during the winters.

By the common law the shore is the point where the ordinary tide stops. The shore of a river is at common law the point of ordinary flow.

In Massachusetts the shore is where the sea stands at ordinary times. In the United States admiralty jurisdiction extends to water in fact navigable.

It is a well-established principle of law that nothing passes as incident to an easement but that which is requisite to a fair enjoyment of the right. (5 Mason, 195, 3 Kent Commentaries, 432; Commissioners of the Canal Fund v. Kemshall, 26 Wendell, 414.)

Chief Justice Shaw said: "We can not doubt that navigable streams may cease to be such by appropriation of the soil under legislative authority to other purposes." (Commonwealth v. Charlestown, 1 Pickens, R. 180.)

The General Government has the right to regulate commerce, and so forth, as provided in paragraph 3 of section 8 of the Constitution, but this does not give Congress any title to the agencies of commerce, rivers and lakes, any more than it does to the railroads of the country.

All that Congress is authorized to do is to regulate commerce, and the control of Congress is limited to the exercise of such powers as are necessary to regulate commerce. The State owns the lands under navigable waters.

The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the City of Mobile v. Eslava (16 Peters, p. 277) says:

The United States then may be said to claim for the public an easement for the transportation of merchandise, etc., in the navigable waters of the original States, while the right of property remains in the States.

The original States possessing this interest in the waters within their jurisdictional limits, the new States can not stand upon an equal footing with them as members of the Union if the United States still retain over their navigable waters any other right than is necessary to the exercise of its constitutional powers. To recapitulate, we are of opinion: First, that the navigable waters within this State have been dedicated to the use of the citizens of the United States, so that it is not competent for Congress to grant a right of property in the same. * * *

In Martin et al. v. Waddell, the court said:

When the Revolution took place the people of the Eastern States became themselves the sovereign, and in that character hold the absolute right to all the navigable waters and the soil under them for their own common use, subject only to the right since surrendered by the Constitution of the United States to the General Government. (16 Peters, 411.)

In the act of Congress providing for the admission of Alabama as a State Congress provided that certain things should be included in the Constitution, as follows:

That the people of Alabama forever disclaims all right and title to the waste or unappropriated lands lying within the State, and that the same shall remain at the sale and disposition of the United States.

Also, that all navigable waters within the State shall forever remain public highways, free to the citizens of that State and the United States, without any tax, duty, impost, or toll thereon imposed by that State.

These provisions were inserted in the constitution of Alabama, which was approved by Congress by a resolution adopted December 14, 1819, in words as follows:

Resolved, That the State of Alabama shall be one, and is hereby declared to be one, of the United States of America, and admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatsoever.

Mr. TELLER. Speaking of the compact which was made that Alabama should not tax the land, and so forth, the court continues:

This supposed compact is therefore nothing more than a regulation of commerce to that extent among the several States and can have no controlling influence in the decision of the case before us. This right of eminent domain over the shores and the soils under the navigable waters for all municipal purposes belongs exclusively to the States within their respective territorial jurisdictions, and they, and they only, have the constitutional power to exercise it. To give to the United States the right to transfer to a citizen the title to the shores and the soils under the navigable waters would be placing in their hands a weapon which might be wielded greatly to the injury of State sovereignty and deprive the States of the power to exercise a numerous and important class of police powers. (See p. 230.)

And the court concludes as follows:

By the preceding course of reasoning we have arrived at these general conclusions: First, the shores of navigable waters and the soils under them were not granted by the Constitution to the United States, but were reserved to the States, respectively. Second, the new States have the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction over this subject as the original States. Third, the right of the United States to the public lands, and the power of Congress to make all needful rules and regulations for the sale and disposition thereof, conferred no power to grant to the plaintiffs the land in controversy in this case.

The Supreme Court of the United States said in 1842, in the case of Martin v. Waddell (16 Peters, p. 411; 14 U. S. Repts., p. 349):

When the Revolution took place, the people of each State became themselves sovereign, and in that character hold the absolute right to all their navigable waters and the soil under them for their common use, subject only to the rights since surrendered by their constitutions to the General Government.

If the States took the absolute title to the navigable waters, they certainly did to the nonnavigable waters.

Congress can not interfere with waters of a State, except it may be necessary to protect the navigability of a navigable stream, and the courts have held that that provision of the Constitution did not give the Government any title to or control over the waters of the rivers in the States.

I do not care to enter into any discussion here, but I think that will be admitted. If the Government did not have any title to waters upon which it runs its ships, it certainly did not over trout streams that run into and make up the river.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in 16 Peters, said:

The United States may be said to claim for the public an easement for the transportation of merchandise, and so forth, in the navigable waters of the original States, while the right of property remains in the States. (See Mobile v. Eslava, 16 Peters, 253; 14 U. S. Repts., p. 277.)

The court in the last-cited case says:

The original States possessing this interest in the waters within their jurisdictional limit, the new States can not stand upon an equal footing with them as members of the Union if the United States still retain over their navigable waters any other right than is necessary to the exercise of its constitutional powers.

Mr. PILES. Will the Senator permit me to call his attention to one fact?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. PILES. In that connection I should just like to call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the fact that the State of Washingon, at the time it adopted its constitution, did not take any chance on its ownership in the beds, shores, and so forth, of the navigable streams of that State.

Mr. TELLER. I shall be glad to have the Senator read the provision.

Mr. PILES. The provision of the constitution of the State of Washington is as follows:

SECTION. 1. The State of Washington asserts its ownership to the beds and shores of all navigable waters in the State up to and including the tide of ordinary high tide, in waters where the tide ebbs and flows, and up to and including the line of ordinary high water within the banks of all navigable rivers and lakes.

That is along the idea which the Senator from Colorado has been discussing.

Mr. TELLER. The court also stated in the case I have just cited—that of the city of Mobile v. Eslava:

That such rivers (navigable rivers) are common for navigation and commerce in the widest sense is free from doubt—that Alabama has jurisdiction and power over them the same as the original States have over their navigable waters is equally clear. (Mobile v. Eslava, U. S. Rept. 14, p. 279.)

In the same case, on page 259, the court said:

That each and all of the States have sovereign power over their navigable waters above and below the tide no one doubts. (282 U. S., 14.)

The State may bridge and dam navigable streams if Congress has not declared them navigable waters. This the State is not likely to do if such bridge or dam destroys the navigability of the stream. (See Wilson v. Blackbird Creek, 2 Peters, p. 245; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall., p. 713, and Pound v. Turck, 95 U. S., p. 459.)

The courts have held that the exercise of such power by the State is not inconsistent with the object for which the Federal Government was established.

Mr. President, it may be inquired how the original States got these rights. Some of them got them by virtue of their charters. Some of them assumed such rights simply as sovereign States, and you can not trace them back—at least I have not been able to do so—to any authority in some of the colonies that became States. Some of the old colonies asserted that right because there seemed to be a notion that it belonged to the sovereign in England; that it belonged to the King. Take Connecticut. It did not have a charter at all. If it did, I do not remember what it was.

Mr. BACON. Oh, yes.

Mr. TELLER. I think Connecticut had a charter that was taken away.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will recall the story of the Charter Oak.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, Rhode Island did not have a charter. Rhode Island was settled by a lot of tramps, who went there carrying with them their notions of free government and all that. When the trouble came Rhode Island, although small in extent, was just as big in law as any of the other States.

In the case of Mobile v. Eslava (16 Peters, p. 253) the Supreme Court says:

That the original States by their colonial charter had the right of property in bays and arms of the sea. This they retained, and it can only be interfered with by the Federal Government under their right to regulate commerce so far as to furnish a free navigation. The United States, then, may claim for the public an easement for transportation of merchandise, etc., in the navigable waters of the original States, while the right of property remains in the States.

The court also says in the Mobile case:

That each and all the States have sovereign power over the navigable waters above and below the tide, no one doubts. (See p. 259.)

If sovereign over navigable waters, is there any reason to say the States are not sovereign over the nonnavigable waters? How did the States retain their right? They retained it by withholding it from the General Government.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not want to interrupt the course of the Senator's argument.

Mr. TELLER. You will not interrupt me at all; it will not interfere with me.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator's argument that far is sound—and, personally, I want to say to the Senator that I am in entire sympathy with him—I want to ask whether it does not inevitably lead to the final conclusion that the only authority which the General Government has in the matter of granting the right to build dams, bridges, and so on, across navigable rivers is simply to see that the right of navigation is protected, and that the General Government has absolutely no authority or power whatever to charge a fee to any person or corporation either for the use of the water for irrigation or for the generation of power or for any other purpose?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly. The Government can not control the water of the Mississippi River, for instance.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to ask the Senator further, if that is so with reference to navigable streams, whether or not his argument will not apply all the stronger to the case of nonnavigable waters, such as exist in the irrigation States?

Mr. TELLER. Undoubtedly. There is not a provision in the Constitution anywhere that would indicate that anybody supposed the General Government would have anything to do with such waters or their shores or the land under them. All the Government can do is to regulate the commerce on the streams. The Constitution does not say "commerce on the streams," but at that time there was no commerce at all except what was on the water, the rivers, lakes, etc.

Mr. President, I will not stop to read the decision, but the Supreme Court of the United States has declared that the soil in front of Chicago under the navigable waters of Lake Michigan is the property of the State of Illinois, and not of the United States.

The Senator from Utah calls my attention to the difference between nonnavigable and navigable streams. As I said, under the English law waters are navigable just to the extent that the tide ebbs and flows. The Supreme Court of the United States settled that question many years ago.

They said that doctrine would not answer our purposes; that it was a question of fact; that if, for instance, the Mississippi River was navigable to St. Paul the river would still be under the control of the Government under the commerce clause; in other words, that the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States attached to matters arising in those waters. But the Supreme Court has repeatedly held—the most recent case is the case of Escanaba v. City of Chicago, decided in 107 United States, although there is another case in 3 Wallace, the case of Philadelphia v. Gilman, of the same general character. This was a Pennsylvania case. In the Escanaba case the court went into the question pretty extensively, and held that until Congress had declared that the river was navigable the State might bridge it. They made that decision largely on what was called the "Blackbird Creek case," which was decided at least sixty-five years ago, the decision being rendered by Chief Justice Marshall. In that case a town in Delaware, or the State of Delaware, had put a bridge across Blackbird Creek. It was a navigable stream, but it had never been declared by the United States to be navigable, and the attempt to take the bridge down was resisted. The court held that until Congress had declared that that was a navigable stream they would not interfere.

Afterwards in the State of Wisconsin some people built a bridge over the Chippewa River. It was a navigable river. There was not any question about that at all. They were indicted and brought into court, but the Supreme Court of the United States held that they had committed no offense; that inasmuch as the State authorized them to build the bridge, they could build it, unless Congress had intervened and said they should not build it.

Mr. President, if I should attempt to read all of these cases I think I should be here until to-morrow morning, and I do not want to do that. I desire, however, to cite the case of the Illinois Central Railroad Company v. Illinois, decided in 1892 by the Supreme Court of the United States, and reported in 146 United States, page 435. The court says:

> It is the settled law of this country that the ownership of and dominion and sovereignty over lands covered by tide waters, within the limits of the several States, belong to the respective States within which they are found, with the consequent right to use or dispose of any portion thereof, when that can be done without substantial impairment of the interest of the public in the waters, and subject always to the paramount right of Congress to control their navigation so far as may be necessary for the regulation of commerce with foreign nations and among the States. This doctrine has been often announced by this court, and is not questioned by counsel of any of the parties. (Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan, 3 How., 212; Weber v. Harbor Commissioners, 18 Wall., 57.)

This case arose with reference to the lake front at Chicago, and they held that it belonged to the State. The court also states, on page 452:

> That the State holds the title to the lands under the navigable waters of Lake Michigan within its limits, in the same manner that the State holds title to soils under tide water, by common law, we have already shown, and that title necessarily carries with it control over the waters above them whenever the lands are subjected to use. But it is a title different in character from that which the State holds in lands intended for sale. It is different from the title which the United States hold in the public lands which are open to preemption and sale. It is a title held in trust for the people of the State that they may enjoy the navigation of the waters, carry on commerce over them, and have liberty of fishing therein, freed from the obstruction of interference of private parties.

That is the language of the court. Again, on page 454, the court holds that while the State holds the land under the rivers and lakes, and control over the same, yet the State can not part with its title to such an extent as to prevent the public use of such property. The court says:

> The harbor of Chicago is of immense value to the people of the State of Illinois in the facilities it affords to its vast and constantly increasing commerce; and the idea that its legislature can deprive the State of control over its bed and waters and place the same in the hands of a private corporation—

That is what the State undertook to do—> created for a different purpose, one limited to transportation of passengers and freight between distant points and the city, is a proposition that can not be defended.

Again, on page 459, the court say:

> The soil under navigable waters being held by the people of the State in trust for the common use and a portion of their inherent sovereignty, any act of legislation concerning their use affects the public welfare. It is therefore appropriately within the exercise of the police power of the State.

On page 434 the court say:

> The State of Illinois was admitted into the Union in 1818 on an equal footing with the original States in all respects. Such was one of the conditions of the cession from Virginia of the territory northwest of the Ohio River, out of which the State was formed. But the equality prescribed would have existed if it had not been thus stipulated. There can be no distinction between the several States of the Union in the character of the jurisdiction, sovereignty, and dominion which they may possess and exercise over persons and subjects within their respective limits.

In the case of New Orleans v. United States, in 10 Peters, 317, the court say:

> The Government of the United States, as was observed in the argument, is one of limited powers—

I do not think, Mr. President, you can repeat that too often—

> The Government of the United States, as was observed in the argument, is one of limited powers. It can exercise authority over no subjects except those which have been delegated to it. Congress can not by legislation enlarge the Federal jurisdiction, nor can it be enlarged under the treaty-making power.

Vattel says:

> It is the universal rule that water can not be diverted from a public navigable river without the consent of the State within which it lies. (See Vattel, chap. 2, p. 249.)

In the case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan (3 Howard) the court said, on page 224:

> The right of Alabama and every other new State to exercise all the powers of government which belong to and may be exercised by the original States of the Union must be admitted and remain unquestioned, except so far as they are temporarily deprived of control over the public lands.

The court also said:

> Every nation acquiring territory, by treaty or otherwise, must hold it subject to the constitution and laws of its own government and not according to those of the government ceding it. (Vat. Law of Nations, b. 1, c. 19, secs. 210, 214, 245, and b. 2, c. 7, sec. 80.)

The Supreme Court, in the Pollard case, said:

> Then to Alabama belong the navigable waters and soils under them in controversy in this case, subject to the rights surrendered by the Constitution to the United States, and no compact that might be made between her and the United States could diminish or enlarge these rights. (Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan, 3 Howard, p. 229, 15 U. S., 402.)

In the case of the City of Mobile v. Eslava, reported in 1842 (16 Peters, p. 254), the court says, in speaking of the reservations of public lands which are found in all new States:

> The clause inserted into the constitution of Alabama reserving the rights of property to the United States as a compact with them embraces lands under water as emphatically as those not covered with water. But if no stipulation, saving the interest of the United States had been made, they would have had just as much right to their private property as an individual had to his. They hold, as a corporation, an individual title. * * * The United States, as owner, can do no act to obstruct the free public use of the waters more than a private owner of the soil under water could obstruct the navigation.

But in 1845 the court, in the case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan, determined that the fee of land under the navigable waters was the property of the State, and this has been the decision of the court in repeated cases ever since. (See Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan, 3 Howard.)

It is needless to say if no right of property exists in the United States in navigable rivers there is none in the nonnavigable waters. (See 3 Howard, Ohio Repts., Gov't v. Chambers, 498.)

The water of navigable rivers can not be obstructed by the State or individuals, if Congress declares that it is a navigable river, not because the United States owns the river, but because as an agency of commerce Congress can prevent its obstruction to navigation in the protection of interstate commerce.

In one case the court has said, "That the navigable rivers are the public property of the nation" (Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall., 725), but in many other cases it has been held that the United States has no property in the river and only an easement on the right, and the States own the river, subject to the right of commerce, which the Government of the United States must regulate and protect, and the State can not interfere with such regulation.

Again, the court quotes from the case of Pollard's Lessee v. Hagan (3 Howard, p. 230):

The right of eminent domain over the shores and soil under the navigable waters for all municipal purposes belongs exclusively to the States within their respective territorial jurisdiction, and they, and they only, have the constitutional power to exercise it.

It is evident the court did not in the Gilman case intend to assert a property right to their rivers in the usual sense in which we speak of property right. A mere easement is not a property right, and the court in the Gilman case holds that pilot laws are a regulation of commerce, but if enacted in the interest of commerce they are not in conflict with the power of Congress to regulate commerce. (See 727.)

But if Congress has passed no law with reference to commerce on a river the State may authorize a dam across a navigable stream. (See Wilson v. Black Bird Creek Marsh, 2 Peters, 250.)

In the case of Pennsylvania v. Whitney and Belmont Bridge Company (18 Howard, p. 432) the court says:

The purely internal streams of a State which are navigable belong to the riparian owners to the thread of the stream and, as such, they have the right to use the waters and bed beneath for their private emolument, subject only to the public right of navigation, and may construct wharves or dams or canals, etc., subject to this public easement. In respect to these purely internal streams of a State, the right of public navigation is exclusively under the control and regulation of the State legislature, and a structure, although it may be a real obstruction to navigation, if authorized by the legislature, it is lawful.

Chief Justice Taney, in delivering the opinion in the case of John Den v. Jersey Company, to be found in 15 Howard, 432, said:

It is not necessary to state particularly the charters and grounds under which they claim—

This was in New Jersey—

It is not necessary to state particularly the charters and grants under which they claim. They are all set out in the special verdict in the case of Martin v. Waddell, reported in 16 Peters, 367. The title claimed on behalf of the proprietors in that case was the same with the title upon which the plaintiff now relies. And upon very full argument and consideration in the case referred to, the court were of opinion that the soil under the public navigable waters of east New Jersey belonged to the State and not to the proprietors; and upon that ground gave judgment for the defendant. The decision in that case must govern this.

The counsel for the plaintiff, however, endeavor to distinguish the case before us from the former one, upon the ground that nothing but the right of fishery was decided in Martin v. Waddell, and not the right to the soil. But they would seem to have overlooked the circumstance that it was an action of ejectment for the land covered with water. It was not an action for disturbing the plaintiff in a right of fishery, but an action to recover possession of the soil itself. And in giving judgment for the defendant the court necessarily decided upon the title to the soil.

Mr. President, I want to spend a few moments, and only a few moments, on the question of forest reserves. I am not going into that question except as to the matter of title. I am not going to enter into a discussion whether the forest reserves are beneficial to the country or injurious, but I want to call attention to some decisions of the courts. In the case of United States v. Cornell (Mason's Cir. Ct. Repts., vol. 12, p. 63), it was held:

But although the United States may well purchase and hold lands for public purposes, within the territorial limits of a State, this does not of itself oust the jurisdiction or sovereignty of such State over the lands so purchased. It remains until the State has relinquished its authority over the land either expressly or by necessary implication.

Another important case in this connection is the case of the Fort Leavenworth Railroad Company v. Lowe (114 U. S., p. 525). I will make a brief statement in regard to that case.

Before there was an organized government in what is now the State of Kansas the Government of the United States took possession of a piece of ground for military purposes, now known as Fort Leavenworth, occupied it, and has occupied it ever since. I suppose the Government took possession of it seventy or seventy-five years ago. At all events, when the State of Kansas was admitted to the Union there was no reference made to Fort Leavenworth. The Government did not reserve anything. Kansas did not promise anything. Afterwards it was asserted that that property, being for the use of the Government of the United States, fell within the provision of the law that a State can not tax Government property. The question did not arise with reference to the fort and buildings, but arose with reference to the land of the railroad that crossed over the reservation, and the railroad company asserted the right to be independent of taxes. The matter came into the court. The court decided that Kansas had absolute jurisdiction of it. Mind you, this was a piece of land which the Government had appropriated years and years before Kansas was settled, and then Kansas was admitted without reference being made to the military reservation. The Supreme Court of the United States held that Kansas had jurisdiction; but subsequently Kansas was prevailed upon by the Government to cede its jurisdiction over that reservation. Until that time Kansas had absolute jurisdiction.

I do not propose to occupy the Senate much longer, although I have a great deal of manuscript here to which I intended to call attention. I do want to call attention, however, to one thing that I think is pertinent to be considered, particularly in connection with the pending case. I complained yesterday that I did not think the Government of the United States should allow any individual to control navigable waters; that I thought the United States was rich enough and strong enough when rivers were not navigable and it wanted to make them navigable to do so itself. I think in 1846 the Territory of Wisconsin was anxious to have the Fox River utilized for commerce. You will remember that was before railroads were common. It came to Congress, and Congress granted to the Territory, the title to be in the State when it became a State, a certain amount of land to build locks and dams that were necessary on Fox River. The State government, when it came into existence, promptly accepted the act:

The State accepted said grant of land for said purposes, and by an act of its legislature, approved August 8, 1848—undertook the improvement of said rivers, and enacted, among other things, that "Whenever a water power shall be created by reason of any dam erected or other improvements made on any of said rivers, such water power shall belong to the State, subject to the future action of the legislature.

That was immediately after their admission—

They went on with that, and not finding themselves able to carry out the work, they finally incorporated a company called the Fox and Wisconsin Improvement Company. They went on and spent some money on it, and finally failed, just as other concerns have failed in doing these things, and then the Government found itself in a bad situation. The company could not go on, and they went into bankrupcty. Subsequently the Government bought them out, paid them off, and got rid of them. I believe we have had one other case of the same kind, where parties have gone out and got the permission from the Government, and they have not been able to comply, and the Government has had to buy them out. But I want to read a little thing here. This matter came to the Supreme Court of the United States in 1898. There was a question whether the canal company had any rights there or not, and the court said:

Upon the undisputed facts contained in the record we think it clear that the canal company is possessed of whatever rights to the use of this incidental water power that could be validly granted by the United States.

Now, it had a State concession and it had some kind of a concession from the General Government through the State. The litigation arose from the fact that one of the riparian owners claimed the right to some part of this water and undertook to interfere. This is another case, and it is cited by Judge Shiras:

The value of this water power created by the dam was much greater than that of the river in its unimproved state in the hands of the riparian proprietors, who had not the means to make it available. Those proprietors lost nothing that was useful to them except the technical right to have the water flow as it had been accustomed and the possibility of their being able some time to improve it. If the State could condemn this use of the water, with the other property of the riparian owner, it might raise a revenue from it sufficient to complete the work, which might otherwise fail. There was every reason why a water power thus created should belong to the public rather than to the riparian owners. Indeed, it seems to have been the practice, not only in New York, but in Ohio, in Wisconsin, and perhaps in other States, in authorizing the erection of dams for the purpose of navigation, or, rather, public improvement, to reserve the surplus of water thereby created to be leased to private parties under authority of the State.

I read that because I want to show that has been the rule, and there are several cases that I could cite from the State of New York as to the rights of the States. The States always control the water, or claim to control it, at least. I do not know that there has ever been a controversy between a State and the General Government as to who owned the water.

After stating this, the court says:

The learned judge then proceeds to cite decisions to that effect rendered in several of the State supreme courts.

I want to say here now that in a careful examination of the authorities, running over months, I have never found a case where the Government of the United States has asserted its right to waters that I assert belong to the State. Some of the executive officers and some of its subordinates may have been confident that the Government of the United States could control the water absolutely, but no Federal or State court has so held.

I have one other matter I wish to call attention to of about the same general character. Mr. President, I have asserted, and I want to assert it now, that the United States has not any right to go into business. The United States can not legally go into a mercantile business, in my judgment. It can, of course, by its officials, if it sets up a store and puts somebody in it, do it until the question is raised in some proper manner. It can not go into the lumber business, but it is in the lumber business now.

It has in Colorado a large number of sawmills located on forest reserves. It is cutting timber for public use and selling it at very much higher prices than we were in the habit of paying, and where we have had one sawmill cutting timber we have in one single forest reserve six sawmills; and yet they tell us that the very purpose and object of the reserve is to protect the timber. They have traversed the mining region of my State and the building region and solicited parties to buy lumber of them. There is not a miner in some sections of the State who does not pay tribute to them. A hundred and some-odd thousand dollars was paid in Colorado last year. A miner can not go out in the forest and cut a stick to put in his mine but he must get the permission of some man or pay for it.

Mr. President, I am one of those who believe in the protection of forests, but I believe in their protection in a proper way, and I know there has been practically no waste of timber in the country in which I live. I was brought up in a timber country. I remember when more than half of western New York was covered with timber. I can remember when all of southern Pennsylvania was covered with timber—the finest timber in the world. There is not any left. I heard a Senator say one day we have wasted our timber; but I want to dissent from that. In the section in New York in which I lived until I was old enough to go West I saw the timber destroyed. I saw the farmer cut down the timber and roll it in a heap and burn it. Why did he do that? In order to make a place for a home. He wanted a place to build a house and make a farm. He could not do it in the woods, and he cut down the timber and burned it up; and I have seen fine timber burned up. It was followed by a flourishing farming community.

Mr. President, I am one of those who believe that civilization, a country settled by intelligent people, is a great deal better than a forest, however beautiful it may be, or however profitable it would have been if left. But seventy years ago and more, eighty years ago, the people cut up these trees and turned them into ashes that they might make a better condition, and they did make it. Would the State of New York have been better if that whole country had been kept in timber until to-day? It is possible that the owners of the land if they could have lived until this time would have made some money by selling the timber, but the community would not have been so well off.

I would rather see people living on land than to see timber on it, no matter how beautiful it is or how fine. We have destroyed some timber in Colorado, but we have added to the sum of human happiness by so doing. We have put into the commerce of the world a billion dollars of gold and silver, and we have made homes for thousands and thousands of men, and we have built up a civilization that can not be beaten in any part of the world. Suppose we have not so much timber; suppose there is a bare hill here and there. Mr. President, we have something better than timber to show for it. We have schools and colleges and churches and hospitals and all the appliances of civilization; and I can show you on that land where the timber has of course become scarcer, well-educated men and women—and when I say educated I mean those who have college diplomas—I can show you more men and women with that kind of an education than you can find in any New England city of the same size. I can show it not in one city alone, but in a dozen. I can show you that some good has come out of the destruction of the forests.

The superintendent of a street-car line in Denver said to me one day, "I have 200 college graduates running on my street-car line." You can not find that anywhere else in the world. Why do we have them? Because we have made a settlement there that is desirable for the people and we have a climate which is health giving, which makes it desirable for those who have fallen into ill health to come there and live.

We have economized and utilized our advantages, such advantages as we have had. We have had some trouble. I went there when the Indian was rife. I went there when every pound of freight that was brought in paid 25 cents a pound. Whether it was machinery for our mills or woolen goods that the women wore, it cost at least 25 cents a pound to land it in Denver. Why should we not use the timber?

I heard a prosecution once there for cutting timber on the public lands. The judge, sitting at his desk, said: "I mean to dismiss this case. The desk at which I am sitting, the church next door have been built out of timber cut on the public land. Congress said to us: 'This is a country open for settlement,' and we came here. Have we not a right to make ourselves comfortable? Can we carry on civilization here unless we have the opportunity to do that?" To-day they will tell you we have blasted the hills because we have cut off the pine. If we have cut off the pine, we have made a hundred orchards where we have made a bare hill.

Mr. President, this question to us is a live one. Are the State of Colorado and the State of Idaho and other States to be refused the opportunity of filling up with settlers? One-fifth of the State of Colorado is in a forest reserve; more than that in the State of Idaho. We passed a law that would open up every acre of that to the prospector. The Department has put on such rules and regulations that a prospector dare not go into a forest reserve. We passed a law that a homesteader could go into a reserve if he saw fit. They have passed such regulations that no homesteader can go in. If he does at the bidding of some cheap Jack, he will be told, "You can not make a living here. Get out." In my State I can show not simply a notice to quit, but cite cases where they have absolutely moved him off the homestead, which he could hold according to law.

Mr. FLINT. May I interrupt the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TELLER. You may.

Mr. FLINT. I want to ask the Senator what is his authority for making the statement that a homesteader can go into a forest reserve?

Mr. TELLER. We have a law.

Mr. FLINT. What law?

Mr. TELLER. A statute.

Mr. FLINT. I do not understand——

Mr. TELLER. Yes; there is a statute.

Mr. FLINT. I do not understand that a homesteader can go into a forest reserve.

Mr. TELLER. He can under the statute, but it is absolutely ignored by the Department.

Mr. FLINT. The only statute which permits a person to enter a forest reserve——

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from California does not know he can find out by looking at the statute. There is a law of the United States which allows a man to go into a forest reserve and make a homestead.

Mr. FLINT. Without the land being set apart as agricultural land by the Forester?

Mr. TELLER. There is nothing said about that.

Mr. FLINT. I should like to have the Senator refer to the statute.

Mr. TELLER. It was intended by Congress that a man should determine for himself whether he could make a living on the land. He should not have to ask a subordinate of the Government. Now, under the regulations, he must first get consent before he can get in, and then if the officials do not think it is all right they can put him out.

Mr. FLINT. I am trying to get the Senator to refer me to the statute. The only statute——

Mr. TELLER. I do not think there is such a law.

Mr. FLINT. I think I had something to do with drawing the law.

Mr. TELLER. Then you ought to know what it is.

Mr. FLINT. As I understand the law, no land within a forest reserve is subject to homestead entry unless after an investigation by the Secretary of Agriculture he determines that the land is more valuable for agriculture than it is for forestry.

Mr. TELLER. That was not in the original law.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado whether it is not a fact that, notwithstanding the statute which he has mentioned, as well as the statute mentioned by the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT], each one of these proclamations for a forest reserve ends with warning all people not to make settlement within the reserve?

Mr. TELLER. In all the forest reserves you will find a card saying "Keep out of here; this is Government property." And that was so soon after the law passed it was ignored by the Department at once.

I want to say another thing about which we in the West complain. I did not intend to touch upon it at all, but I will. In 1873, for the first time, Congress provided for the appropriation of coal lands. Up to that time there never had been any difference between coal land and agricultural land, so far as the Government was concerned. In 1873 Congress provided that all land that was coal land should be selected and certified by the public officials as coal land, and then that nobody could take any of that land without paying not less than $10 an acre if it was within a certain distance of a railroad and not less than $20 an acre if it was nearer. We supposed that that meant $10 an acre. We knew that way back, years ago, there was a statute which provided that the public lands should be sold for not less than $1.25 an acre, and they had always been sold for $1.25, except as sometimes changed, for instance, when land grants were made, and so forth.

The Executive Department within the last two years has determined that that gave them the power to determine that they could ask just as much more for the coal lands as they wanted, and they have raised the price in my State from $10 an acre, in that district where under the law it should be $10, to $25, and where it should be $20 they have raised it to $50. Does anybody suppose that Congress ever intended to pass a law disposing of the public lands and leaving it to the Executive Department to say the lands should not be sold for less than $50 an acre? Why could they not just as well say a hundred dollars?

What we complain of in the West more than anything else, in connection with forest reserves, are these unfair things that are being done—bad administration of the law. We know, whether the Department does or not, that we are entitled to have the settlers come there and make a home, and we know that they are retarding the settlement and hindering the growth of these great Western States without advantage to anyone.

Mr. President, before I forget it I wish to call attention to a suggestion I nearly forgot. This is leaving the matter that we are speaking of.

When we were providing for the settlement of the great Northwest Territory in 1787 and 1788 and so on we made some provisions, and this is one which will be found in the First Statutes at Large, page 468:

And be it further enacted, That all navigable rivers within the territory to be disposed of by virtue of this act—

That meant all the five States—Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Minnesota, and Wisconsin—

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That all navigable rivers within the territory to be disposed of by virtue of this act shall be deemed to be and remain public highways, and that in all cases where the opposite banks of any stream not navigable shall belong to different persons the stream and the bed thereof shall become common to both.

Then again, later, they reiterated that, particularly as to Indiana, as to which the statement was made:

And be it further enacted, That all navigable rivers, creeks, and waters within the Indiana Territory shall be deemed to be and remain public highways.

I want to call attention to that. It has been the policy of this Government to keep the streams open wherever they were navigable and not attempt to control them where they were nonnavigable.

I have detained the Senate too long, and I have not said all I intended to say. I shall take up this matter again some day and add some things that I would have said to-day if time would permit, even at the risk of imposing on the patience of the Senate.

[Remarks of Mr. Justice Harlan at the banquet given in his honor by "The Kentuckians," in New York, on December 23, 1907, at the Hotel New Plaza.]

TOAST: "KENTUCKY: UNITED, WE STAND; DIVIDED, WE FALL."

Mr. President, fellow-Kentuckians, and guests, I count myself most happy to be surrounded on the present occasion by so many representative men of my native State. Every true man has a peculiar affection for the State in which he first saw the light of day and for the people among whom he passed his early life. But it has seemed to me—indeed, the fact has been often commented upon by others—that there is an unusual feeling of brotherhood among Kentuckians. I am far enough advanced in years, fellow-Kentuckians, to have known personally even the grandfathers of many members of this club. At a memorable period in the country's history I stood with the fathers of some of you under the flag of the Union, while the fathers of others of your number rallied under another flag—each man, whether under the one flag or the other, resolutely contending for what in his conscience he deemed to be right. But I rejoice to say that we who then were opposed are no longer estranged, but with hands clasped in friendship stand together under the same flag, now recognized throughout the world as the emblem of the great Republic. We may differ about political questions, but, apart from such differences, when Kentuckians meet, whether in their own country or in foreign lands, they warm toward each other because they are fellow-Kentuckians.

We are, however, something far more than Kentuckians. We are Americans. Trite as that phrase may sound, the older I grow the more priceless to me is the fact it expresses. We may well be proud of the State that gave birth to Abraham Lincoln, that sent Henry Clay and John J. Crittenden to the Senate, and nurtured such men as Zachary Taylor, Isaac Shelby, George Nicholas, the Breckenridges, the Marshalls, John Boyle, George Robertson, Samuel F. Miller, Joseph R. Underwood, Charles S. Morehead, James Guthrie, John L. Helm, Madison C. Johnson, Lazarus W. Powell, Archibald Dixon, Joshua F. Bell, Richard H. Menefee, and many others distinguished in every walk of life and too numerous to be mentioned on this occasion. But what would it mean to us to be Kentuckians if we were not also, or rather first of all, Americans, whose allegiance to the nation in matters of general concern is above allegiance to any State, just as the Constitution of the United States, with respect to all national objects, is above the constitution of any State.

The toast assigned to me suggests, Mr. President, many interesting thoughts about the early days of our Commonwealth and its relations to the National Government. Going back for a moment to the beginnings of Kentucky's history, we recall the interesting fact that very shortly after the close of the war for independence and after the acceptance of the Constitution by the requisite number of States a scheme was devised by foreign conspirators and domestic malcontents to detach the people of Kentucky from all connection with the original States, and thus make the Alleghenies the southwestern limit of the United States. This scheme found no favor with the indomitable pioneers who, surrounded by hostile Indian tribes in the wilds of an unsettled country, established a government with a constitution modeled after the Federal Constitution and more than a century ago applied to Congress for the admission of Kentucky into the Union as a State. Thus our fathers, resisting all appeals made to them to establish an independent State in the West, placed themselves by the side of their brethren of the older States, and caused to be inscribed upon Kentucky's coat of arms the suggestive and memorable words, "United, we stand; divided, we fall." There comes to my mind, Mr. President, a personal letter of the great Chief Justice, in which his use of that motto was so striking that it is peculiarly appropriate upon this occasion to quote his words. He said: "I am disposed to ascribe my devotion to the Union, and to a government competent to its preservation, at least as much to casual circumstances as to judgment. I had grown up at a time * * * when the maxim, 'United, we stand; divided, we fall,' was the maxim of every orthodox American, and I had imbibed these sentiments so thoroughly that they constituted a part of my being. I carried them with me into the Army, where I found myself associated with brave men from different States who were risking life and everything valuable in a common cause believed by all to be most precious, * * * and where I was confirmed in the habit of considering America as my country and Congress as my government." The habit of considering America as his country was the keynote of the life and work of the incomparable jurist whose profound and lucid judgments on behalf of the court of which he was the head built the broad highway upon which the nation has advanced to its present position of power and strength and unity.

There are some, Mr. President, who think they see dark clouds upon the horizon of our future, and express grave apprehension as to the stability of the Government ordained by the people of the United States and established by the Constitution. In a population of 90,000,000 of people we must expect to find some who indulge in gloomy forebodings as to the future of the country, and who seem to cultivate the habit of predicting disaster. Such persons are quite unhappy when the facts do not justify them in believing that everything is going wrong. But there is no occasion for alarm. The American people, knowing that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, will take care that no harm comes to the country. At all times since the organization of the Government they have shown themselves equal to every emergency, however sudden or startling, which involved the safety of our institutions. They may seem at times to tolerate false, visionary, and mischievous views, but in the end they will surely recognize the dangers of the situation, whatever they may be, and will do what prudence and patriotism require at their hands. Their final, deliberate judgment upon public questions is quite certain to be the best for all concerned.

What, let me ask, are some of the grounds upon which the pessimist of these days bases his fears for the safety of our institutions? He persuades himself to believe that the trend in public affairs is toward the centralization of all governmental power in the nation and the destruction of the rights of the States. If this were really the case, the duty of every American would be to resist such a tendency by every means in his power. A National Government for national affairs and State governments for State affairs is the foundation rock upon which our institutions rest. Any serious departure from that principle would bring disaster upon the American system of free government.

But the fact is not as the pessimist alleges it to be. The American people are more determined than at any time in their history to maintain both national and States rights, as those rights exist under the Union ordained by the Constitution. I say the people of the United States, for although the Constitution was accepted by the separate action of the people in their respective States, they moved together, in a collective capacity, as one people, in creating a nation for certain specified objects of general concern. They will not patiently consider any suggestion or scheme that involves a Union upon any other basis. They will maintain, at whatever cost and in all their integrity, both national and States rights.

The best friends of States rights, permit me to say, are not those who habitually denounce as illegal everything done by the General Government, but those who recognize the Government of the Union as possessing all the powers granted to it in the Constitution, either expressly or by necessary implication; for, without a General Government possession controlling power in relation to matters of national concern, the States would have no prestige before the world and would be in perpetual conflict with one another. With equal truth it may be said that the best friends of the Union are those who hold that the States possess all governmental powers not granted to the General Government and that are not inconsistent with their own constitutions or with the Constitution of the United States, or with a republican form of government. The people of the United States cherish, and will compel adherence to, the fundamental doctrine that the States are vital parts of the American system of government; and they will insist with no less determination upon the recognition of the just powers of the States—to be exerted always in subordination to the supreme law of the land—as essential to the preservation of our liberties. The Supreme Court of the United States has again and again declared, upon full consideration, that a close and firm Union is necessary for the happiness of the American people, and that "without the States in union there could be no such political body as the United States."

If, then, the matchless Government devised by the fathers and ordained by the people of the United States is to be preserved and handed down intact to posterity, national power and State power must go hand in hand in harmony with the Constitution. If those powers clash, the paramount authority of the Union within its prescribed sphere of action must prevail. Such is the express mandate of the Constitution, and such our common sense and experience tell us must always be the case, if liberty, regulated by law, is not to perish from our land. The nation being supreme within the sphere of its action as defined by the Constitution, its authority, when legally exerted, binds every State as well as all individuals within the territory of the United States. The glory of the Republic is that its affairs are regulated by a written Constitution—the fundamental law which distributes the powers of government among three separate, coequal, and coordinate departments, each exerting the authority, and only the authority, conferred upon it—and which Constitution, until amended in the mode prescribed by itself, must be deemed supreme over the Congress, over the President, over the courts, over the States, and over the people themselves.

The pessimist is misled by the declaration of some, happily few in number, who hold that, whatever the words of the Constitution, that instrument should be so construed as to make it mean what a majority of the people think, at a given time, it should mean. He is also misled by the theory advanced by those who hold that Congress must be permitted to exert any governmental power whatsoever, not expressly denied to it, if that body deems that its exercise will promote "the general welfare." But such theories of constitutional construction find no support in judicial decisions or in sound reason, least of all in the final judgments of that tribunal whose greatest function it is to declare the meaning and scope of the fundamental law. The National Government, it should ever be remembered, is one of limited, delegated powers, and is not a pure democracy, in which the will of a popular majority as expressed at the polls at a particular time becomes immediately the supreme law. It is a representative Republic, in which the will of the people is to be ascertained in a prescribed mode, and carried into effect only by appointed agents designated by the people themselves, in the manner indicated by law. It would be a calamity unspeakable if our institutions and the sacred rights of life, liberty, and property should be put at the mercy of a majority unrestrained by a written supreme law binding every department of government, even the people themselves. The pessimist—indeed all—may take courage in the fact that it has become a recognized rule of construction that the Constitution is to be taken as meaning what its words in their natural, obvious sense import, and, if the people desire it to mean something different, that instrument must be amended in the manner, and only in the manner, prescribed by itself. The dispute among statesmen has not been so much in reference to the general principles that should govern constitutional construction as to the application of those principles in determining the extent of the powers granted to the National Government. Early in the history of the nation some insisted upon a narrow, literal interpretation of the Constitution which, had it been approved, would have made the General Government a rope of sand, wholly inadequate to the great purposes for which it was established. But long ago that view was rejected by the Supreme Court of the United States, and its rejection has been universally approved.

There are some who would deny to Congress all powers that are not, in words, specified in the Constitution as belonging to the legislative branch of the Government. They would eliminate altogether from our jurisprudence the long-established doctrine that Congress may exercise powers that are plainly incidental to those expressly granted and not prohibited by the Constitution—that is, powers necessarily implied because embraced by those enumerated, and without which the Government would be unequal to the objects for which it was avowedly established and would become, to use the words of Marshall, "a splendid bauble." If the views of the latter class of constitutional critics should gain the approval of the American people, the country would be carried back to that period of its history when distinguished politicians gravely argued that the Supreme Court of the United States could not, without violating the Constitution, review the action of a State court which, by its final judgment, denied or destroyed rights plainly secured to the citizen by the supreme law of the land. Such critics are politically of kin to those who affirm that the courts may not declare a legislative enactment void, even when it is in plain violation of the Constitution.

It is true that national power, as now exerted, covers a wider field of action than it did in the early days of the Republic, but that does not prove, as the pessimist would have us think, that the Government has usurped powers that do not belong to it and has entered the domain reserved by and for the States. It proves only that the nation has from time to time, as the public interests demanded, brought into active operation powers which Congress had not previously chosen to exert. So vast has been the increase in our population and so diversified and extended have become our industrial interests, that occasions must necessarily arise from time to time for a more intimate connection between the Government of the Union and the commercial and other affairs of the people than perhaps the fathers ever dreamed of. Hence, if modern problems, as connected with the operations of government, are to be solved in the interest and for the benefit of the people, and if the nation is to keep abreast with advancing civilization, new fields of legislation must be occupied. While new legislation must always be closely scrutinized and care be taken that it is not inconsistent with the Constitution, we must not be so unwise or suspicious or timid as to reject a new policy or a new law simply because it is new or simply because it may cover areas not consciously within the mental vision or the thoughts of the framers of the Constitution. That wonderful instrument, the Supreme Court has said, was intended "to be adapted to the various crises of human affairs."

The wise men of the constitutional period deemed it unnecessary to go further than to specify the general objects to be accomplished by the National Government and to enumerate the powers that may be exerted by it, leaving to Congress—under its responsibility to the people and under its authority to pass such laws as were necessary and proper to carry into effect the powers enumerated and granted—to employ such means not expressly or impliedly prohibited as are appropriate to the particular object designed to be accomplished. The supreme judicial tribunal of the nation has spoken with distinctness upon this point. Its words, in a great case—all its members concurring—are: "The Constitution unavoidably dealt in general language. It did not suit the purposes of the people, in framing this great charter of our liberties, to provide for minute specifications of its powers or to declare the means by which those powers should be carried into execution. It was foreseen that this would be a perilous and difficult if not an impracticable task. The instrument was not intended to provide merely for the exigencies of a few years, but was to endure through a long lapse of ages, the events of which were locked up in the inscrutable purposes of Providence. It could not be foreseen what new changes and modifications of power might be indispensable to effectuate the general objects of the charter; and restrictions and specifications which at the present might seem salutary might in the end prove the overthrow of the system itself. Hence its powers are expressed in general terms, leaving to the Legislature, from time to time, to adopt its own means to effectuate legitimate objects and to mold and model the exercise of its powers as its own wisdom and the public interests should require." Thus, Mr. President, was the nation armed with authority to meet new conditions that might arise and which permitted or required governmental action. Is a proposed new law embraced by any general power granted? Has it any reasonable connection with the specified objects, or any of them, to which, under the Constitution, the power of the nation extends? If these questions be answered in the affirmative, then it will only remain for the lawmaking department of the Government to determine whether the proposed law will be conducive to the public welfare. And that determination will not be one of law, but simply one of policy. Granted the power to legislate in reference to a particular matter, Congress can employ any means, not forbidden nor inconsistent with the Constitution, that may be germane to the end proposed to be accomplished.

Therefore let the country gather up all the strength that comes from the patriotism and loyalty of the American people and go forward in its marvelous career, holding to the confident belief, justified by the words of the Constitution and by judicial decisions, that the checks in our governmental system will suffice in the future, as they have sufficed in the past, to guard our institutions against insidious attacks upon the fundamental principles of free government or against the exercise of arbitrary or usurped power. Keeping within the scope and broad lines of the Constitution, we may walk safely and without fear. We need not hesitate to build on the foundations laid by the forefathers. Those foundations are broad and deep, and so long as new measures and policies are tested by the plumb line of the Constitution and we keep well within its wise limitations, we may safely rear whatever superstructure our welfare and greatness as a nation may require.

Let us, then, move on in the "old paths, where is the good way" marked out by the fathers. Let us not give our approval to any interpretation of the Constitution that will either cripple the nation's authority or prostrate the nation at the feet of the States, or that will deprive the States of their just powers. Let us hold fast to the broad and liberal, and yet safe, rules of constitutional construction approved by the fathers and established by judicial decisions. In so doing we will sustain our dual system, under which the Government of the Union is forbidden to exercise any power not granted to it expressly or by necessary implication, while the States will not be hindered or fettered in the exercise of powers that have not been surrendered by them to the Union and are not inconsistent with the Constitution.

Mr. President, I owe an apology for saying this much. There are other speakers to follow, whom I know you are eager to hear. But I can not take my seat without thanking the Kentuckians now residing in this imperial city for the high honor they have done me on the occasion of this magnificent banquet. The memory of your cordial greeting will abide with me to my life's end and will be a sweet heritage for my children. During all the years of a life now quite extended—much of which has been passed in the nation's service, away from my native State—there has never been a moment when I did not have an abiding affection for the great-hearted, high-minded, chivalrous people of my Kentucky home, which has been the home of my people since the days before the Revolution. Our old Commonwealth, Mr. President, is indeed a goodly land, "a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths that spring out of valleys and hills," a land wherein "thou shalt eat bread without scarceness" and "shalt not lack anything in it." And yet, well-nigh inexhaustible as are its natural resources, Kentucky's richest possession is in its people. The brave men who first settled the State and made its Constitution and laws and guided its affairs during the formative years of its earlier history were worthy scions of a sturdy stock. They were great lovers of liberty and were devoted to the Union. And many of their sons in other States have shed honor upon this Commonwealth and upon the country.

In closing, Mr. President, I must again express my deep satisfaction in the thought that upon all questions affecting the existence of the Union the Kentuckians of 1907 are as thoroughly united as were their fathers when, in 1792, our Commonwealth became, to use the words of Congress, "a new and entire member of the United States of America." Her people, we are glad to know, have outgrown the feelings of distrust and animosity that divided them in the perilous times of 1861, and their faces are now turned steadily and hopefully to the future, determined that Kentucky shall play her full part in the building up of our beloved country in all that makes for true national greatness.

And if, to-night, it were possible for me to send a message to the young men of my native State—of whatever political parties they are members—it would be this: Forget the things that are behind save only the noble deeds of the mighty dead who gave Kentucky its large place in the early history of the nation. Quench whatever remains, in both parties, of the baleful fires of narrow partisanship and mere faction. Crush the monster of lawlessness in whatever way its evil deeds are manifested. Maintain the rights of all. While remaining loyal to whatever may be your various political affiliations, strive after large, generous, and broad policies and lift the State steadily toward higher levels. Work shoulder to shoulder in the effort to build up our grand old Commonwealth in all things that will contribute to its moral, intellectual, and material welfare. Thus you will help most effectively in giving Kentucky a worthy place among those States that shall lead the nation in its noble mission of commending to the world the priceless blessings of institutions that rest upon the consent of the governed and recognize the inherent rights of man as man.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ACCOUNTS OF WILLIAM R. LITTLE.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, some time since the bill (S. 819) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to examine and adjust the accounts of William R. Little, or his heirs, with the Sac and Fox Indians was passed by the Senate. The day following the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. I desire now to make the point that as the Senator from Nebraska did not vote for the passage of the bill he was not competent to make the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that there was no yea-and-nay vote taken upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. STONE. There was not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that in the absence of such a vote a Senator, in making a motion to reconsider, is presumed to be within the rules. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. STONE. Then I suppose a motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table will be in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be in order.

Mr. STONE. I make that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri moves to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill stands passed.

SNAKE RIVER DAM, WASHINGTON.

Mr. PILES. I should like to proceed with the consideration of House bill 7618.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that the bill be referred back to the Committee on Commerce, from which it was reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho what object he has?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ankeny	Clay	Gary	Scott
Bacon	Crane	Heyburn	Simmons
Bankhead	Culberson	Hopkins	Stephenson
Borah	Cullom	Kean	Stewart
Brandegee	Curtis	Knox	Stone
Briggs	Dick	Lodge	Sutherland
Brown	Dillingham	McCreary	Taliaferro
Bulkeley	Dolliver	McEnery	Teller
Burkett	du Pont	Nelson	Warner
Burnham	Elkins	Nixon	Warren
Burrows	Flint	Overman	Wetmore
Carter	Foraker	Perkins
Clapp	Foster	Piles
Clark, Wyo.	Frye	Richardson

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Idaho moves that the pending bill be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is it in order to state the reason for the motion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if I can have the attention of the members of the Senate I know that I can give a good reason for the position which I have taken in regard to this bill. I know that I can not reach them unless they are present, and it was for that reason that I asked their presence on this occasion. It is one of more than passing importance.

The Government of the United States is asked to enter upon a new departure and to do something that it has not done before. It is asked to permit private individuals to place a dam in a navigable river. If any Senator here can point to an instance where the Government or Congress has taken action of that kind heretofore I would be glad to have my attention called to it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HEYBURN. With pleasure.

Mr. DOLLIVER. At the last session of Congress authority was given to a private corporation to put a dam across the Mississippi River at Keokuk, which they are now engaged in building, the act reserving to the Government the right to furnish specifications for a lock around the dam to facilitate navigation.

Mr. HEYBURN. Was that the act of June 21, 1906?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I presume it was.

Mr. HEYBURN. At that time Congress started out to do a wrong. The wrong has not yet been consummated, and I am here to call attention to the fact in time to prevent this class of bad legislation. I have in my hand a copy of the act of June 21, 1906, by which Congress in an hour of forgetfulness undertook to delegate its powers to the administrative branch of the Government in order that we might be saved some trouble and time in considering measures in this body and another.

Mr. President, I am not advised so as to be able to say what actuated or moved the committee in reporting this bill.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I can not speak for the committee by authority. I will only say to the Senator from Idaho that I have been a member of the Committee on Commerce ever since I became a member of this body, and we have during that time at every session of Congress reported numerous bills for the construction of dams, and they have been passed. I have had at least a dozen bills of that kind passed, and they have become laws, in reference to the upper Mississippi River; and I think the Senators on the other side of the Chamber will bear witness to the fact that at nearly every session of Congress we have passed bills for the construction of dams across navigable rivers in the Southern States. It is a common thing, and I have never heard the contention made against any of those bills that has been made against this measure.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have given some attention to the class of legislation that Congress has indulged in upon this question, and if there has been any bill passed by Congress authorizing the construction of a dam in a navigable river, such as is proposed by the pending bill, my attention has not been called to it.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I should like to say for the benefit of the Senator that the pending bill is in the exact form of all other bills passed on this subject. Practically every such bill I have ever reported out of the committee has been in this form.

Mr. HEYBURN. The form or language of the bill is not the question; I am speaking of the purposes and the circumstances represented by the bill. It is right and proper under some circumstances for the Government to either build dams in rivers or to permit it to be done under proper regulations by the Government. There is nothing in the pending bill that brings it within the class of bills to which the Senators have referred.

Yesterday, in discussing this question, I presented to the Senate, in a measure, the facts with reference to the proposed construction of this dam. I read, and it is in the RECORD, the articles of incorporation, stating the purposes for which the dam is proposed to be constructed. I read a statement of the financial condition of this corporation and the purposes for which the corporation was formed, advising the Senate of the scope and the power and the effect of this legislation.

I say again that unless I have overlooked some legislation Congress has not passed any act authorizing the construction of a dam in any navigable river for the purposes and under the conditions that surround this proposed legislation; and it will be a day of danger to the navigation of rivers and to the people and the establishment of a bad principle when Congress does take such action.

The Snake River is a great river, rising up in the Yellowstone Park and flowing down through the State of Idaho and through the State of Washington and through the State of Oregon into the Pacific Ocean. It is one of the most magnificent rivers on the American continent. Lewiston is at the head of navigation upon the river. It is on the extreme western boundary line of the State of Idaho. It has been the boast of the State of Idaho that it was a seaboard State by virtue of the fact of navigation upon the river from Lewiston to the sea.

Now it is proposed to allow this private enterprise, with $25,000 capital behind it, to come in here and obtain the consent of Congress that it may enter upon the construction of a dam for the purpose of making power to sell and creating water for the irrigation of land that they do not own, but hope to own.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. I wish to ask a question. I want to know if it is proposed to construct this dam between Lewiston and the sea?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. Now, it will make no difference to me or to the people of Idaho whether the dam is consiructed down at the mouth of the river, at Astoria, or farther up, at the mouth of the Willamette, or at any other intermediate point. It would be as detrimental to the State of Idaho were it constructed anywhere below the head of navigation.

The river has been navigated since 1861. The boat that plied upon the river was named Idaho before the Territory was named Idaho. The first seal of the Territory of Idaho bears upon it the impress of the steamboat coming up the Snake River to Lewiston, which was then the first settlement within what is now Idaho. With all the romance which has been thrown around the name of Idaho, the fact is that it took its name from the steamboat and the steamboat brought the name there from Colorado. Idaho Springs in Colorado were named before Idaho Territory; and the name in Indian is one of exclamation, as at the sunrise, Idaho! That is the name, and Idaho stands there at the head of the navigation of the Snake River, demanding that she shall have always an open river to the sea.

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho what people in Idaho demand that the dam shall not be constructed. I have here a report in writing from the engineer, whom the Senator from Idaho knows to be a man of ability and character, and whom the board of trade of the city of Lewiston, the largest city in Idaho, located on the Snake River, employed to go and examine the question of the construction of the dam. This man came back and reported to the board of trade of the city of Lewiston that the construction of the dam would be a benefit to the city of Lewiston, and that it would be a benefit to the navigation of the river. Thereupon the board of trade of the city of Lewiston, situated upon the banks of the Snake River, approved the dam and asked me to get the bill through. Those are the facts.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, every member of this body knows something of the method and of the force and effect of petitions and telegrams in support of or against a measure. If all the names the Senator has from the State of Idaho in favor of his bill were here on the desk, they could be written on the palm of my hand.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will pardon me, I have had petitions and telegrams and letters both ways. Captain Gray, one of the oldest citizens of Lewiston, and a man who has navigated that river since 1862 or 1863 at intervals (he was away for a few years) is interested in this enterprise, and he writes me a personal letter asking me to waive my objections to it on the part of the State of Idaho and to give it my support. He tells me of what great advantage it would be to the local community in which they hope to irrigate certain lands and build up the town of Pasco and the surrounding country. I would do almost anything for Captain Gray that I would for any man. He is and for a long time has been my personal friend. I went down this river with him. I navigated it from Lewiston to Celilo Falls, where this Government is expending about $9,000,000 for the purpose of keeping this river open to the sea, and when we went down his heart was aflame with joy, because he found the old river just as it had been when he had navigated it twenty-five years before that time.

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask the Senator——

Mr. HEYBURN. And his boast was, in the speech which he made, that it meant an open river from Lewiston to the sea as soon as the Celilo Falls Canal was finished; and that ought to be finished this coming year. We have a continuous appropriation for it.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do.

Mr. PILES. I will ask the Senator from Idaho if Captain Gray, who is one of the oldest navigators in that country, does not point out five different ways in which this would benefit the navigation of the Snake River?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, Captain Gray, who, as I say, is a splendid navigator, a good man and a good citizen, and whose intentions are of the best, can not see quite as far as some men can into the effect of enacting a law which establishes the right of a private corporation to build a dam or to undertake or enter upon the building of a dam, and to distinguish between the benefits that would come from such a dam existing there, whether built by the Government or by private enterprise. He does not realize that this corporation, which is proposing to build it and which is here asking our consent that they may do so, is one of those temporary corporations limited by the terms of its charter in years, and limited in capital, that would have to undertake the permanent control after it had constructed its dam, which will cost, in my judgment, not less than $2,000,000 to construct.

After they have constructed it they will have to maintain it—not for ten years, not for twenty years, not for fifty years, but forever. We are legislating here for the rights not only of the people who have signed telegrams and petitions to the Senator from the State of Washington, but we are legislating here for the people who will come after them and who will want an open river from Lewiston to the sea.

We heard nothing of this agitation until the railroad paralleled the river. The railroad does not want an open river to the sea, because there is a railroad from Lewiston to the sea upon the banks of this river. Now, they have to compete in the traffic that goes from that country to-day to the markets of the world with these steamboats, and as was stated yesterday by the Senator from Colorado, one of those boats that carry down the river in a single season several hundred thousand tons of wheat. We produce within the drainage of the water that is behind this navigation, which is proposed to be interfered with, more than 30,000,000 bushels of wheat; we send a very large proportion of that wheat to foreign markets, and it goes upon vessels now at the city of Portland. It is there loaded for foreign shipment.

Mr. PILES. Now, I should like to ask the Senator, if he will permit me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho if both sides of the Snake River are not paralleled by railroads, and have not been so paralleled for years? They were the earliest roads in that country. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think the engineer employed by the city of Lewiston and the business men of Lewiston, who want an open river to the sea, are just as capable, after a personal examination of this project—which, by the way, is 300 miles from the State of Idaho and wholly within the State of Washington, in the county of my colleague [Mr. ANKENY] and about 5 miles above the mouth of this river—I ask if he does not think that those people, who are looking out for an open river for Idaho and for the city of Lewiston, situated on this river, are not just as well capable of judging of the navigability and of the improvement of the navigability of that river by this dam as he himself is?

These men made a personal examination of the river. The business men, who are interested in maintaining their great jobbing houses in Lewiston and having an open river to the sea, did at first oppose this bill, but after they investigated, by their engineer and by the man who was familiar with navigation on that stream, they withdrew their objection and asked the Senator from Idaho himself to support the bill, and they have asked his colleague to support it. So far as I am concerned I have not found a man in Idaho who does oppose this bill.

I would like to ask the Senator's attention to the fact, as I have said, that this is purely a Washington project, located 300 miles from Idaho in the State of Washington, for development by Washington people, to reclaim from one hundred to one hundred and fifty thousand acres of arid land of the State of Washington in order to furnish homes to the people of that State.

I submit, Mr. President, that if I should oppose the construction of a dam on the Columbia River down in the State of Oregon, although that river flows through the State of Washington, I would not feel that I was doing justice to the people of the State of Oregon, particularly if the Government engineer had stated that it would improve the navigation of the river.

As I read to the Senate yesterday, the Chief Engineer of this Government, by a written report and a written letter to me, stated that the reason he approved of the passage of this bill in the House of Representatives was because the construction of this dam, as asked for by these people, would improve the navigation of that river. One engineer reports here that it would save the Government a half million dollars if these people put this dam in the river, set back that water from 18 to 20 miles over these dangerous shoals, and put in at their own expense a canal around these dangerous shoals. I doubt if the Senator can find anybody in his State who opposes this bill, except himself, or anybody in that section of the country who does not feel that it will be a benefit to this river and a benefit to the people of Oregon and of Washington and of Idaho.

Even the Board of Trade of the city of Portland has, I am informed, approved and indorsed this plan. The Board of Trade of the city of Wallula, in the county in which this project is being constructed, wherein my collague resides, approved this bill, and every town in all that section of country bordering upon this river has declared its approval of this project. It is a plain, simple proposition like hundreds that have passed through this Senate. Why the Senator from Idaho should call for an executive session and ask for a roll call from time to time to oppose this little bill I can not understand.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the enthusiastic interruption of the Senator from Washington has added no new light to the consideration of this question. I have in my hand here resolutions of the Board of Trade of Wallula, which is in the Senator's State. Yesterday I stated that I preferred not to call attention to the fact that his own constituency were opposed to this project; but I have here protests sent to the other House of Congress and sent to the Senate, against allowing a private enterprise to build a dam in this river, and setting forth that, in the judgment of the signers, some of these rapids might be very much improved if the Government would build dams and maintain them, so as to insure that perpetual maintenance which is necessary to the contemplated future use of this river.

But I am not here to defend myself because, forsooth, some citizens of Idaho, who are friends of the promoters of this enterprise, are kind enough to support them. I do not have to count and give a list of the names of those in the State that I represent upon this floor who support me in my views. I am here to represent the best interests of the State from the standpoint as I see it. That is the position of a Senator. If every Senator must come here with a petition signed by a majority of his constituents upon a measure of this kind in order to justify himself before this body, it would be a new departure in legislation. I take the responsibility. I take it the Senator from Washington will vote in favor of his bill, but I trust the majority of this Senate will not enter upon this kind of a project and shut the city of Lewiston off from the benefits of an open-river navigation.

I propose to ask Congress to give us an appropriation that will be sufficient to make this river navigable in spite of all the rapids at any stage of water. It is navigable now throughout the greater portion of the year. I think steamboats some years tie up as much as two or three weeks. In exceptional years it may be a little more than that, and sometimes not at all.

I have lived practically along this river for twenty-five years, and I know something of it. I see that the Senator from the city of Wallawalla, in the State of Washington, who once lived in the city of Lewiston, Idaho, is about to give us the benefit of his recollection; but it can add nothing to the fact that the interruption by reason of low water is just such interruption as we have on all the great rivers of the United States.

Mr. ANKENY. May I interrupt the Senator a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. ANKENY. May I call the Senator's attention to the fact that this river, even below its mouth, is already dammed, so that it is impossible to pass through it 50 miles below without passing through locks?

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Senator, when he says that the river is dammed, refers to nature's handiwork.

Mr. ANKENY. No; I refer to the Celilo Dam.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Celilo Dam is to be overcome by the Celilo Canal.

Mr. ANKENY. That is just what we are trying to do now.

Mr. HEYBURN. The dam there is merely a temporary expedient. Now, I will tell something about the Celilo proposition, because I have been there and I know something about it. I had a conference in this city a few days since with the chairman of the committee that promoted the Celilo Falls Canal.

Mr. ANKENY. But this bill proposes no innovation, no experiment. The same thing has already been done twice below us. It has been done for years.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, there is no private dam on Snake River or the Columbia River where it is navigable. The Government of the United States spent many million dollars in building the locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River. They are finished and in use. I have passed through them both ways in steamboats. Then at the remaining obstacle of Celilo Falls the Government has made an ample appropriation for the purpose of building a canal 9 miles in length around the falls in the Columbia River at Celilo. I have been there on more than one occasion to investigate it, and I would say, in my judgment, that it ought to be finished next year.

Mr. ANKENY. But that is in the State of Oregon.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now they are talking about the State of Oregon and the State of Washington. That river belongs to no State so far as the purposes of navigation are concerned.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I hope the Senator from Idaho will permit the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. ANKENY] to make the statement he manifestly desires to make.

Mr. HEYBURN. Would the Senator from Montana not be willing to leave the discretion and exercise of courtesy in that matter to the senior Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I did not rise as a critic of the senior Senator from the State of Idaho. I thought an admonition would probably be accepted by him in good grace.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am not much in the habit of taking admonitions with good grace. I have passed the period of admonitions. I will yield at all times to any interruption from any Senator, but I do claim the right to finish a sentence when I have entered upon it and to exercise my judgment; and I think my judgment will be marked with as much courtesy as that of any member of this body.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I withdraw the word "admonition" and substitute the word "suggest." I merely observed that the senior Senator from Washington desired to make a statement or to propound an interrogatory to the Senator from Idaho. The Senator from Idaho manifestly did not become apprised of the fact, and so I merely made the suggestion, which I thought it was eminently proper to make.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, Mr. President, I am in a position that embarrasses me somewhat, in that I find my colleague [Mr. BORAH], who lives in the southern end of Idaho, is not in entire harmony with my position in regard to this matter. For many years I have had a continual contest, both before I was in public life and always since, to maintain those waterways against the greed of speculation. I am continually importuned to withdraw my objection to action to declare the Clearwater River, or, rather, as they express it, to condemn the Clearwater River as a navigable stream. I am importuned by petitions and letters and telegrams in the interest of speculative enterprises to withdraw my objection to building dams in the Snake River.

I am advised that there are five other applications only awaiting the vote on this bill to see whether they can come here and ask us to allow them to put dams in the Snake River for private enterprise, for private gain. That river belongs to all the people, not only of the city of Lewiston and of the State of Idaho, but of the United States. It is a waterway that I hope within a very limited number of years will be in a condition to carry a battle ship to the city of Lewiston.

I do not believe that the members of this body realize what that great Columbia River is. It is the Columbia River up to the city of Pasco, 5 miles below where they propose to build this dam, and from that point up it is the Snake River. The Columbia River forks at Pasco, or close by.

Mr. ANKENY. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment right there?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. ANKENY. I will say that Pasco is way above the junction between the Snake River and the Columbia River, and the Snake River has two bridges over it there. The dam proposed by this bill will make the river no less open to the sea. There are other impediments below us.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator says Pasco is away above the junction. You can see both rivers from it.

Mr. ANKENY. I say Pasco is above the mouth of the Snake River.

Mr. HEYBURN. You can see Pasco from where the rivers run. They run practically down to it. I crossed there before the Northern Pacific Railroad did. I passed there on a ferryboat at the mouth of the Snake River. I know how far it is. It was not very far to walk to Pasco. So that it is merely drawing a fine line when you state that they are far apart. They are not on the identical same ground; but I crossed that river at that point in 1884, and that is a good while ago now.

Mr. ANKENY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. ANKENY. I should like to set the Senator right. Pasco, I think, is 8 or 10 miles above the mouth of this river. That has nothing in the world, however, to do with this proposition. We are not interfering with the Columbia River at all. This bill merely allows the building of a little dam in the Snake River.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, to be diverted to a consideration of that question would be a waste of time, because it would make no difference to Idaho if it were proposed to build this dam a thousand miles below. Anything that stands between the State of Idaho and the sea is an interruption to Idaho's open-river navigation to the sea. There has been the most persistent pressure at all times to close up those rivers. Anything that would detract from their availability as channels of trade and arteries of commerce has been urged and urged and urged, and I say, without claiming any special advantage to myself, that I have stood there for many, many years resisting every encroachment of that kind, and I propose to stand here as long as the Senate and the Senate's rules will permit me to prevent this encroachment upon the rights of those people.

We must look beyond our own generation in these matters. Had this question come up thirty years ago or forty years ago we would have been met with the statement, "Why, what difference does it make? There is no one living in that country; there are no settlements there." And yet to-day we have living around this basin, through which this water flows, 60,000 people. But others than they are interested in this question. The whole State is interested in it, I care not whether upon its watershed or not; and I am in earnest about it. If I have to go back to the State of Idaho and confess that the people there are no longer at the head of open navigation to the sea I would feel that for some cause I had been unable or had been defeated in my effort truly and fairly to represent the State of Idaho.

I say, without the intention of being personal, that I would stake my seat in this body to prevent this wrong from being done to that State; and those who are opposing me can carry that word back to this "overwhelming sentiment" that they say is in favor of it. You can take the challenge to them. I say it only that you may know how earnest I am to protect Idaho and Idaho's interests. What Senator here would stand idly by and see a navigable river, the only one that connected his State with the open ocean and with the trade of the world, closed up by a private enterprise, by the construction of a dam, with locks, that would be maintained by private enterprise, with no Government or governmental assurance or security behind it? What Senator would stand here and see Congress, without his opposition and his resistance, vote to close up to any extent—even to the extent of placing a fragment of timber in it—a river that would detract from its value as an artery of trade, and then go back to his people and say, "It was a question of good fellowship; I wanted to please this neighbor or that." You can not settle these questions with the smile of good fellowship. It means something to a State just starting up in the strength of its new birth and growth like the State of Idaho, to be cut off and made an interior State when we have been spending millions of dollars to make it a seaboard State.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that to go down from Idaho to the open sea, of which he speaks, he has to go through the Celilo Canal and also through the locks at the Cascades? The proposition of the people of whom I have spoken here to-day is simply to put in a dam, under the supervision and direction of the Government, and to put a canal around that dam to overcome the riffles in the nonnavigable part of the Snake River for about 18 miles in certain seasons of the year. That canal being conveyed, as it must be under the law, to the Government of the United States, will enable the people of Lewiston to get to the open sea through that canal, around the proposed dam, exactly as they must get to the open sea by going through the Celilo Canal and the Cascade locks. I will ask the Senator if it is not exactly the same proposition? They can not get to any open sea without going through the canals I have mentioned. This proposition will, according to the Government engineer's report, improve the navigation of the river and set back that current, raising the water up so as to relieve the vessels of the riffles which they can not now navigate with safety, and can only navigate in certain seasons of the year. This project will enable them to navigate that part of the river covered with rapids at all seasons of the year, and the people of Lewiston, realizing that, have approved this bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the reiterated statement that the people of Lewiston have approved this bill almost tempts me to the point of indiscreetness in speaking of the people who approve of this bill. But I will not do it. They are fellow-citizens of mine, and they belong to the State, but the State does not belong to them. The Celilo Falls improvement has the Government of the United States behind it with an expenditure, I think, of over $9,000,000. The Cascade locks, the only other obstacle, have been removed and the Government stands behind that project as a pledge for its perpetual maintenance. But here we have a puny enterprise with $25,000 capital on paper——

Mr. PILES. Does the Senator think that is a fair statement?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I am going to make it fair, because I have their own statement here, if the Senator will give me an opportunity to read it.

Mr. PILES. Their own statement shows that they have property of the value of $300,000 over and above their debts.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I intend to know very soon what the tax collector and assessor place the value of their property at in that county. I shall probably know before we close the discussion of the question.

Mr. PILES. I do not care if he puts it at $35.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is it $15,000?

Mr. PILES. I do not know whether it is $15, and I do not care, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. HEYBURN. It might make some difference probably to the Senate.

Mr. PILES. On that point I will simply say that this corporation was organized and is controlled by good men. The Senator will not deny that. They, as I understand, figure that this proposition will cost them a million and a half dollars. They do not expect with a capital stock of $25,000 to build this dam and canal. They propose to increase their capital stock when they find they can go on with this work, and they have men behind it, as they tell me, who will finance the proposition.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, just a moment, if the Senator will permit me. The Senator and I were together when I asked the question of the representative of this corporation, who, I believe, was its president, in one of the rooms adjoining this Chamber, as to what and who was behind it. He said that was a question that he did not feel at liberty to enter upon. So that this applicant, this suppliant is somewhere back of these promises, but we are not permitted to know who he is.

Mr. PILES. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. The gentleman to whom the Senator refers stated that he did not care to divulge the names of the business men who would put their money into this proposition, but all of those men are well known in the State of Washington. They are recommended by stable men in the State of Washington as men of character. I do not know some of them, but I do know that the men in Kennewick and in Pasco and other places who have urged me to support this bill vouch for the character and ability of these men; otherwise I would not be here asking Congress to give them the privilege which they seek. If the Senator has any objection as to the character and ability of these men, he can readily find out about them in the State of Washington, where they live.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would object to this proposition regardless of the responsibility of the individuals, because I am objecting to this, not on personal grounds, but because of the principle that it involves, and because of the effects that would flow from it. I should like to know whether either of the Senators from the State of Washington will undertake to say that this corporation on the tax rolls anywhere pays taxes on $15,000 worth of property?

Mr. PILES. I can not say anything about that. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, Mr. President, we are asked here to consider the proposition of granting to this private enterprise the right to take possession of this great waterway—which I think I would not be exaggerating should I say that it is as broad as the Potomac in front of this city—to take possession of it and undertake to construct a dam in it. What they want is to take possession of it for the purpose of a financial exploitation that will enable them to take this privilege which Congress gives, and then sell it to someone else. I said to them—and I have copies of all my letters here—"Let us see the plans and specifications upon which you propose to base this work; let us see your estimated cost of construction; let us see your estimate for the cost of maintaining it after it is constructed. Let Congress know whether they are asked to grant a privilege to a myth or whether there is behind it that substantial character which should be behind any public enterprise. Then," I said, "there will be nothing left to consider but the question of the law and what we may and should do under the law, with fixed and determined conditions to deal with." I have not received them, but I have received a statement that no plans, specifications, estimates, or drawings have ever been prepared. I have the statement of General Mackenzie, who is the Chief of Engineers, saying over his own signature:

So far as the records show no plans and specifications for the purpose mentioned within have been submitted to this office by the Benton Water Company.

That is the party seeking this right at the hands of Congress.

Mr. President, I believe, notwithstanding the fact that Congress has delegated to the Engineer Corps of the War Department the supervisory right to pass upon these plans and specifications, that Congress in granting the right to any applicant should have as accurate information as would be required by the Department. Are we to sit here and pass laws giving rights for the exploitation of chimerical or imaginary enterprises to parties who can not carry them into effect, that they may go into the market and seek buyers or backers for them? I take it not.

I ask that this bill shall go back to the committee which reported it, without any reflection upon the watchful care of that committee. I ask that it may go there in order that these facts may be determined by that committee and investigated and passed upon and the facts may come in here in the shape of a report accompanying the bill. Is there anything unreasonable about that? Is there any such haste that we should grant this right to this financial uncertainty at this time and at this hour that you should refuse to send it back to the committee with, I hope, some light upon the whole question, that they may consider the propriety of recommending the passage of a bill of this kind with a full knowledge of the facts.

Mr. President, I ask a vote upon the motion I have made, that the bill be referred back to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion made by the Senator from Idaho.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. FRYE. The junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] yesterday offered an amendment to the bill. I should like to have it reported, if it is at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment presented by the junior Senator from Idaho.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of section 1:

Provided, That said Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, shall construct, operate, and maintain locks, perpetual and free of charge or toll to navigation and navigators, and shall so use said stream as not in any manner to obstruct, embarrass, or retard navigation.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, has the amendment been agreed to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. The amendment was not objected to. There is no objection to it. The bill is no better with the amendment than it was without it. The act of 1906 attached that amendment to the bill, for whatever it is worth. The act of 1906 and the other provisions of general law require that they shall do exactly what the amendment of the junior Senator from Idaho says they shall do. So it adds nothing to the bill one way or the other.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the junior Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in view of the suggestion which has just been made, I desire to say a word with reference to the position I occupy in regard to this bill.

As I said yesterday, it was not my intention when the bill came up for consideration to make any remarks in regard to it, because I considered it largely and almost exclusively a matter for the Senators from Washington to take care of. But there was one matter which was of some concern to the people of the State which I have the honor in part to represent, and that was the question of the navigation or navigability of the stream. I was aware of the fact that the Secretary of War had supervisory power over the navigation of our streams. I had learned that in my experience in reference to the streams in Idaho, because we have been building dams under the supervisory power of the Secretary of War upon all of the navigable streams in the State of Idaho since I have been there, and, of course, we were perfectly familiar with that proposition.

But when this matter came up for consideration, I said to the Senators from Washington that I desired a more specific arrangement with reference to this particular matter; that there was some question about the general law being sufficient and efficient to cover that proposition; and I therefore submitted this amendment to the Senators from Washington, and they agreed to it and were satisfied with it. That satisfying me fully as to the proposition of there being no impediment to navigation, I agreed with them to support the bill, and for that reason I am doing so and propose to continue to do so.

There is no controversy here between my colleague and myself with reference to the desire to keep open the Snake River as a stream for navigable purposes. I maintain that that is protected in this instance both by the general law, which is executed under the supervisory power of the Secretary of War, and by the specific arrangement which is included in and attached to this bill. It can not be successfully said, in view of the general law and of this amendment, that any dam to be erected in Snake River will in any way retard, impede, or embarrass navigation, and that is the only thing with which the people of the State of Idaho are concerned.

I looked at it that if the people of the State of Washington desire to reclaim a hundred and fifty thousand acres of land and build homes upon those lands, so long as the State of Idaho is not affected in any way, shape, or form, it is the part of good legislation here, so far as I am concerned, to vote to aid the people of the State of Washington in their desire to do that specific thing. I believe that the amendment does protect the situation, and therefore I support the bill.

It is said that the President proposes to veto such a measure; that he does not propose that such measures shall again become the law. If it is the desire of the Senate to establish a new policy, or if it is the desire of the President to establish a new policy in regard to those matters, I am very much in favor of this policy, but I am here carrying out a policy as old as the Government itself, a policy which has been repeated time and again in the Senate Chamber within the last ten years. The Snake River has in it, to my personal knowledge, three private dams, which were built by private individuals, and that portion of the river is navigable. It is no new thing to the State of Idaho. We are interested in reclaiming that entire country, and I am willing for one to assist all who wish to do so.

Mr. HEYBURN. In section 1 of the act of June 21, 1906, which is existing law, it is provided—

That in approving said plans—

That is, plans for the erection of this class of work—and location such conditions and stipulations may be imposed as the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War may deem necessary to protect the present and future interests of the United States, which may include the condition that such persons shall construct, maintain, and operate, without expense to the United States, in connection with said dam and appurtenant works, a lock or locks, booms, sluices, or any other structures which the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers at any time may deem necessary in the interest of navigation, in accordance with such plans as they may approve, and also that whenever Congress shall authorize the construction of a lock, or other structures for navigation purposes, in connection with such dam, the person owning such dam shall convey to the United States, free of cost, title to such land as may be required for such constructions and approaches, and shall grant to the United States a free use of water power for building and operating such constructions.

That is all the amendment does. That was already the law, and they would have been required to do those things under existing law.

Mr. President, so far as the irrigation question is concerned, in order that we may see the scope and intent of this corporation to take possession of this river, I will ask you to consider this provision in the articles of incorporation:

The objects for which this corporation is formed are as follows:

"1. To own, construct, operate, and maintain a water-power plant for electrical, manufacturing, irrigating, and other purposes."

They were incorporated on the 21st of April, 1905, three years ago.

2. To build, own, operate, and maintain irrigation canals and ditches; acquire and make appropriations of water; sell water rights, and charge and receive rentals and tolls for supplying water for irrigation and domestic purposes.

3. To develop the water power of the Yakima River, in township 9, range 28 east, Willamette meridian, for the purposes of generating electricity for use for light and power; to take and receive from any public or private corporation, franchises and privileges; to generate and transmit electric power to other points in the State of Washington, and to sell the same.

4. To borrow money, execute its promissory note therefor, etc.

The last provision is probably the most important, and the one that will be most frequently appealed to.

I yield to no man, in or out of Congress, in my devotion to the irrigation system and to the reclamation of the arid lands of the United States. I have been connected with it and interested in it and speaking and writing for it for a great many years. I have, from the beginning, given my support to every such measure, where I was in a position to give support to such legislation and to carrying out of such plans as the legislation authorized. The State of Idaho has benefited to a greater extent than any other State in the Union by irrigation. The State of Idaho has more acres of land under irrigation as a result of the enactment of the Carey Act than any other State in the United States. Idaho had the first and has the largest reclamation project under what is known as the "reclamation act" of any State in the Union. The Minidoka project is practically and fully complete, because the water is turned into the ditches, and last year they raised a very considerable amount of crops, and this year will raise full crops.

I have asked and Congress, so far as the Senate is concerned, has granted, in addition to the 1,000,000 acres allowed under the Carey Act to that State, 2,000,000 acres, not before we wanted it, but because we have the actual applications for that land from responsible parties who are able to carry the law into effect. Think you that I would be the one to stand on this floor and throw any obstacle in the way of any enterprise for the reclamation of the arid lands of any country? But if parties should come here and propose to draw their water supply from the sun by extinguishing it, or from the clouds, I would look with a somewhat critical eye upon their scheme. If they were to propose to reclaim these lands at the expense of cutting off the water supply of a great city, I should look with a critical eye at their proposition. If they came here and proposed to reclaim these lands with $25,000 of capital at the expense of the navigation of Snake River, then I look not only with a critical eye, but I raise the hand of protest, because I know there is no stability behind this proposition, and it is simply asking Congress to give them the capital of an exploiter to go upon the market and try to sell their rights.

The Senator from Washington admits that the president of this company gave as a reason for not disclosing the parties who were to make this a substantial enterprise that it was not policy.

Mr. PILES rose.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is that correct?

Mr. PILES. I was going to say it is not correct. We all know that men who engage in big enterprises——

Mr. HEYBURN. Before I submit to the interruption, if the Senator please, he says that is not correct, and I am not content to be met with that kind of denial, and then have the Senator go off and make a speech on some other part of the question. In what way is it incorrect?

Mr. PILES. In this way——

Mr. HEYBURN. Let us finish this now.

Mr. PILES. It is incorrect in this respect, that the gentleman stated, as I understood him, that the men who were interested in this project and who were furnishing the money were men of means; at least that is what he told me.

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to know the conversation he had in the presence of both of us.

Mr. PILES. The Senator will pardon me. He has asked me to answer him.

Mr. HEYBURN. But the Senator refers to some conversation when I was not present, I think.

Mr. PILES. The conversation as I understand it is that between the president of the company and you and myself. You asked him the names of the gentlemen interested with him in the project who were to furnish the money, and he said he did not care to bring those men's names into the transaction, as I now recall it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Wherein does that differ from the statement I made, that he said that he did not care to disclose their names or identity?

Mr. PILES. But you said it was because he did not regard it as good policy.

Mr. HEYBURN. Wherein does the Senator's statement differ from the statement I made, which he said was not correct?

Mr. PILES. I do not maintain that there is any material difference, but I should like to say this to the Senator: What is the difference whether these men have a capital stock of $25,000 or $25,000,000?

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I will not be interrupted for the reiteration of that statement.

Mr. PILES. Let me ask you this question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will yield for a question.

Mr. PILES. Is it not a fact that under the law of June 21, 1906, the parties receiving a grant of this character are required to commence work on it within one year and to complete it, according to plans and specifications approved by the Government, within three years? Now, who can be hurt under a proposition of that kind, whether these gentlemen have money or whether they have not money?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is not probable that the corporation pleading for this right, the Benton Water Company, would be able to carry out the plan at all; in fact, you may say with confidence that they would not. Is it proper for Congress to send out a roving commission to hunt up capital for the purpose of engaging in an enterprise of this kind, that is to be based upon a presumption behind the passage of any legislation that the parties to whom the grant is given are capable of carrying it out? What kind of legislation would that be?

If some unknown incompetent were to come to Congress and ask for the right to build a bridge across the Potomac River—some person with no responsibility behind him, or unable to show any—and who would say, "I do not care to tell you who is behind me," with a broad intimation that there was great wealth behind him, would Congress give it very much consideration?

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho a question. Does he propose to let this question come to a vote to-night? If he does not——

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not propose to allow it to come to a vote at any time when I can prevent it by any rule of this body or any action on my part. I will be perfectly candid about it.

Mr. PILES. If the Senator does not intend to allow the question to come to a vote to-night, I am sure I do not want to be responsible for keeping Senators here over a little matter of no great consequence—purely local. If he says he will not let the matter come to a vote to-night, I will move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have said to the Senator it is my intention not to allow it to come to a vote at any time if I can prevent it.

Mr. PILES. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I omitted when I was on my feet before to read a telegram or two, which I wish to read in order that they may go into the RECORD.

Mr. PILES. I will be very glad to withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. BORAH. I have received these telegrams since this discussion commenced:

LEWISTON, IDAHO, March 31, 1908.

Hon. W. E. BORAH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Lewiston Commercial Club and people here favor Benton dam at Fivemile, in Snake River, if bill amended as heretofore proposed. With bill amended, we think proposed dam will aid and not impede navigation. Proposed works by Benton Water Company will, in our judgment, be aid in securing open river from Lewiston to sea.

J. B. MORRIS,
JOHN O. BENDER,
STORRI BUCK,
Committee.
D. J. MCGILVERY,
President.

From the same place:

Senator W. E. BORAH,
Washington, D. C.

People here favor Benton Water Company dam at Fivemile Rapids, Snake River, provided bill amended as heretofore stated in resolution by Commercial Club.

HENRY HEITFELD.

Formerly a member of this body.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to say—and then I will yield to the Senator—that it can go back to Lewiston; that I do not accept the judgment of those men as a sufficient reason why I should abandon the interests of the State of Idaho.

Mr. PILES. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 1, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 31, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 19955, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, with Senate amendments thereto, and ask concurrence in the Senate amendments.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the amendments reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 19955, the urgent deficiency bill, with Senate amendments, and consider the same at this time.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the amendments reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill and amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 19955. An act making appropriations to supply certain additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

The amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects, and the bill is referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6350. An act granting an increase of pension to Jennie Carroll and Mabel H. Lazear;

S. 6136. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to issue patent to certain lands to Boise, Idaho;

S. 5590. An act for the promotion of Joseph A. O'Connor, carpenter in the United States Navy, to the rank of chief carpenter, and place him on the retired list;

S. 5388. An act for the relief of Benjamin C. Welch;

S. 5263. An act for the relief of William Parker Sedgwick;

S. 5227. An act granting an honorable discharge to Seth Wardell;

S. 5207. An act for the relief of William Radcliffe;

S. 6131. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Rock River, State of Illinois;

S. 5862. An act to purchase certain lands adjacent to the present site of Fort Logan, Colo.;

S. 5620. An act to authorize the issuance of a patent to the assignee of Warner Bailey, for land located in Choctaw County, State of Alabama;

S. 5604. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to reserve lands on Indian reservations for power and reservoir sites, and for other purposes;

S. 5038. An act for the relief of the White River Utes, the Southern Utes, the Uncompahgre Utes, the Tabeguache, Muache, Capote, Weeminuche, Yampa, Grand River, and Uinta bands of Ute Indians, known also as the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Colorado;

S. 4814. An act to amend section 491n of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia;

S. 4782. An act to remove the charge of desertion against Thomas L. Rodgers;

S. 4703. An act to provide for the leasing of allotted Indian lands for mining purposes;

S. 4132. An act creating an additional land district in the State of South Dakota;

S. 4107. An act to authorize the town of Chevy Chase, Md., to connect its water system with the water system of the District of Columbia;

S. 3952. An act to restore to the active list of the United States Marine Corps the name of Robert Morgan Gilson;

S. 3125. An act for the relief of Jabez Burchard;

S. 2743. An act for the relief of Peter McKay;

S. 1744. An act for the relief of the heirs of George A. Armstrong;

S. 1160. An act to correct the military record of Lora E. Reed;

S. 879. An act for the relief of John S. Higgins, paymaster, United States Navy;

S. 754. An act for ascertaining the feasibility and probable cost of constructing a canal from the Tennessee River, at or near the city of Chattanooga, in the State of Tennessee, to the navigable waters of the Ocmulgee River, in the State of Georgia, by which there will be furnished adequate water communication by the shortest and most practicable route between the Atlantic Ocean and the navigable waters in the rivers of the Mississippi Valley;

S. 655. An act for the relief of Richard A. Proctor;

S. 437. An act for the relief of D. J. Holmes; and

S. 388. An act to confirm and legalize prior admissions to citizenship of the United States where the judge or clerk of the court administering the oath to the applicant or his witnesses has failed to sign or seal the record, oath, or the judgment of admission, and to establish a proper record of such citizenship.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 12499. An act for the relief of Clarence Frederick Chapman, United States Navy;

H. R. 15230. An act to amend an act approved February 28, 1901, entitled "An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia;" and

H. R. 603. An act granting an increase of pension to John A. M. La Pierre.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, the bill (H. R. 19955) making appropriations to supply certain additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, with Senate amendments, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 225. An act to amend section 4463 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the complement of crews of vessels, and for the better protection of life;

H. R. 6664. An act for the relief of Robert Scholter;

H. R. 14282. An act to authorize the appointment of a deputy clerk at Big Stone Gap, Va.;

H. R. 13448. An act to authorize the counties of Allegheny and Washington, in the State of Pennsylvania, to change the site of the joint county bridge which now crosses the Monongahela River at Monongahela City, Pa., and to construct a new bridge across said river in the place of said present bridge upon a new site;

H. R. 10540. An act to amend section 73 of the act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii;

H. R. 12476. An act to place the name of William S. Shacklette on the retired list of the Navy as pharmacist;

H. R. 10075. An act for the relief of Copiah County, Miss.;

H. R. 4763. An act transferring Commander William Wilmot White from the retired to the active list of the Navy;

H. R. 3822. An act for the relief of James Behan;

H. R. 12292. An act for the relief of A. E. Couch;

H. R. 18615. An act to authorize the Cairo and Norfolk Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Cumberland River;

H. R. 18616. An act to authorize the Cairo and Norfolk Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River;

H. R. 15070. An act for the relief of J. Edmund Strong; and

H. J. Res. 134. Joint resolution for the relief of Archibald G. Stirling, recently midshipman, United States Navy.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 5604. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to reserve lands on Indian reservations for power and reservoir sites, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 5620. An act to authorize the issuance of a patent to the assignee of Warner Bailey, for land located in Choctaw County, State of Alabama—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 5862. An act to purchase certain lands adjacent to the present site of Fort Logan, Colo.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 6131. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Rock River, State of Illinois—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 6136. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to issue patent to certain lands to Boise, Idaho—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 6350. An act granting an increase of pension to Jennie Carroll and Mabel H. Lazear—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 4703. An act to provide for the leasing of allotted Indian lands for mining purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 4782. An act to remove the charge of desertion against Thomas L. Rodgers—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 4814. An act to amend section 491n of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 5038. An act for the relief of the White River Utes, the Southern Utes, the Uncompahgre Utes, the Tabeguache, Muache, Capote, Weeminuche, Yampa, Grand River, and Uinta bands of Ute Indians, known also as the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Colorado—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 5207. An act for the relief of William Radcliffe—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 5227. An act granting an honorable discharge to Seth Wardell—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 5263. An act for the relief of William Parker Sedgwick—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 5388. An act for the relief of Benjamin C. Welch—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 5590. An act for the promotion of Joseph A. O'Connor, carpenter in the United States Navy, to the rank of chief carpenter, and place him on the retired list—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 4132. An act creating an additional land district in the State of South Dakota—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 4107. An act to authorize the town of Chevy Chase, Md., to connect its water system with the water system of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 3952. An act to restore to the active list of the United States Marine Corps the name of Robert Morgan Gilson—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 3125. An act for the relief of Jabez Burchard—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 2743. An act for the relief of Peter McKay—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1744. An act for the relief of the heirs of George A. Armstrong—to the Committee on War Claims.

S. 1160. An act to correct the military record of Lora E. Reed—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 879. An act for the relief of John S. Higgins, paymaster, United States Navy—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 655. An act for the relief of Richard A. Proctor—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 437. An act for the relief of D. J. Holmes—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

S. 388. An act to confirm and legalize prior admissions to citizenship of the United States where the judge or clerk of the court administering the oath to the applicant or his witnesses has failed to sign or seal the record, oath, or the judgment of admission, and to establish a proper record of such citizenship—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 90, noes 56.

So the motion was agreed to; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 19158, the agricultural appropriation bill, Mr. FOSTER of Vermont in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose yesterday a point of order was pending on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I request that the pending amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the negotiation of any sale of timber in any national forest at a price above what would constitute a fair and reasonable price for such timber were it sold in competition with timber of a like character in the same locality on land in private ownership.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offered this amendment for the purpose of calling attention to the manner in which sales of timber upon the national forests are now made. Probably few members of the committee realize the extent of some of these great forest reserves. One of the reserves in my State, to which I have heretofore referred, is considerably larger than the State of Massachusetts, and it contains within its borders practically all of the timber in the entire region, so that so far as the local supply is concerned all of those living within 100 miles of the reserve are dependent upon it for their timber and their lumber. The inclusion of so vast an area in the reserve necessarily creates a monopoly, a Government monopoly. The question immediately arises as to what is the fair stumpage value of the timber within such a reservation. As to the reserve which I now have in mind private owners owning timber land in that region prior to the establishment of the reserve considered their timber worth about $1 to $1.50 per thousand feet stumpage, and all the small mills sold their lumber on about that basis. Immediately upon the establishment of this great reserve, rules and regulations relative to the manner of cutting and disposing of waste were put into operation, with which it was very difficult for the small mills to comply, with the result that within about two or three years most of the small mills went out of business and the cutting of timber on that reserve went into the hands of a very few large companies.

The first sales were made at a reasonable price for stumpage. When the time came to make further sales the Forestry officers consulted various gentlemen ambitious to go into the lumber business, including parties who had been previously engaged in the business, and who had mills, flumes, and works costing a large amount of money in the forests. The Forestry Bureau, instead of depending upon ordinary competition to fix the prices, stated to contemplating bidders that no bid would be received for less than a certain price per thousand feet—$5, I believe, was the minimum stumpage price in the particular case I have in mind—while former sales had been made, I think, at about $1.50 a thousand. Naturally, men who had a large interest there could not afford to lose their plants. Others, ambitious to go into the lumber business under these monopolistic conditions, were encouraged to bid, so the price was raised to nearly $6 per thousand.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not exercised on behalf of the gentlemen who bought that timber; none of them have ever complained to me as to the price they paid for stumpage. They have no reason to complain, because by reason of the establishment of the reserve such a monopoly is established and maintained that they can add to the price of their lumber a sufficient amount to cover the highest cost of stumpage and a good profit besides. But, Mr. Chairman, such sales mean our people are compelled to pay all the way from $4 to $6 a thousand more for their lumber than they had been paying for it.

Mr. COCKS of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. COCKS of New York. Has not the market price of lumber raised during that period at all?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I was just coming to that point.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield for another question, since he has been interrupted?

Mr. MONDELL. With pleasure.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Where did the small mill owners get their lumber prior to the reservation?

Mr. MONDELL. Some of the small mill men cut the timber under the free-use clause under which they can cut lumber for the settlers without paying any stumpage. But more of them, I will say to the gentleman, bought small areas of woodland and cut their timber from the land they owned. Having answered the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DOUGLAS] I would like to answer the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKS], as to whether there has been a general advance in the price of lumber.

Now, I live something over 200 miles from the reserve in question, in a region that does not happen to be in a reserve. The trees were rather too scattered to tempt even the Forestry Service, and that is saying a great deal. In this region is some timber land owned by private individuals, some of it owned by the State, which sells stumpage at a fair price. In the neighborhood of my home we buy native lumber at the small mill for $12 or $13 a thousand. That price is based on a stumpage value of $1 a thousand or $1.50 a thousand in the tree. Over yonder, on the other side of the mountains, where the Government has established this great reserve monopoly, the same sort of lumber sells at the mills at from $18 to $22 a thousand, which means $6 to $10 a thousand more in the towns.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, if this were an isolated condition I should certainly not take up the time of the House discussing it. I simply wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Forestry Bureau creates a monopoly by the creation of that reserve, and then it uses the monopoly which it has created to raise the price of lumber. We live in a region farther from market than any other people under the American flag. All we grow must be shipped to market at a greater transportation expense than is borne by the products of any other people in the country. All that we buy pays a higher freight rate than the same articles used by the people of any other part of the country.

Mr. COCKS of New York. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MONDELL. I have only five minutes. Mr. Chairman, now, fortunately, nature has given us a scattering growth of pine on our hilltops. Otherwise we would be compelled to ship all of our rough lumber as we do all of our finished lumber, either from the coast, a thousand miles away, or from the lower Mississippi, an equal distance, with freight rates so high that ordinary lumber shipped from those points costs from $28 to $35 a thousand. So long as we had the use of the lumber of our forests at a reasonable price the price of lumber from the coast, the lower Mississippi, and the Lakes was kept down, modified, reduced, by the local supply, limited though it was. But immediately upon the establishment of the reserves the Forestry Bureau proceeded to place a price on stumpage limited only by the necessities of our citizens after all the timber in the region had been placed under Government ownership, so that timber must be had from the reserves or not at all.

Now, we do not expect the Government to give away the timber in the forest reserves. We expect to pay a fair price for it, but we do not think we ought to pay two, three, and even four times the amount for stumpage for lodge-pole pine in the Rocky Mountains than is paid for the finest lumber in the world on the Pacific slope. One dollar and fifty cents is a high price for lumber in the tree on the Pacific slope, and yet the Department is receiving more to-day on some of its sales of lodge-pole pine in the Rocky Mountain territory than is being received by the "lumber trust," so called, for its valuable timber on the Pacific coast.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to be fair with the committee. I do not want to hamper the work of this Bureau, but I do desire to call attention to some of the evils that have grown up under it; and I venture the hope that the Bureau will in the future dispose of the products of the forests in our region at a fair and reasonable price and not at a price as much above a minimum fixed arbitrarily by the Bureau as the necessities of our people under an artificial monopoly created by the reserves may compel them to pay.

I am not certain that the amendment that I offered is not subject to the point of order, and while it states the principle on which sales should be made, possibly it would not be workable in practice, and as it has served the purpose I had in mind, that of giving me an opportunity of discussing the evils of the present system governing sales of timber in some of the forest reserves, I shall now withdraw it.

If the forest reserves are to serve a useful and beneficient purpose they must be used rather as a regulator of the price of lumber in their vicinity than as a means of arbitrarily advancing prices. If the people are to give their support and lend their aid to a forest-reserve policy and make appropriations for the same they must know that in the sale of their products the tendency is to reduce rather than increase the cost of such products to the people that must use them. A Government monopoly is no more tolerable than a private monopoly to him who pays the toll.

All of the purposes for which the reserves were established can and will be best served by a policy which lightens rather than adds to the burdens of the people living in their vicinity. Under such a policy national forests will have the support of the people, but so soon as it is generally understood that the policy to be pursued is one under which additional burdens are laid rather than benefits secured the public sentiment of the country east and west will no longer support the reserves.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Wyoming will be allowed to withdraw his amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used for the purpose of enforcing, or attempting to enforce, any rule or regulation of the Department of Agriculture, or of the Forestry Service, which prohibits, or attempts to prohibit, the citizens of the States wherein the national forests are located from appropriating for beneficial uses the waters of the natural streams therein according to the laws of said States and the statutes of the United States.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I have offered presents a very important question for the consideration of the committee. It is worthy of far more time than the committee can give to it this morning. I shall present what I have to say upon this amendment as briefly as possible. I was prompted to offer the amendment because of some opinions that were expressed upon this floor yesterday. Gentlemen rose upon the floor and made the statement or assertion that in the nonnavigable streams of the West the Government of the United States owned the water. I absolutely deny that proposition. I claim, Mr. Chairman, that the water in the nonnavigable streams of the States of the West is the property of the people of those States, and it is so recognized by the statutes of the United States, by the statutes of those States, and by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. Long before the State of Colorado was admitted into the Union the Congress of the United States recognized the doctrine that in those arid States prior appropriation of water should give prior right to the use of the water for beneficial purposes.

The first statutory recognition of that doctrine was in an act passed in 1866 by the Congress of the United States, which is now section 2339 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows:

Whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agriculture, manufacturing, or other purposes, have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and the decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes herein specified is acknowledged and confirmed; but whenever any person, in the construction of any ditch or canal, injures or damages the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage.

That was simply a statutory recognition of a right existing before the statute itself was enacted, and that proposition was maintained and confirmed by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, to which I will now call the attention of the committee.

In the case of Broder v. Natoma Water Company (101 U. S., 274) the Supreme Court said:

We are of the opinion that it is the established doctrine of this court that rights of miners, who had taken possession of mines and worked and developed them, and the rights of persons who had constructed canals and ditches to be used in mining operations and for purposes of agricultural irrigation, in the region where such artificial use of the water was an absolute necessity, are rights which the Government had, by its conduct, recognized and encouraged and was bound to protect before the passage of the act of 1866, and that the section of the act which we have quoted was rather a voluntary recognition of a preexisting right of possession, constituting a valid claim to its continued use, than the establishment of a new one.

That has been the doctrine of the Supreme Court ever since. That decision is one that has been recognized in numerous decisions from that time to the present, including the recent Kansas-Colorado case, and it has found lodgment in every statute passed by the Congress of the United States since the act of 1866.

Section 2340 of the Revised Statutes of the United States further provides:

All patents granted or preemption or homesteads allowed shall be subject to any vested and accrued water rights, or rights to ditches and reservoirs used in connection with such water rights, as may have been acquired under or recognized by the preceding section.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may be allowed five minutes more.

Mr. SCOTT. Pending that request, I move that debate upon this amendment close in ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves that debate upon the pending amendment close in ten minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BONYNGE. I will call attention to but one more decision of the Supreme Court, although I may cite very many, and that is the case of Gutierres v. Albuquerque Land and Irrigation Company, found in 188 United States, at page 545, and I will just quote one sentence from the decision:

By the act of July 26, 1866, Congress recognized, as respects the public domain, so far as the United States are concerned, the validity of the local customs, laws, and decisions of the courts in respect to the appropriation of water.

So that the appropriation of water in the arid States of the West is governed by the local laws of those States, and in the very constitution of our State we have a provision that the water shall be the property of the people of the State. I read now from section 5 of article 16 of the constitution of the State of Colorado, and practically the same provision is to be found in all the constitutions of the States west of the Missouri River.

The section to which I shall call attention was adopted ten years after Congress had recognized the right of the people of the West to appropriate the water of the natural streams of those States and Territories for beneficial uses. I read from section 5 of article 16:

The water of every natural stream not heretofore appropriated within the State of Colorado is hereby declared to be the property of the public, and the same is dedicated to the use of the people of the State, subject to appropriation as herein provided.

And even when Congress passed the recent reclamation act, the latest act by Congress dealing with this question, it put into that act the following section, recognizing, as Congress has always done from the beginning, the right of the people of those arid States to appropriate the water of the natural streams under their own laws for beneficial purposes. The reclamation act contains the following section, known as section 8:

That nothing in this act——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BONYNGE. I have only five minutes; I would gladly yield to the gentleman if I had the time.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. I should like to suggest that the gentleman discuss his amendment, so that we may know what it is.

Mr. BONYNGE. The amendment was read from the Clerk's desk. Section 8 reads as follows:

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting or intended to affect, or to in any way interfere with the laws of any State or Territory relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation, or any vested right acquired thereunder, and the Secretary of the Interior, in carrying out the provisions of this act, shall proceed in conformity with such laws—

What laws? The laws of the State or Territory. The section continues—and nothing herein shall in any way affect any right of any State or of the Federal Government or of any landowner, appropriator, or user of water in, to, or from any interstate stream or the waters thereof: Provided, That the right to the use of water acquired under the provisions of this act shall be appurtenant to the land irrigated, and beneficial use shall be the basis, the measure, and the limit of the right.

That last proviso states in a few words the doctrine that has prevailed ever since there has been any settlement in the arid lands of the West, and that doctrine is that prior appropriations for beneficial uses gives to the prior appropriator the right to the use of the water; and when gentlemen stand upon this floor and say that the waters of the natural, nonnavigable streams of the arid West are the property of the people of the United States, they forget the statutes that are upon our own Federal statute books, and they forget the decisions of the United States Supreme Court. The doctrine that prior appropriation of water for beneficial uses gives prior right is the basis upon which the development of the arid States has been founded.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the citation of statutes and the quotation of Supreme Court decisions in the discussion of any subject frequently invests that subject with an air of importance and throws around it an atmosphere of profundity which the merits of the subject do not at all warrant. That is eminently the case in the present instance. There is nothing profound or unusual in the proposition that is now before the House. Stripped of all its legal phraseology, it is a proposition to allow any corporation or any individual to use any land of the United States which it or he may see fit to use, to the exclusion of any other corporation or individual, without money and without price.

The present conduct of the Forest Service in requiring a reasonable fee to be paid when a corporation carries its work over land owned by the United States is only such conduct as a private citizen exercises in the management of his own business. There is not a man in this House who would not think that his rights were being outraged if a railroad should demand the privilege of going across his land without paying any fee or answering to him in damage, and that is precisely what is demanded of the United States by the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Colorado.

It is a great mistake to assume that the Forest Service makes a charge for the water that is used. All the charge that it makes is for the land which the water company takes possession of, and which it takes possession of to the exclusion, necessarily, of any other individual or corporation. The charges made are not extravagant. Before the power plant begins operations the rental is $1 an acre and $5 a mile; but these sums are far below the annual value of the land for power purposes, and accordingly, as soon as the generation of electric power begins, there is added to them an additional charge calculated upon the amount of power generated each year.

This charge begins at a very low figure, when the enterprise is new and the business undeveloped, and increases by moderate increment in successive five-year periods until what is considered a fair charge is attained, when the business has become thoroughly established and developed. The right-of-way permit issued by the Forest Service fixes the maximum charge, and from this maximum it is the purpose of the Service to make deductions when a part of the power plant is outside the forest, or when the plant includes storage reservoirs of large capacity increasing the average annual flow of streams. It will be seen that the charge is made for the use of the land, not for the water, and it is a most moderate charge, not interfering in any way with the development of the industries in the region in question.

The amendment under consideration seeks to withdraw the appropriation from this Bureau so long as it may seek to enforce any rule or regulation which attempts to prevent the citizens of a State, where the national forests are located, from appropriating for beneficial uses the waters of the natural streams, according to the law of the State and the statutes of the United States.

There is no attempt on the part of the Forestry Service to prohibit anyone entitled to the use of the water from using that water any more than it would be an attempt on the part of a Member of this House who required a railroad to pay him damages for going across his property—any more than that would be an attempt to prohibit the railroad from exercising its charter rights. The charges made, I insist, are moderate charges; they are charges that the Department has a right to make. And if it were not for the fact that the policy which has been here attacked had been followed out, practically all the power now developed within the range of the national forests would have been in the hands of two or three companies—if not of one great company—because there is an evident intent to monopolize the water power of this great region, an attempt which will surely be successful if the authority now exercised by the Forest Service is stricken down. I earnestly hope that the amendment will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveying, examining, and reporting upon the cost and advisability of creating a national forest reserve and park on the head of Red River, in the State of Texas, to be known as "The Palo Duro Canyon National Forest Reserve and Park," as provided in bill H. R. 11749, now pending in this Congress, and in accordance with the resolution of the legislature of Texas, passed at its last session, $10,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, to that I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Not upon the point of order, but upon the merits of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first upon the point of order. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the point of order for one minute.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is in accordance exactly with the appropriation of $25,000 made at the last session of Congress for the purpose of a survey of the boundaries of the Appalachian and White Mountain forest and park reservations, bills for which are now pending before this House, and I will state that numerous hearings have been had during this Congress before the gentleman's committee—the Committee on Agriculture. My amendment to this bill is on all fours with those projects, and therefore if they are entitled to an appropriation for surveys for forest reserves we are certainly entitled to it under my bill for a forest reserve and park on Palo Duro Canyon, in Texas. The head of the Red River is in Texas and extends to the eastern side of New Mexico. We have in lower Red River a navigable stream several hundred miles in length, touching four different States—Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Louisiana. These States are deeply interested in the preservation of the forests at the head of this river and thus aiding in furnishing water for navigation in the lower river. Forest reserves are much more necessary in the semiarid West than in the mountains east of the Mississippi River. The White and Appalachian mountain chains, in the East, have a heavy rainfall and have timber naturally. In the West we have little natural timber, and it is absolutely necessary that we should protect the timber on the head of Red River for the purposes of navigation and irrigation, and for the purposes also of having the best reserve and public park in the entire country.

I therefore hope that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] will withdraw his point of order against this amendment, and give us in this bill an appropriation of $10,000 to survey our park, and give us the same opportunity to have a survey made of our forest reserve as the other States have already enjoyed. The bill creating the park is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11749) providing for the purchase of a national forest reserve and park in the State of Texas, to be known as "The Palo Duro Canyon National Forest Reserve and Park."

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to purchase land suitable for the purposes of a national forest reserve and park within the counties of Randall and Armstrong, State of Texas, so as to include all or any part of the headwaters of Red River, known as the Palo Duro and tributary canyons, in total not to exceed 100,000 acres, and to care for, protect, use, and make accessible the said reserve, the same to be known as the "Palo Duro Canyon National Forest Reserve and Park."

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall advertise in the State of Texas and in the counties of Randall and Armstrong for lands to be purchased under the provisions hereof, and as between land of equal value, for the purposes of this act, the lowest bids shall be accepted: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall have the right to reject any and all bids: And provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to contract for and purchase as a part of said forest reserve and park and from the owners thereof the ranch lands and herd of buffaloes and cataloes known as the Goodnight buffalo herd and ranch, situated in Armstrong County, Tex.

SEC. 3. That in the acquirement of land and other property for the purposes of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall conform to the conditions prescribed in the present or future act or acts of the legislature of the State of Texas, ceding to the United States the right to acquire and control such land and other property, and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise, as to such lands, all rights and powers granted in said act or acts: Provided, That when the owners of lands sought to be acquired for the purpose of this act are unwilling to sell the same on terms satisfactory to the Secretary of Agriculture, condemnation proceedings for the acquirement of such lands shall not be had so long as the said owners shall protect and perpetuate the forests on said lands, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture for the control of the forests on other lands purchased by the Government under this act, so far as the same may be applicable.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and empowered to accept gifts of land for the purpose of this act, and such lands shall hereafter be known by such names as the donors, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, may prescribe.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of Agriculture may do all things necessary to secure the safe title in the United States to the lands herein provided to be purchased; but no payment shall be made for any land purchased under this act until the title to such land shall be satisfactory to the Attorney-General and conveyance thereof duly executed and accepted.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall make provision for the foresting of the lands purchased under the provisions of this act whenever such planting shall be deemed advisable or found necessary for the protection of the soil or the water supply; and if any buffaloes or cataloes are purchased under this act, he shall also care for and protect them.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby empowered and directed to make such rules and regulations and establish such service as he may deem necessary for the care, protection, control, and use of such forest reserve, and violation of such rules and regulations shall be punished as provided by law for other forest reserves.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and empowered to make contracts for the purchase of lands and herd of buffaloes and accept conveyance thereof in accordance with the provisions of this act to the amount of not to exceed $500,000, and the sum of $100,000 thereof, to be available immediately and until the expiration of the year ending June 30, 1907, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of lands for a national forest reserve and park and otherwise to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall each year make a detailed report to Congress of his doings in the premises: And provided further, That no part of said sum hereby appropriated shall be expended for the purchase of land in the State of Texas under the provisions of this act until a valid title to the same shall be vested in the United States, and until the State in which the land lies shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction of the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

SEC. 9. That this act shall take effect after the approval by Congress of said survey and plats.

The act of the Texas legislature providing for the park is as follows, viz:

Act of the Texas legislature, dated April 23, 1907.

That the United States Government may purchase, acquire, hold, own, occupy, and possess such land in Armstrong and Randall counties, in the State of Texas, in the Palo Duro Canyon, and contiguous thereto as they may deem expedient and necessary for the purpose of establishing a national park.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of chapter 73, acts of the Twenty-ninth legislature, as to the method of purchase and acquisition and the procedure for condemnation, if such condemnation becomes necessary, shall apply to the acquisition or purchase of the lands mentioned in section 1 of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. I shall be obliged to insist on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then there is a difference, I understand, between Texas and the other States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used in such manner as shall deny to citizens of the United States right of way for which they have applied and to which they are entitled under the laws of the United States.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, on that I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this is subject to a point of order. It is a limitation on an appropriation simply. It simply provides that the Secretary shall not do an unlawful thing with this appropriation. He shall not deny citizens rights to which they are entitled under the laws of the land.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this falls within the class of a ruling which was made in the Fifty-fifth Congress, and which is reported in the proceedings of the House in the following language, as found on page 358 of the Manual:

An amendment providing that no portion of an appropriation for the manufacture of stamped envelopes should be expended in printing return cards on them was ruled out of order.

The general law, Mr. Chairman, creating the forest reserves provided specifically that nothing within that law should be construed as prohibiting the ingress or egress of actual settlers residing within the boundaries of such reservations or near to such reservations from crossing the same to and from their property or homes, and it seems to me that the gentleman's amendment, if it had any effect whatever, would simply be to hamper the Service in the exercise of the rights which it does have.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's suggestion is evidently based on the idea that there is no necessity for this sort of limitation upon the appropriation. I propose to show that the Forest Service has denied rights which Congress has granted to citizens, and it is for the purpose of preventing the Forest Service from doing that in the future under this appropriation that the amendment is offered in the best of faith.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move debate on this amendment and all amendments to this amendment be closed in ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas, that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in ten minutes.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken on that motion I desire to ask if the chairman of the committee is going to claim one-half of that time?

Mr. SCOTT. It seems to me that I am entitled to that much of the time.

Mr. SMITH of California. I presume the gentleman is, but I respectfully submit that it is not exactly the proper——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SMITH of California. I hope that the motion will not be agreed to.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, we have spent a considerable amount of time debating this paragraph, and yet there are two very important questions connected with forest reserves in the West which have not been discussed at all. One is the exceedingly important question as to whether or not areas in reserve larger than all New England, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and half the great State of New York are to become Federal provinces or are to remain integral parts of the sovereign States in which they are situated. That is one very important question. Another is, Shall the Forestry Bureau persist in denying to citizens of the United States rights granted by Congress? Now, I hold that the Forestry Bureau has no authority under any law on the statute books to grant any sort of a permanent right to use or even a temporary right to occupy the reserves for purposes not related directly to the use of the products of the reserves. But admitting, for the sake of argument, that they have the right to grant temporary permits for certain purposes, surely they have no right to prevent our people from securing easements or rights of way granted by Congress.

The laws of the land provide that citizens of the United States will be entitled to rights of way in the forest reserves for certain purposes, for railroads, irrigation canals, canals for municipal, mining, and other purposes. For these uses the law gives the applicant a permanent easement and yet, Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a statement of over 500 revokable permits granted by the Forestry Bureau, over half of them being for purposes for which the applicant was entitled to an easement, a permanent right of way. Well, now, it does not require a great amount of sagacity for one to imagine how those revokable permits came to be granted to men entitled to permanent easements. When an application for a right of way is made it is perhaps properly sent to the Agricultural Department and Forestry Bureau for investigation and report as to the condition of the territory over which it is proposed to claim the right of way, and I have no doubt at all but what gentlemen making such applications come to understand that, while they may be hindered or delayed in their efforts to secure the right of way to which they are entitled under the law, they will have no difficulty at all in securing a temporary revokable permit which will bring the Forestry Bureau a considerable revenue, and what is infinitely more important, place the industry proposed to be established and eventually all the industries of these vast reserves permanently under Federal control. There has been a great deal said here about monopoly. Mr. Chairman, the people of the West are as competent to take care of their local domestic corporations as the people of any other part of these United States. We are still sovereign States of this nation and we ought to have the right to tax, to control our domestic corporations instead of being denied this right by reason of the fact that the Forestry Bureau uses its arbitrary power to deny the use of forest reserve lands except on compliance with conditions, the terms of which they fix.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the statement which has been made by the gentleman from Wyoming no doubt appeals strongly to the Members of the House. I feel very sure, however, that without intention on the part of the gentleman it has left upon their minds an entire misapprehension of the facts and of the real purport of the amendment which he offers. He stated to the House that he held in his hand a list of 500 special permits that had been granted to various persons or corporations, and the impression that statement created in my mind, and, I think, possibly in the minds of other members of the committee, was that those permits had been granted to persons who, as a matter of fact, were entitled to go on the land in which the forests were situated without a permit. I have asked him to hand me the list, and he has kindly done so, and I want to read a part of them in this connection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption? The gentleman certainly does not intend to misquote me. I stated, if the gentleman will recall, that a large number—my impression was over half—of these revocable permits are for irrigation, mining, and for other purposes for which the citizens of the United States are entitled to rights of way.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman knows I would not intentionally misquote him. I only stated he had left an impression upon my mind, and I said perhaps he had left the same impression upon the minds of other members of the committee, that permits had been denied to those entitled to have them. I notice on the first page of the list which he has handed to me the following permits, "Alaska Industrial Company, flumes; Hoonah Lumber Company, flume; Walter Baker, ditch; Walter Baker, reservoir; J. M. Riddle, reservoir," etc. On another page the purposes run as follows: "Ditch, pipe line, reservoir, ditch, channel, reservoir, etc." It will be seen, therefore, that practically all of these permits have been issued to people who desire to use the public domain to carry across it their flumes to convey water for power or for irrigation purposes, and I submit that the Forest Service, in the scope of the general law, has an absolute right to require permits for these purposes, and it has the right under the opinion which has been rendered by the Attorney-General (I believe the case has never been taken into court), to charge reasonable fees for the right of way granted in such permit. Now, the language of the act relating to this matter is as follows:

Nothing herein shall be construed as prohibiting the egress or ingress of actual settlers residing within the boundaries of such reservations or from crossing the same to and from their property or home, and such wagon roads and other improvements may be constructed thereon as may be necessary to reach their homes and to utilize their property, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. Nor shall anything herein prohibit any person from entering upon such forest reservations for all proper and lawful purposes, including that of prospecting, locating, and developing the mineral resources thereon: Provided, That such persons comply with the rules and regulations covering such forest reservations.

And I submit, gentlemen of the committee, that under the broad provisions of this statute every individual who has the right to go for any legitimate purpose upon the public forest is guaranteed that right by the terms of the law. Not only do they have the right as individuals, but they can exercise a community right, as is shown by the following paragraph:

The settlers residing within the exterior boundaries of such forest reservations or in the vicinity thereof—

They do not even have to live within the forest—in the vicinity thereof may maintain schools and churches within such reservation, and for that purpose may occupy any part of the said forest reservation, not exceeding 2 acres for each school and 1 acre for a church.

You see, therefore, they have not only every individual right guaranteed, but they have their community right, their right to establish and maintain churches and schools within the limits of the national forest. It seems to me clear, Mr. Chairman, the amendment would seriously hamper all the work of the Forest Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MANN in the chair). The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used for the purpose of enforcing, or attempting to enforce, any rule or regulation of the Department of Agriculture or of the Forestry Service imposing fines or penalties for the straying or grazing of cattle or horses in or upon any lands included within national forests in any State, unless said lands are fenced, where the laws of said State require lands to be fenced in order to entitle the owners to recover for trespass.

Mr. SCOTT. I make a point of order against the amendment, on the ground that it limits the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear from the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] on the point of order.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered simply provides a limitation on the use of the money appropriated. It does not change existing law. On the contrary, it is an enforcement of existing law, but prohibits the Secretary of Agriculture or the Forestry Bureau from making any rules or regulations which would be in violation of existing law or using any of the money appropriated for the purpose of enforcing any such rule or regulation.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Colorado what is the existing provision of law upon this subject?

Mr. BONYNGE. What is the existing provision of law? The only law in reference to the subject is that the Secretary of Agriculture and the Forestry Service shall have the power to regulate the occupancy and use and preserve the forest from destruction and to make rules and regulations for said purposes. The amendment offered simply provides that no part of the money appropriated to the Department shall be used for the purpose of enforcing a rule or regulation made under this general authority which would accomplish the purpose set forth in the amendment, and is therefore merely a limitation of the power of the Secretary of Agriculture in the use of the appropriation made by the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, my view of the question is that the law which the gentleman has quoted gives the Secretary certain authority which his amendment would take away from him, and therefore it ought not to be held in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule, unless the gentleman desires to be heard further.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can add very much to what I have said. The Secretary of Agriculture has the power to make certain rules and regulations. We have the right in an appropriation bill to limit the use of the money that is appropriated to him, provided we do not thereby change existing law. Now, it can not be in contemplation of existing law conferring upon the Secretary of Agriculture the power to make regulations that he could make rules and regulations that would nullify statutes of the United States, and this is merely a limitation upon the use of the money appropriated to him to prevent him under the guide of a rule and regulation to change existing law. I can not add any more to that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MANN). The amendment in form is somewhat, if not quite similar, to the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Wyoming; and the then occupant of the chair overruled the point of order upon that amendment. With that ruling the present occupant of the chair fully concurs. The pending amendment, while in form somewhat similar, as the Chair understands it, is quite dissimilar. The amendment provides "that no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used for the purpose of enforcing or attempting to enforce any rule or regulation of the Department of Agriculture or of the Forestry Service imposing fines or penalties for the straying or grazing of cattle or horses in or upon any lands included within national forests in any State unless said lands are fenced where the laws of said State require lands to be fenced in order to entitle the owners to recover for trespass.

It seems very clear to the present occupant of the chair that this makes a substantial change of the existing law, giving to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to make regulations and makes a positive change in the law. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for salaries and general expenses, Forest Service, $3,296,200.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move an amendment to strike out the words "one hundred," on lines 23 and 24, on page 25.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I submit that comes too late.

Mr. MONDELL. I was listening; the House was in great confusion; I have been intending to offer this amendment; so stated to the chairman of the committee, and in the great confusion the Clerk began to read before I could get on my feet. If it is impossible to move an amendment unless one is on his feet ready to shout——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the House was in very good order at the time. The Chair directed the Clerk to read, and the Clerk read.

Mr. MONDELL. "The gentleman" had his amendment, and was listening to the reading.

Mr. POLLARD. Regular order!

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Wyoming states that he was on his feet endeavoring to obtain recognition, he will be recognized.

Mr. MONDELL. I was on my feet as soon as the Clerk began to read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 25, lines 23 and 24, strike out the words "one hundred."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves that debate on the amendment shall be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I desire to be heard on that motion.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask, before that motion is put——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the chairman of the committee whether he intends——

Mr. WILLIAMS. If it requires unanimous consent, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The question is on closing debate on the amendment and amendments thereto in ten minutes.

Mr. NORRIS. I have obtained the information I wanted.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MONDELL. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes, 38; noes, 16.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the committee is evidently in an exceedingly reckless frame of mind when it votes to close debate on an appropriation of over $3,000,000 in ten minutes, an appropriation which is $100,000 more than the estimates of the Department. I desire to call the attention of the committee in the very limited time that I have at my disposal to the fact that this appropriation is just exactly $100,000 more than the Secretary of Agriculture asked in the Book of Estimates for this work, and that there follows another item of $500,000 for which no regular estimate ever was made. I desire further to call attention to the fact that if you take every item of proposed expenditure included in the Book of Estimates, and in the itemized statement furnished the committee, and add them all together, they are less by $1,172,000 than this appropriation will be if it is reduced by the amount that my amendment reduces it. One million one hundred and seventy-two thousand dollars will still remain for the general expenses of this Bureau, to be used as the Forester may see fit, without any limitation upon its use, except the general terms of the appropriation.

It may all be used in advertising; may all be used for traveling expenses; may all be used for any purpose under the sun within the wide scope of this appropriation, and in these times, when we are trying to keep down appropriations, here is an appropriation exceeding the estimates by $100,000, not to mention the half million in the next paragraph, and exceeding the amount of appropriation last year by $1,400,000. Here is a statement which shows how this appropriation has grown:

FOREST SERVICE.

Appropriation, 1907		$1,000,000
Appropriation, 1908:
Salaries	$143,200
General expenses	1,756,800
Administration, etc	500,000
		2,400,000

Estimate, 1909:
Salaries	$144,200
General expenses	3,051,900
		$3,196,100
Appropriation, 1909:
Salaries	144,200
General expenses	3,151,900
Administration	500,000
		3,796,100
Excess of estimate for 1909 over appropriation 1908		796,100
Excess of appropriation in bill for 1909 over appropriation for 1908		1,396,100
Excess of appropriation in this bill over estimates		600,000

And here is a table showing that, after providing for all estimated salaries, the amount covered in the bill will leave $1,764,088 for traveling and other "general" expenses of the Bureau:

FOREST SERVICE.

Estimates, 1909:
Salaries (Book of Estimates, p. 132)	$143,200
General expenses:
Salaries (in Washington)	297,000
Salaries (out of Washington)	1,591,822
Total salaries estimated	2,032,022
Total of appropriation in bill	3,796,100
Less salaries estimated	2,032,022
Balance for traveling and other expenses	1,764,078

We have heard a great deal of the economies of this Bureau. As a matter of fact, it is spending five or six times more than the Department of the Interior did when it had charge of the forest reserves, over and above all receipts, in spite of the fact that it is selling the timber from our forests in 50,000,000 and 60,000,000 feet lots.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I said a moment ago, there are no salary estimates for $1,172,000 of this amount. I know the chairman will say that this is intended to make up for returns from the forests, now flowing into the Treasury, which were formerly used for purposes of administration. The Forestry Bureau has not received a dollar from those sources since the 1st of last July, and in the present fiscal year the Department is running on over $400,000 less than this appropriation will be, if it is reduced by the amount which I propose, and then strike out half a million in the next paragraph. It can not be said that this is to make up a deficiency caused by the fact that the receipts are going into the Treasury instead of into the special fund, because this appropriation is by over $1,300,000 more than all of the estimated returns from the forest reserves.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming would be very impressive indeed if it were founded upon facts. Unfortunately, however, for his argument, his conclusion is drawn from erroneous premises. He has stated in the beginning that there were no estimates sent down from the Department for the $100,000 which he attempts by his amendment to strike out. I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, which I shall take the liberty of reading:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 3, 1908.

Hon. CHAS. F. SCOTT,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SCOTT: I have the honor to submit the following supplemental estimate for an increase of $100,000 to the estimates for general expenses for the Forest Service of this Department for the fiscal year 1909. This increase is to provide for the necessary expenses in carrying out the provisions of the act of June 11, 1906 (34 Stat., 233). These expenses could not have been foreseen.

The act provides for the examination and classification of lands within national forests which, if found chiefly valuable for agriculture and not needed for administrative purposes, may be listed as such with the Secretary of the Interior, to be opened for entry under the homestead laws. From June 11, 1906, to December 31, 1907, 5,880 applications for examination of land under this act have been received. While only about 1,000 of the applications received remain unacted upon at this time, the increasing publicity given this act will result in a large number of applications being received during the next fiscal year. I estimate that at least 5,000 examinations will have to be made during the next year, and experience has shown that with due allowance for adverse weather conditions in the field one man can examine and report upon about 125 applications in a field season. A force of at least forty men constantly employed in this work will, therefore, be necessary.

The appropriation would provide for:

6 chief examiners, at $1,800	$10,800
Traveling expenses, at $1,200	7,200
6 assistant chief examiners, at $1,500	9,000
Traveling expenses, at $1,200	7,200
28 examiners, at $1,400	39,200
Traveling expenses, at $950	26,600
	100,000

Unless appropriation is made for this purpose the examinations will have to be made by the regular protective force on the national forests, and their services can not be withdrawn from protective and administrative work without endangering the forests upon which they are now employed.

Very sincerely, yours, JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

It seemed to your committee that we ought not to run any risks of requiring would-be homesteaders upon the public forests to wait a year or two years, or possibly more than that, before finding out whether they could hold the land which they were claiming.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SCOTT. I must decline to yield.

Mr. SMITH of California. I desire to ask one question.

Mr. SCOTT. I can not yield. I have too much to say. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the appropriations generally for this Bureau, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Bureau had at its disposal this year, in addition to the sum of $1,756,800, carried under the head of general expenses in the current appropriation act, the sum of $1,020,000, which was available from the fund left over which had been collected and set apart as a special fund during the preceding year. That is to say, before the act of 1907, requiring all receipts from the forests to go into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, had taken effect, there had accumulated in the Treasury, subject to the order of the Chief of the Forest Service, the sum of $1,020,000, and that was available for his expenses this year. So that altogether during the current year there was available for general expenses $2,776,800. We appropriate this year for the same expenses an increase of $375,100; but, gentlemen of the committee, there have been added to the national forests since the current appropriation act went into effect 37,000,000 acres of land. Under the former conditions, with only 127 forests, it required an expenditure of $22,992 for each 1,000,000 acres of land. We thought when we allowed only $10,000 for each additional million acres of land that had been included within the national forests we were making a very conservative and careful appropriation. Comparing the expenditures on European forests, Germany spends $2.17 an acre per year, Russia $1.61, Saxony $2 an acre, and the United States $0.009 an acre for administrative purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I notice, according to the statement of expenditures and receipts made by the Bureau of Forestry last year, there was received $1,571,050.44. Of that money $1,455,320.40 was expended. The purpose for which I arise is to inquire of the chairman of the committee having charge of the bill why it is deemed necessary to make an appropriation of $500,000 for the conduct of this work if the report shows that they had a surplus of $115,730 from the revenues of the Bureau?

Mr. SCOTT. The reason is that under the existing law the revenues from the forests go into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts and are not subject to the check of the Forester, but must be appropriated out before they can become available for his use. When the statement was made to which the gentleman refers, the law allowed the receipts from the forests to go into a special fund, which could be checked out without specific appropriation by Congress, but that law has been changed.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask whether the $500,000 is a substitute for the one million and a half and over received by the Bureau of Forestry last year, and out of which the expenses were paid?

Mr. SCOTT. Not at all. This is for an entirely different purpose.

Mr. MONDELL. This is a case where you have your cake and eat it too.

Mr. SCOTT. If the law prior to 1907 were still in operation, instead of this bill showing an apparent increase for this Bureau of a million dollars or more, there would be an actual decrease of over $600,000, because it is estimated this year that the receipts will be about $2,000,000, and if these receipts were available to pay the general expenses, we could reduce the general expense appropriation by that amount.

Mr. MADDEN. In other words, you would deduct from the present proposed appropriation the estimated receipts of the Bureau of Forestry which would be available under last year's law for the payment of the expenses of the Bureau?

Mr. SCOTT. That is it precisely. Let me state to the House that in 1905, when the act was passed transferring the national forests to the Department of Agriculture, Mr. Pinchot promised the Committee on Agriculture that he would make the forests self-supporting in five years, and the report from which the gentleman has read shows that he did better than that, because they were self-supporting in two and one-half years.

Mr. MONDELL. If they were self-supporting, how long were they kept self-supporting? Here is an appropriation of two million and a half dollars over and above the estimated revenues.

Mr. MADDEN. I presume that in making the statement that the Forestry Bureau is self-supporting, the gentleman in charge of the bill intends to convey to the House the information that the revenues out of which it becomes self-supporting are derived from the sale of timber and from other sources?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes; and grazing permits, and so forth.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not that reduce the value of the forest reserve?

Mr. SCOTT. It does to a degree, of course.

Mr. MADDEN. And is that taken into account when speaking of the surplus revenues?

Mr. SCOTT. No; it is not, but it is estimated that if the forests are continued to be cut in the scientific manner that they are now being cut, it will take three hundred years before the amount of timber equivalent to what is now on them would be cut.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not wish to be understood as objecting to the item in the bill, but I think it is fair to the House that all the information on the subject should be put in the RECORD.

Mr. SCOTT. I am willing to give all the information that is in my possession.

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a statement.

Mr. MADDEN. I will yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 26, beginning with line 3, strike out lines 3, 4, 5, and 6.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph close in ten minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the motion will not carry; this is an appropriation of half a million dollars.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman would enlarge that a little.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I certainly have no wish to unreasonably limit debate. If the gentleman will suggest a limit of time that he thinks would be reasonable, perhaps I will adopt it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to have five or ten minutes.

Mr. SCOTT. I will extend the time, then, to twenty minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman will give us a little more time than that. This is an appropriation of half a million dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to close debate in twenty minutes.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there have been some of the most extraordinary statements made one place and another in regard to the revenues and the expenditures of this Bureau that I have ever heard. I read very carefully the debate in the Senate last February on this very same subject. I have read every word of all the hearings on this subject and I have read and heard at least three different explanations and statements of what the revenues have been and how they have been expended, but the fact is that the Forestry Bureau is claiming that it is keeping its expenditures within the revenues—and understand those revenues mean the cutting of a timber growth that will not be restored in one hundred years—is claiming they are keeping within the revenues, when, as a matter of fact, their own statement on page 290 of the hearings indicates that this appropriation is in excess of probable receipts by a million and a third of dollars.

In other words, instead of keeping within the receipts, they are proposing to expend $1,300,000 more than the receipts, and these receipts come from the depletion of the reserves. Of course you could sell enough timber from these reserves to run the receipts up to $5,000,000. Who would say that the Forestry Bureau ought to use that amount of money simply because they are selling timber to that amount? But, Mr. Chairman, I think the facts are not exactly as stated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT]. The fact is that there was no balance of $1,020,000 to be expended last year above the appropriation, or anything of the kind. If there was any such sum as that to be expended, I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it must have come from the revenues from the year 1906, and it is the revenues for the year 1906 on which the Department bases its claim that the receipts were over and above the expenditures that year to the amount of $115.000.

At this rate this appropriation will keep increasing in geometrical ratio year after year and year after year, and the same old claim will, I suppose, continue to be made, that the Bureau had large sums which it used last year above the appropriation, and therefore it should continue to have largely increased appropriations. If it had, where was the $767,000 which they claim they received and spent in the year 1906, and which they claim made the receipts of the Bureau in that year $115,000 more than the expenditures? Surely the Forestry Bureau does not want to go on taking credit year after year and year after year for amounts it received years ago. As a matter of fact, this is an increase of $600,000 above the estimates. It is an increase for alleged permanent improvements. Among other things, they say they propose to build cabins and trails not necessary for the administration of the reserves.

Mr. Chairman, we like to have money expended in our Commonwealths—that is a trait common to all American citizens—but these improvements are not needed. They can not be used at this time for any useful purpose. Yet we go on year after year juggling figures, mixing facts with regard to what this Bureau has received and what it has expended, and on the basis of what it did receive and what it might have received and what it should receive and what it will receive we are making an enormous appropriation, for which there is no itemized estimate, and which may or may not be expended for the purposes proposed, and which, most important from the standpoint of the West, must ultimately be repaid by those who use the reserves. The more the amount of this appropriation, the more we pay the fiddler; so I want to keep it down.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the committee to this fact, that the opposition to this bill, or to this part of the bill particularly, comes from two sources—from the Committee on Appropriations, members of which committee seem to feel that the whole question of appropriations belongs rigidly to them, and that when any other committee or individual attempts to appropriate money some wrong is committed upon the vested rights of the Committee on Appropriations. I would like to submit the thought that the Committee on Agriculture is an appropriating committee; that it is invested with the same rights over the subject-matter pertaining to it to make appropriations that any other committee has, and that these constant chirpings about economy upon the part of this committee that has the larger number of appropriations are somewhat gratuitous. The other source of opposition seems to come almost exclusively from the Committee on Public Lands. On that committee, Mr. Chairman, I find that there are twelve members from the land States, States in which there are still public lands; and I would like to call attention to the other fact that those gentlemen seem to think that they have the exclusive right to appropriate and control the public domain of the United States in the interest of their people. That is an error. Every citizen of the United States has the same right, absolutely the same right, in these great movements for the preservation of our forests that these gentlemen have. They have done much, I will admit, toward the spoliation of the public domain. They have succeeded in getting such appropriations of the public land as that, in fact, every acre is now devoted, or the revenues from every acre, are devoted to their States and the improvement of their States; and I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is time that they should be content with that which they have and not insist upon grasping everything that still remains.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. HEPBURN. No; I will not yield for a question just now. I have only a limited time. Mr. Chairman, every citizen of the United States has an interest in this beneficient effort to preserve the forests of this country. The Government of the United States owns millions of acres that are useless except for the purpose of forest growth. Our forests are now nearly exhausted. The lumber supply, without we preserve some means of perpetuating or securing a new growth, in a very few years will be exhausted and the second generation from this, unless we do something of this kind, will have to seek supplies of lumber from beyond the limits of the United States. It is time we should follow the examples of other nations. All of the older nations, the European nations, are expending great efforts in securing forests. Everywhere you travel in European countries you find that they are expending large sums of money in covering their waste lands with young forests. We have started in that and the Government owns millions of acres adapted to this purpose. Gentlemen sneer at the forest reserves because they are not growing forests there now of magnificent proportions; but, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of reserving these lands is to secure ultimately a plan of growing stretches of young timber that may reasonably be expected to cover these vast regions that are now wastes. These gentlemen from the land States are now putting up some of the most preposterous claims. They say that they own the waters of these great reserves. Here are millions of acres in single tracts, owned by the Government of the United States. The streams are nothing more than land with water flowing over it, and yet these gentlemen now say that the Government owns the land but not the water. It is a part of the land. The claim is preposterous for that reason alone; but suppose that their claim was acceded to, they admit that the Government has control over the navigable waters and their ownership—that of the State—is limited to the unnavigable waters of the United States. If they can at their pleasure divert waters from the nonnavigable streams, how long will there be navigable streams?

Mr. SMITH of California. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will not. I have said I would not. I do not want to be rude to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of California. But you do not dare to let me ask you a question.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is not a question of dare. I do not know any powers the gentleman possesses that should make me or anybody else fear any question that the gentleman might ask.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not do that as the time is limited to twenty minutes' debate.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to read a short letter which I have just received from Secretary Metcalf——

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Tennessee has not been recognized. The gentleman is not in order. The Committee has set aside only twenty minutes for debate on this question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I was not aware of the fact. I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to read at this moment this short letter from Secretary Metcalf right upon this general proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to read a letter. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on the Public Lands some weeks ago reported a bill authorizing the sale of some 1,200 acres of a military reservation out on Puget Sound at about $2.50 an acre. The evidence was that the property was worth possibly $5 or $10 an acre. Later I have learned by men who have stopped me on the street and told me that adjoining property is worth $250 a residence lot, and this land will in five years be worth $1,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I yield for a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] has permission to read a letter.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I only wanted to preface it so that I can read it. I objected to it for the reason here stated, and I still object. The letter is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 28, 1908.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 4th ultimo, inclosing a copy of a bill (H. R. 15859) providing for the homestead entry of certain lands in the State of Washington, and for other purposes, and to your request for a statement as to whether the Department approves or disapproves the bill, I have the honor to quote for your information a report in the premises, just received, by the commandant of the Puget Sound Navy-Yard, viz:

"The land in question is situated near a Government harbor. In view of the rapidly increasing importance of the Puget Sound district to the Navy it is recommended that this land may be held in case it should be required. It might be of great service as a quarantine or isolation camp in case of need from any cause. It might also be used as an additional storage point for explosives."

The Department concurs in the commandant's views.

Very, respectfully,

V. H. METCALF, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN W. GAINES,
House of Representatives.

Those are some of the reasons why I objected to the bill in the committee and in the House when brought up, and now I am glad we have saved this land to the public use.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets to say that under the agreement he can not recognize the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN] is recognized.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have no personal desire to inject myself into this debate upon the question of the forest-reserve lands of the United States. It is difficult for any Western man to discuss this question without being misunderstood. Indeed, sir, it is almost impossible in these strenuous days for any man to call attention to any of the unjust and unfair conditions now prevailing in the West which are the outgrowth of this Governmental forest-reserve problem—which has now assumed gigantic proportions, without being condemned as a thief or the friend of thieves. I do wish to avail myself of this opportunity to say a few words upon this important subject, and I trust I will not be misunderstood.

The forest reserve and its so-called problems touch closely those of us who live in the far Western States. My friend the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] complains somewhat because those of us who live in the West should assume to have a particular interest in this proposition. Why should not we be interested in it? I will say to the Members of this House that the forest-reserve problem is a little like the smallpox, in a way. It is thought the most of by the people who do not have it. [Laughter.]

The forest-reserve problems rest very lightly upon those people whose States have not been entered by the Forest-Reserve Service, and whose broad acres have not been appropriated by this Government Bureau. I hold in my hand now a medium-sized outline map of the United States, upon which I have caused to be accurately traced in dark colors the lands in the United States which are now withdrawn from ordinary use and entry and are now forest-reserve lands. You gentlemen in this Chamber can get a fairly good idea of this situation from glacing at this map. My friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] complains because he says the opposition to these forest reserves is one-sided. Look at this map of the United States and you will see that the map is likewise one-sided. You do not see on this map any great stretches of country along the Atlantic coast which have been turned into forest reserves. You do not see any great stretches of country in the Mississippi Valley that have been taken over into forest reserves. Therefore, the gentlemen in those regions are very enthusiastic about the forest-reserve policy—because it does not hurt them nor their communities. Look at this map of the United States, and particularly that portion of it that shows my State, the State of Washington. Look at the way that State has been splattered over with forest reserves—it looks like a blackberry patch.

When you look at that map you will understand why it is that Members who live in the West are particularly interested in this Forest-Reserve Service.

Look at the great domain comprising the State of Iowa. There are no forest reserves in that State. I presume, sir, that my Iowa friend [Mr. HEPBURN] would not look with such wonderful complaisance on this Forest-Reserve Service if that service would go into his State and take twelve or fifteen counties out of the middle of that great agricultural and princely domain and build a Federal fence around it. But the situation in this regard in the State of Washington does not worry him—his withers are unwrung. How much of my State (Washington) does the gentleman suppose is now locked up in forest reserves? Practically one-third of that great State is forest reserve; 27 per cent of it is forest reserve, and 6½ per cent Indian reservations, making one-third of the entire State surrounded by a Federal fence. The State can not tax it, the citizen can not enter it. The railroads do not care to build into it because it is wilderness and can not be settled. And the settler, as I said, can not enter it, and those few who get permission hesitate to go, because the condition prevents the region from becoming settled. This line of the forest reserve stands like a great barrier in the way.

Now, I do not wish to be understood as making any unseemly onslaught on the forest-reserve policy or the Forest-Reserve Service. I think that a Forest-Reserve Service in the United States within sane and reasonable limits is a good thing, and I am not here to cry out against that policy if it is restricted to any reasonable extent. Gentlemen tell us that the forest-reserve policy is a good thing—and that you can not have too much of a good thing. Well, if the forest-reserve policy is a good thing, they have already placed one-third of the State of Washington within a forest reserve. How far do you gentlemen think this policy ought to be carried? If it is a good thing, why not extend it so as to cover two-thirds of my State? Or, better still, why not make the entire State one vast forest reserve and let the people who live there move out? I am not, as I said, crying out against this policy when only carried to a reasonable extent, but I am here to state that in my humble judgment it has been carried far beyond the point where it ought to go and far beyond reasonable and sensible limits.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], with that eloquence and fervor which he always uses, says that the United States Government owns vast bodies of timber in the West. Let me ask the gentleman this: How did the Government of the United States come to own the timber, for instance, in the State of Washington? How did the United States come to own that timber or that land? They did not buy it and they did not acquire it by war. That great domain, sir, has a title which rests upon the occupation of the settler. It was the early settlers who marched across the wilderness, across the mountains and the plains, and brought that great domain within the shadow of the American flag. And to-day we see the Federal Government building a fence around that domain and taking away from the descendants of the pioneers the very lands that their fathers brought within the limits of this Government. Does the gentleman wonder that we become a little bit interested in this proposition in the West? There is to-day due my State for public school purposes about 600,000 acres of land. Where is it? It is in the middle of a forest reserve. We can stand off and look at it, but it might as well for practical purposes be on the planet of Mars.

Now, then, again, in conclusion, let me emphasize the fact that I am not against any reasonable and sane forest reserve policy. I think it is a good thing within reasonable limits. But some of the arguments that lie behind this policy are very mystifying to me. I am amazed to see certain gentleman trying to separate and classify the different assets of the United States. They speak of "natural resources," and seem to wish to place timber in a separate and distinct category from anything else. Timber is not any more a "natural resource" than the fertility of the soil in an agricultural region. Why do not we have "agricultural reserves?" What a splendid thing it would have been for us and our children if years ago the United States with its strong arm had reached out into the very center of the State of Iowa and selected an area equal to twelve or fifteen counties and reserved it and its fertility for future generations? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN] has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to ask how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says there was no estimate for this appropriation. I hold in my hand in regular form a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture transmitting an estimate of $2,000,000, and with it a detailed statement of the purposes for which every dollar was to be expended.

This question, gentlemen, is a very simple one. The value of these forests is estimated at the conservative figures of $1,500,000,000, and this Government wants to spend during the year the very moderate sum of $500,000 in improving them, to build trails, to erect bridges, to erect cabins (which the gentleman said were to cost $3,500, but which the gentleman ought to have seen from the very language are limited to $500 each), and other work of improvement in order that we may more effectually administer the forests and protect them from fires and depredation. The facts will show that the protection which has been extended to the forests by reason of the improvement work done during the past two or three years has saved more actual value each year than the total cost of the improvements. Years ago it was a common thing to have fires occur in a national forest and destroy millions of dollars' worth of property. Again and again a single fire has destroyed $5,000,000 worth of timber, and some have destroyed more than that. Yet during the past year it is estimated that the actual value of the timber destroyed by fire was only a little over $6,000, due entirely to the more perfect policing made possible by reason of the means provided by way of a little appropriation of $500,000 this year. The Secretary of Agriculture, as I have already stated, asked that the appropriation for the coming year for this work should be $2,000,000, and sent down estimates in detail covering that sum. In the interest of economy, however, your committee recommends but $500,000, the same amount as last year, and I earnestly hope it will be allowed in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; debate upon the paragraph has expired; the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming, to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Bureau of Forestry, $3,796,200.

Mr. SMITH of California. I move to strike out the last word.

I desire, in the first instance, to apologize to the gentleman from Iowa for a very improper remark which slipped from my tongue a few moments ago. I make that apology quite as publicly as the remark itself, and I hope he will accept it as an unintended remark.

I take the time of the House at this moment to present a little matter in reference to the very important question of the right of the people of a State to the nonnavigable waters of the West. The act admitting the State of California into the Union, after providing, as in all cases, that the public lands should belong to the United States and not be taxed, contained this provision:

> And that all the navigable waters within the said State shall be common highways, and forever free, as well to the inhabitants of said State as to the citizens of the United States, without any tax, impost, or duty therefor.

Thereby clearly leaving the water of the nonnavigable streams to the people of the State of California, there being no other reservation than the one read.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa made some suggestions about what would become of the navigable streams if the people of the States were permitted to draw off the waters of the small streams before they became large enough to become navigable. The question which I desired to propound to him was this: What was to be the status of those rivers which never flow into a navigable river, and, comparatively speaking, all the streams used for irrigation are of that character. The river on which I live comes out of the mountains, flows down the valley, and disappears, and did for thousands of years, until we gathered it into canals for irrigation, and it would never have reached a navigable stream at all, and there are many others of the same kind. Whereas in those cases where power is generated they do not consume the water, but use it up in the mountains, away above navigation, and it is immediately returned to the bed of the stream that it may go on into the valley and serve its purposes of transportation or irrigation, as the case may be.

Now, continuing on the subject of the origin of water rights and their nature, I desire to read from the constitution of the State of California, which followed the act admitting the State into the Union. I read from article 14, section 1:

> The use of all water now appropriated, or that may hereafter be appropriated, for sale, rental, or distribution is hereby declared to be a public use and subject to the regulation and control of the State in the manner prescribed by law.

Following that, in our Code, I read section 1410 of the Civil Code, which is as follows:

> 1410. Rights to water may be acquired by appropriation. The right to the use of running water flowing in a river or stream or down a canyon or ravine may be acquired by appropriation.

We use that word "appropriation" to mean the mere matter of sticking a notice on a shingle and sticking the shingle in the bank of the river and then proceeding to have it recorded in the county court-house and then to proceed to divert and use the water:

> 1411. The appropriation must be for some useful or beneficial purpose, and when the appropriator or his successor in interest ceases to use it for such a purpose the right ceases.

So that there is no such thing as acquiring a right on a river and holding it away from beneficial use.

The law further says that, "as between appropriators, the first in time is first in right," and that was the section which I had in mind yesterday in discussing some water rights on the Owens River—that the first in time is the first in right—and it is wrong for the Federal Government to step in and undertake to defeat the right of the first appropriator by refusing him the right of transmission over the public domain and giving it to a second by granting to him that right.

Now, I desire to call attention to one other matter in this connection. The gentleman from Iowa suggested that we in the West were unduly ambitious with reference to certain rights and privileges. I assert that we have never asked and do not now ask for a single privilege on the public domain that has not been accorded with the utmost freedom and without one cent of expense throughout the East. I refer to the matter of rights of way for public-service corporations over the public lands. Suppose the policy that they are now endeavoring to ingraft upon the West, of charging us for the right to move over a piece of worthless land, had been applied during the days of railroad construction?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of California. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I am reluctant to deny consent. I move that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of California. I wish to call attention very briefly to the different conditions prevailing in the West now from those that prevailed in the East for over one hundred years. Never one cent was asked or expected for any right of way or other use of the public domain. The farmers from Ohio westward to the base of the Rocky Mountains pastured their flocks and their herds on the public domain, and it was never thought that there should be any charge. And yet to-day, out of the pasturing privileges and other uses of the forest reserves in the West, they are gathering a tax of nearly $2,000,000 a year from the husbandman of the West. When we asked for a right of way for a mile or 2 miles, or a trifling distance, over worthless public land in the rugged mountains some one in this city asserts the right, not to charge a price for it, but to lay upon it the burden of a perpetual tax, and I say it is wrong in principle and wrong in practice.

This Government from the beginning has been a Government of individualism, wherein we have stimulated and encouraged the right of the individual to take the opportunities which nature presented and make the most of them. Now, it is asserted, particularly by the leader of the other side, that the Government should invade the States and lay the hand of taxation upon these public-service opportunities and devote them to some national use. I wonder whence comes this spirit of paternalism and this determination to overturn the traditions and policies of this nation for one hundred and twenty-five years. You intimate that we, in the West, are wanting more than you had in the East, and I assert that we are receiving far less. If this policy of taxing everything that came from the Government had been adopted in the beginning we would now have an income of millions of bushels of wheat and corn, and tons of cotton and tobacco, and the railroads of the country would never have been built, for they could not build and the power companies can not build under a revocable license such as they are now attempting to lay upon us in the West. I hope as many Members as possible will read the testimony of the Chief Forester and see the covert threat (there is no other name for it) that if these power plants are built upon these revocable licenses, and they do not do what the Department wants, they will be wiped out of existence; for he says again and again, in his testimony before the committee, that if they do not comply with conditions which he shall hereafter impose they will be told to get off the public domain. It is establishing a preposterous doctrine for anyone to set up in behalf of this nation, after the history that we have made. Men will not invest their money in building expensive plants, which cost into the millions of dollars, and have their property wiped off the map at the dictation of a single individual. That is not government by legislation; it is government by strangulation. It is contrary to every line of law that has ever been written in this country, and flies in the face of the policy that has built this magnificent people during the century and a quarter of our national existence. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington, with a good deal of asperity, demanded of me to know how the people of his State acquired the magnificent forests that they own. I am too polite to tell him. I cite him to the records of the criminal courts of his State. [Laughter.] If he meant to say that the people of Washington had anything to do with the establishment of our claim to the Oregon country, he is entirely mistaken. Our claim was not adjudicated upon the question of our settlement, but upon the question of prior discovery, and our right to the Oregon country was established on that basis.

At the time of its settlement—the settlement of the northwest boundary—there probably were not two score of families in all the State of Washington. The Oregon country, when this settlement was made, was limited and contained a few communities along the line of the Columbia River. Washington was then a wilderness.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman last on the floor insists that the people of the West are demanding nothing but what was received by the older States. I deny it. Look at the difference, the wonderful disparity, there is between the grants of public domain to his and other new Western States and those that were granted to the States east of the Mississippi River; where one acre was given for schools, two or more have been given to those States west of the Mississippi River. Their acquisition of private title has been mainly through the homestead law, passed in 1862, and after the lands had been bought by the people of the older States and paid for. Our land grants to railways the people paid for, because the alternate sections were sold at double the minimum price, and men who settled on those lands paid for the grants given by the Government. Is that so with reference to the wagon roads innumerable in his region of the country, or of the railroad grants? Nothing of the kind occurred there. Even now these gentlemen are claiming that the homesteads should be extended to a section of land, and I have no doubt, when I look at the names and location of the gentlemen who constitute the Committee on Public Lands, but that it will be insistent that this shall be accorded to them. All of the arid lands are in fact given to these gentlemen, or at least they are appropriated to their own improvement through irrigation projects. Not so with the lands of the other States. Gentlemen, before they invite these comparisons, I would submit to them that they familiarize themselves with the procedure of the Government upon these various subjects.

The gentleman read from the laws of California. Are they to govern in this case? I do not understand that you listen very complacently to the plea of the robber, the moral right that he may set up. The very section that the gentleman from California read from the act admitting the State of California made a specific reservation of all the public lands—those that were covered with water as well as those that were dry.

The gentleman from Washington wanted to know with what complacency I would look upon a proposition to carve out fifteen counties in the splendid agricultural region of Iowa for a forest reserve. There is no propriety in a question of that kind or in a comparison of that kind. These agricultural lands are being improved by a separation from the title of the Government. They grew into value as agricultural lands through individual effort. Not so with these great wastes. It is an act of largesse on the part of the Government to improve the waste places in the mountain region, where there is no demand for individual ownership, where no settler goes, because there is no agricultural land there, or, if any, an inconsiderable amount. They are wastes, and it is the purpose of the Government to make them blossom. They are now useless, and it is the purpose of the Government to make them valuable, not simply to the locality, but to all of the people of this nation, by preserving the sources of our streams and to make possible the navigability of our rivers. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate having expired, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on the paragraph has expired, and the clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, Bureau of Chemistry: One Chemist, who shall be Chief of Bureau, $5,000; one chief clerk, $1,800; two clerks, class 4; four clerks, class 3; six clerks, class 2; one property clerk, $1,600; nine clerks, class 1; eight clerks, at $1,000 each; one assistant property custodian, $900; ten clerks, at $900 each; one engineer, $1,200; two messengers, at $840 each; one skilled mechanic, $900; three skilled laborers, at $720 each; one skilled laborer, $600; one fireman, $600; three messengers or laborers, at $600 each; three messengers or laborers, at $480 each; two messengers or laborers, at $420 each; in all, $66,720.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have been very, very much surprised at some of the statements made by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. I am not an old man, and yet my memory runs back to a homestead in good, old Iowa. I know something about the land laws even as they applied to Iowa. I have some recollection of what this Government did for its people in Iowa. I lived as a boy on a homestead in Iowa which is certainly worth more than the land which my people are now paying $45 an acre for under that act which the gentleman has referred to as being of such vast benefit to us—the national reclamation act. The family with which I lived bought 160 acres of the fairest and most fertile of Iowa lands, lying right beside our homestead, for 80 cents an acre—land given to the State of Iowa, millions of acres of it, as a swamp-land grant upon a pledge of its reclamation, which pledge, I regret to say, was never kept.

There was a tree claim lying beside the homestead, and by planting 10 acres of trees upon it—and we did plant them and watered them and they grew, for that is a tree-growing climate, that is the place to raise trees; a good place for a forest reserve—we obtained title to 160 acres of land, without money and without price; and also had the homestead clear. Final proof could have been made on that homestead within six months after we made our settlement and no Government special agent to make us afraid or hold up our patent. We could have taken then right beside these other lands 160 acres of land under the preemption law and in six months paid out on it. Those were the land laws in Iowa when I was a boy. What are the land laws now?

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman how much in all a settler could take up at the time Iowa was settled.

Mr. MONDELL. At that time a man could have acquired under the land laws of the United States 1,280 acres of land, of the best land the sun ever shone on, the most fertile. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman would not yield to an interruption from me, and I can not yield.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wanted to know where that wonderful location was, where these homesteads were taken.

Mr. MONDELL. That was in Dickinson County, in Excelsior township, west of West Okoboji Lake, a short distance from Spirit Lake. Mr. Chairman, there is not to-day under the flag a single 160 acres of land subject to homestead entry, nonirrigable, that is worth one-tenth part what that homestead was in Iowa when we settled upon it. Why, the gentleman says they paid for their lands, and he has made that statement here time and time again, as if five years' residence under the homestead law is not the highest payment that a man can possibly make for raw land. Why, we would be overjoyed if it were possible out in that western country for us to buy lands. We can not buy them. We can not purchase them at any price, except here and there there may be some rocky hillside, which you can purchase for $2.50 an acre under the timber and stone act. The gentleman has suggested that the Western States have been given more in the way of lands than Iowa. Why, Mr. Chairman, all the grants that have been made to all the Western States are not equal to the swamp-land grants made to Iowa and other Middle and Southern States, to say nothing of their cash indemnity and their school grants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. POLLARD. I object.

Mr. COCKS of New York. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I am compelled to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Laboratory, Department of Agriculture: General expenses, Bureau of Chemistry: Chemical apparatus, chemicals, and supplies, repairs to engine and apparatus, gas and electric current, official traveling and other expenses, telegraph and telephone service, express and freight charges, labor and expert work and all necessary expenses in conducting investigations in this Bureau in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and in collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such investigations; for the rent of buildings in the city of Washington and elsewhere; to investigate the effect of cold storage upon the healthfulness of foods; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the character of the chemical and physical tests which are applied to American food products in foreign countries, and to inspect before shipment, when desired by the shippers or owners of these food products, American food products intended for countries where chemical and physical tests are required before said food products are allowed to be sold in the countries mentioned, and for all necessary expenses connected with such inspection and studies of methods of analysis in foreign countries; for all expenses necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the act of June 30, 1906, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated, or misbranded, or poisonous, or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for other purposes," including rent and the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere; employing such assistants, clerks, and other persons as the Secretary of Agriculture may consider necessary for the purposes named, $725,000: Provided, That hereafter any sum used for compensation of or payment of expenses to any officer or other person employed by any State, county, or municipal government shall be reported to Congress in detail on the first Monday of December of each year.

Mr. PERKINS. I reserve a point of order to the section.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that I purposed to reserve the point of order in order to ask one or two questions of the gentleman in charge of the bill, and then, so far as I myself am concerned, to make the point of order or waive it, which of course would still leave it in the hands of the gentleman from Missouri, as I might be informed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will suspend. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] makes a point of order against the paragraph and the Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I withdraw it for the present.

Mr. PERKINS. Then I reserve a point of order against the section. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill how many years the provision to investigate the effect of cold storage upon the healthfulness of foods has been contained in this bill?

Mr. SCOTT. I can not answer by the book, but speaking from my memory I should say it has been in the bill at least six years, because I think it has been in the bill ever since I have been a member of the committee.

Mr. PERKINS. Upon what grounds can the gentleman justify making an appropriation for specific examination of that sort which is continued for all time? Certainly the effect of cold storage upon the healthfulness of food can be ascertained in less than six years, if competent men are investigating it. If, on the other hand, it is to be left indefinite with certain gentlemen, that presents a different question.

Mr. SCOTT. What the gentleman has said refreshes my memory, and I want to make this statement: The gentleman doubtless himself will recall a great deal of literature that has been published from time to time, some of it serious and much facetious, in regard to the "poison squad." The work of testing the effects of food kept under certain conditions, or kept by means of certain preservatives, has been carried on, I think, now for about three years. It was the desire of the Chief of the Bureau, in the matter of this cold storage, to continue these experiments long enough to be able to show conclusively what would result from keeping foods of various kinds in cold storage over different periods of time. The gentleman will recognize that it is impossible to test upon the same people at the same time different kinds of food. If you are testing for the effect of cold storage upon chickens, for example, you must not at the same time feed the experimenting individuals with cold-storage beef or cold-storage fish.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; but you must have other persons to experiment with. It is not well to do all the experimenting upon one man.

Mr. SCOTT. The practice has been to have experiments tried upon a small number of men. The gentleman will recognize that a large number of men are not readily available for such purposes as this, and the experiment is tried upon, I think, ten or twelve young men who voluntarily submit to the experimentation. Those ten or twelve will be a sufficient number to make a satisfactory test, but they can not try everything at once.

Mr. PERKINS. Now, can the gentleman tell us from his recollection any of these scientific tests that have gotten into this bill during the six years he has been on the committee that have gotten out of the bill; can he tell us one?

Mr. SCOTT. I appreciate the gentleman's question, and offhand I can only make this statement: We authorized, five or six years ago, an investigation to be undertaken with a view of determining whether it might be possible and profitable to manufacture sirups in such a way that they would keep without a preservative. That work, I am happy to say, has been concluded. There have been other experiments undertaken, particularly with reference to the development of the sugar-beet industry, that have been concluded. Doubtless other investigations which I do not now recall have been concluded. This is a question, I may say, which the committee never fails to ask of every chief of a scientific bureau who comes before it, as to whether or not he has finished some of the work that we have given him to do, but for the most part——

Mr. PERKINS. He has not.

Mr. SCOTT. I am obliged to say that much of the work is like Tennyson's brook—it "flows on forever."

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman in reference to another section which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to inspect, free of charge, certain food products to be sent to foreign countries. I would like to ask him how much our Government expends, if he can tell, in the inspection, free of charge, of these products for use in foreign markets?

Mr. SCOTT. I am obliged to say I am unable to answer the gentleman's question. I do not know the exact sum that is spent in this work.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman think that expense of this sort, requested by the shipper for the benefit of the shipper, should be defrayed by the Government? Why should not the information desired be given by the proper officials, but at least the Government be indemnified, and not paternally do it for nothing?

Mr. SCOTT. There is abundant precedent for this action. The gentleman will remember that the Government defrays the expense of meat inspection——

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; but the gentleman will——

Mr. SCOTT. The Government defrays the expense involved in the issue of the certificates of inspection to those who ship grain abroad.

Mr. PERKINS. But the gentleman will remember also that very many doubted at the time, and have since, the propriety of the Government's paying the expenses of meat inspection.

Mr. MANN. Why does the gentleman say that this is free inspection?

Mr. PERKINS. Because it says the Secretary of Agriculture shall do it, and he is not authorized to charge anything for it. It says the Secretary of Agriculture shall inspect before shipment, when desired by the shippers, American food products.

Mr. MANN. Where is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. PERKINS. I am reading on page 27, at lines 17 to 23. He is directed to do it, but is not authorized to charge. He could not charge under this.

Mr. MANN. Certainly he could, and I think he does.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not think he does.

Mr. MANN. This section does not require him to do that.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not at all agree with the gentleman. An appropriation is made for the expense of making certain investigations. The Secretary of Agriculture, when requested, is ordered to make them. He must make them; he must furnish them; the law says so. He has no right to turn around and say the law requires him to do this, but you must pay for it.

Mr. MANN. This is to direct the Secretary to do this. He can not do it and take pay for it.

Mr. PERKINS. Not without authority of law.

Mr. MANN. He can not do it at all without the appropriation.

Mr. PERKINS. And he can not charge for it without authority of law.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to say that I think the practice is entirely defensible. The value of this inspection to the foreign purchaser and its effect upon him—and hence its value to the American exporter—must depend very largely upon the fact that it is a Government inspection.

Mr. PERKINS. I can understand that.

Mr. SCOTT. And for that reason I believe it is an expense that is entirely warranted.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not object to the practice. The question is, Why should it not be paid for by those who receive the benefit? It seems it might be a useful practice.

Mr. SCOTT. One reason it ought not to be paid for is that it would lay the product upon which the inspection certificate is issued open to the attack on the part of our competitors that it was not a Government inspection, but a packer's or food manufacturer's inspection, and it would be discounted accordingly.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I will make the point of order to the following words, in lines 13 and 14, on page 27:

To investigate the effect of cold storage upon the healthfulness of foods.

That has been carried in different bills, but it is not authorized by any permanent law. It is carried as current law.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order for a moment?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the effect of cold storage upon the healthfulness of foods can not be determined in one year, or two years, or three years with any success. It would be, in my judgment, a calamity to stop the investigation now being carried on, which, in a short time, if it proceeds, will be of some value, but which, if stopped now, all of the expense which has heretofore been incurred will be practically valueless.

A few years ago—I do not know but it was largely upon my own suggestion in connection with the investigation which resulted in the pure-food law—I specially asked Doctor Wiley to commence the investigation as to the effect of long-continued cold storage upon some classes of meats, fowls, eggs, and so forth. I asked him to put away in cold storage some of these classes of foods, with the idea of keeping them from one, two, three, four, five, six, or more years, in order that we might have an authoritative investigation and statement as to the effect upon these articles of this cold storage. The municipalities throughout the country, now endeavoring in a way to regulate cold storage, desire to have this information; the States desire the information, and the General Government desires the information. The Army, the Navy, all of the Departments which deal in commissary supplies are exceedingly anxious to have this information. The cost is nominal. There is very little expense attached to it. It is simply a matter of keeping a few articles in cold-storage warehouses, and once in a while taking a part of them out for investigation. The cost is merely nominal. The value is exceedingly great. Either the Government must do this or else for our investigations we must rely entirely upon the cold-storage warehouses, who are not unprejudiced or unbiased.

They believe, and think it is to their interest to claim, that all articles in cold storage do not deteriorate. Why should we not obtain the information? I hope the gentleman from New York will not interfere with this investigation which I am pushing along, knowing it will be of great value, and which costs practically nothing.

Mr. PERKINS. I regret to do anything which my friend from Illinois thinks will bring calamity on the land; but, Mr. Chairman, occasionally the devotees of science require a certain amount of stimulation from this body. As the gentleman in charge of the bill has said, item after item, new branch after new branch of investigation comes into this bill, and rarely, indeed, does any item of investigation ever get out of the bill. Now, if scientific investigation is of value, it must be because it brings results. If it is carried on generation after generation without results, without obtaining information, even my friend from Illinois can not wish it to be continued. When it comes to articles of cold storage and their damaging effect upon health, we know that the vast mass of all cold storage is kept but a very few months. If it is poisonous to the system, it does not take years to ascertain that result. If the poison is so subtle that a man may live twenty years afterwards before it gets out, we may practically discharge that as hardly a question worth while considering. When it comes to articles kept for years: First, they, of course, must be exceedingly rare; and second, if they are kept, the Government can have them if they can be found. If articles are kept in storage for one year or five years, they can be found, and if it is a question of such vast interest, it is not necessary for the Government itself to keep them for five years in cold storage. If such things do exist they can be found and can be investigated.

Mr. MANN. How would the gentleman find them?

Mr. PERKINS. If the thing exists, with all the science there is at the call of this great Government and in the Department, they can be found.

Mr. MANN. How does the gentleman know that? They would not be able to get them if this provision is taken away. The gentleman would strike out the provision that would authorize them to get them.

Mr. PERKINS. They could be had without the Government turning itself into a cold-storage factory.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman knew, and the gentleman is well informed——

Mr. PERKINS. Not very.

Mr. MANN. That a large share of the oysters which the gentleman eats, that a large share of the eggs that the gentleman eats, that most of the turkeys and chickens which the gentleman eats have all been dressed and have been a year in a cold-storage warehouse or in cold storage, and much of it has been kept for years and years; that practically all the eggs which the gentleman eats have been in cold storage, and that it is claimed it is much deteriorated, then the gentleman would like to know and obtain that information which would enable him to know the quality of the food that he is eating.

Mr. PERKINS. The illustration of my friend from Illinois is a little unfortunate. I have no doubt that I have all the years of my life, which are more than 21, I regret to say, eaten oysters and eggs and all sorts of products filled with all sorts of germs, which my friend says the Government at great expense should have investigated, and which might have produced the evil results of poison. Now, when I am over 50, I am glad to be able to say to the gentleman that I have not had a sick day in my life.

Mr. MANN. But it is only recently that the cold-storage business has grown in this country.

Mr. PERKINS. We have had cold storage for years. We have been dealing with it since 1878. We have been struggling for thirty years with the poisonous products of cold storage, without the assistance of a Government bureau to ascertain the deleterious effects which must result.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about that. We have not had cold storage for thirty years. This cold-storage business has been developed within the last few years. When the gentleman eats shad in the spring in Washington, it is likely spring-caught shad, but nearly all the shad caught in the Potomac are put in cold storage, and when the gentleman eats so-called "spring shad" it is shad that probably was caught a year or two ago. Now, the gentleman has a wonderful constitution, but I hope the gentleman will not be opposed to our obtaining the information that may protect our health.

Mr. PERKINS. But my friend from Illinois has spent years in Washington and has been exposed all those years to poisoned shad, and he is still in good health of body and vigor of mind.

Mr. MANN. The "gentleman from Illinois" can assure the gentleman from New York, from the knowledge that he has obtained of the storage business here, including practically every food product kept in cold storage that we all eat, that there are any number of cases where cold-storage articles have gone out and through ptomaine poison have made people sick and in some cases caused death, yet the gentleman does not desire to permit an investigation of the subject.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard a moment on the point of order. It seems to me it is not well taken. The organic act upon which the Department of Agriculture rests gives the Secretary of Agriculture power "to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture, in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word." Now, the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, when he appeared before the committee, made the statement that as a result of these investigations into the effect of cold storage upon food he had already discovered facts showing just how long fruits can be kept in cold storage without damage. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is eminently in the interest of agriculture that information as to the length of time fruit can be kept in cold storage without deterioration should be learned and that information diffused among the people. He continues further:

We can now tell a cold-storage egg without asking whether it has been kept in cold storage, and we can tell how long it may be kept in cold storage and still be fit for food.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, as if this information is of very great value to the agricultural interests of this country.

He went further and said that his investigations had shown that in a general way meats were improved for about six weeks by being kept in cold storage, while game and poultry improved perhaps for a period of three months, but that fish and eggs began to deteriorate from the hour that they were put in cold storage. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that all of this information is obviously in the interest of agriculture, and therefore that under the act authorizing the Department this bill has a right to carry forward these investigations.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I only wish to say a word, because repeatedly the general clause to which the gentleman from Kansas has just referred has been cited as covering everything that might by any possibility be of any use, and repeatedly it has been held that various specific things like this could not be justified under the general grant of authority.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, agriculture is one thing and medical science is another. They are just as distinct as the Navy is from the Army. A battle ship is proper in a naval appriation bill, but it would be out of order in an Army appropriation bill. This provision directs a certain investigation of articles kept in cold storage to ascertain whether they are wholesome. It may be important for the agriculturist that he should gain in health as well as in wealth, but, after all, the agricultural bill refers to agriculture, the tillage of the soil. The care of health, the investigation to see what effects are produced upon the human system by different articles, may be valuable and useful, but it is not agriculture.

Mr. MANN. I should like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I am inclined to think myself that upon the face of the bill the item to investigate the effect of cold storage upon the healthfulness of food would be subject to a point of order, but the rule in question, Rule XXII, provides that—

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

Now, this is a continuing appropriation, continuing an object which is now in progress, which can not be finished in one year, which could not have been completed, as a matter of fact, up to this time. Appropriations have been made and expended, the work is now being carried on, the articles are in cold-storage warehouses, subject to further inspection by the Government. The work can not be completed within the existing fiscal year, and hence, it seems to me, that it is an object already in progress under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question on the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Has it not been decided on several occasions that the term "object already in progress" refers to some tangible thing, some structure like a bridge or a building, and not to an investigation or an inquiry like this? I think the gentleman will find several decisions defining that term and to that effect.

Mr. MANN. I think that is correct; but what I am seeking to call attention to is the fact that there is an object, a particular thing—not theoretical, but the thing itself—the cold-storage article already in possession of the Government. The object itself is within the control of the Government. The objects of the investigation—not a theoretical investigation merely, not an academic question, not purely a question of chemical analysis, but an investigation of objects in cold storage—are now under the control of the Government in the storage warehouses. If this goes out of the bill, these articles will be thrown away.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman think that if he put in an additional egg each year this work would for all time necessarily continue?

Mr. MANN. I am not in the habit of answering theoretical questions of that sort. I am willing to consider the question as it exists.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I have only one further suggestion to make, and that is that the same point of order that would strike out the phrase in question would strike down practically all of the investigations now being carried on by the Department of Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is exceedingly unfortunate that the point of order should be raised upon a provision of this kind, which has been included in bills heretofore for two or three years, and upon what must necessarily be more or less of a continuing nature, and thereby prevent the Committee of the Whole from passing upon the merits of the proposition. But the precedents of the House are all in favor of the point of order, both upon the question of the investigation itself and upon the point raised by the gentleman from Illinois. The precedents may be summed up in this language:

Investigations of foods in their relation to commerce and consumption were held not authorized by law in such a way as to permit an appropriation on the agricultural appropriation bill.

And, on the point raised by the gentleman from Illinois, that this is a continuing work, the precedents are all clearly against the position taken by the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair, therefore, is forced to sustain the point of order. The Clerk will read.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CURRIER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4748. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to define and punish crimes in the district of Alaska, and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said district," approved March 3, 1899.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendment, bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 13735. An act to correct the military record of Micaiah R. Evans.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "counties," line 3, page 27, "to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make demonstrations of the different processes of manufacturing denatured alcohol, and such other demonstrations as he may think advisable, at the corn exposition to be held in Omaha next October."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to that.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, it is barely possible that this is subject to a point of order under the rulings of the Chair, but I must confess that it seems to me that the ruling of the Chair is pretty farfetched.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is at perfect liberty to appeal.

Mr. POLLARD. I realize that, Mr. Chairman. This is a proposition to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the spirit of the law, or rather the organic act creating the Department of Agriculture, and to diffuse agricultural information.

Congress passed a law two years ago removing the tax on denatured alcohol. Since that time the Secretary has been carrying on investigations, endeavoring to reduce to practical use some method of manufacturing denatured alcohol out of refuse farm products. He has been carrying on the investigation for two years and perhaps for a longer period, and this amendment is to enable him to diffuse that information, and it seems to me that it is clearly within the rules of the House. I do not see how it can be otherwise. If he has the authority to make the investigation, if he has the authority to accumulate the information, why has not he the authority to disseminate the information? It seems to me that the one follows the other necessarily, and that it is clearly in order under the rules of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of Agriculture has no authority to go to the county fair at Podunk County and enter into any exhibition, and he has no more authority to go to the exposition at Omaha. If the gentleman's proposition was in order, it would be in order to provide for his expenses at Tokyo.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does not the denatured-alcohol bill provide the manner for the manufacture of alcohol and prohibit its manufacture in any other way, and would not this amendment be a modification or a change of that law, for it enables the Secretary of Agriculture to set up a still at the exposition and manufacture without the restriction that the denatured-alcohol law imposes upon distilleries?

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not know, but I would be inclined on that point to think that the Agricultural Department had authority to make investigations in relation to denatured alcohol.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I will say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] that the denatured-alcohol bill does not authorize the Secretary of Agriculture or anybody else to make denatured alcohol nor tell what they shall make it of. It gives him authority to denature alcohol, and that is all there is to that bill or ever was.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does not the law generally, the statute upon which it is based, prohibit the manufacture or distilling of alcohol except under certain restrictions?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It does not interfere at all with the distilling of alcohol.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My proposition was not that the denatured-alcohol bill itself did, but that the internal-revenue laws prohibited the manufacture of alcohol, excepting under certain restrictions, and the effect of this amendment would be to modify those restrictions in favor of the Secretary of Agriculture for certain purposes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the gentleman had said that in the first place, I would not have corrected him.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I ought to have been more explicit, I confess.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I just want to make one observation in regard to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. As I understood him, he made the assertion that the Secretary of Agriculture had no authority to go out to Omaha and undertake to diffuse information any more than he had to go to any other place. Of course I grant that is true, but the statute under which this information is diffused is not limited. He is authorized to diffuse that information in any way he sees fit, at any place he sees fit. To-day they are carrying on demonstrations all over the country, with private individuals, with cooperative associations, with State experiment stations, in various lines. It seems to me that if he has authority to diffuse this information at all, he has authority to diffuse it at Omaha when Congress, in an appropriation bill, authorizes that work to be done. The organic act authorizes him to diffuse information. It is general. We have power in an appropriation bill to provide an appropriation for carrying on work or doing work that is authorized by general law. I contend that this is authorized by general law, and inasmuch as it is, it is in order on an appropriation bill to insert an appropriation to carry on that work.

The CHAIRMAN. If this is authorized by general law, then this appropriation is in order.

Mr. POLLARD. Can not I read the Chairman the statute?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman to permit him to call the gentleman's attention to one precedent only, which, it seems to the Chair, is decisive of the whole matter:

A provision to appropriate for compiling tests of dairy cows at an exposition was held not to be authorized as an expenditure by general law giving to the Secretary of Agriculture authority to acquire and diffuse information pertaining to agriculture.

The Chair does not see how it could possibly get around that precedent in favor of the proposition of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. POLLARD]. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF SOILS.

Salaries, Bureau of Soils: One Soil Physicist, who shall be Chief of Bureau, $3,500; one chief clerk, $2,000; two clerks, class 4; one clerk, class 3; three clerks, class 2; six clerks, class 1; one draftsman, $1,200; one draftsman, $1,000; four clerks, at $1,000 each; three clerks, at $840 each; one carpenter, $840; one photographer, $1,000; one messenger, $720; one messenger or laborer, $480; one charwoman or laborer, $480; one messenger boy, $360; in all, $34,700.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "dollars," in line 5, page 29, the following:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the making of any topographical surveys."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman's amendment would be pertinent to the next paragraph, but not to this. This is a question of salaries altogether.

Mr. MADDEN. Very well; I will withhold it. I wish to have it pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be treated as pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

Soil investigations: General expenses, Bureau of Soils: Investigation of the relation of soils to climate and organic life; for the investigation of the texture and composition of soils in the field and laboratory; for the investigation of the cause and prevention of the rise of alkali in the soils of the irrigated districts; the investigation of the relation of soils to drainage and seepage waters; for investigations of soils and for indicating upon maps or plats, by coloring or otherwise, the results of such investigations; to map the tobacco soils of the United States; to investigate the soils and conditions of tobacco growth in Cuba, Sumatra, and other tobacco-competing countries; rent, and the employment of labor in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; for materials, tools, instruments, apparatus, gas, and electric current, furniture, and supplies; for telegraph and telephone service, and for official traveling expenses, freight and express charges, and other necessary expenses, $170,000.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi and Mr. MADDEN rose.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi will withhold for a moment, as the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois was offered and is pending. The Clerk will report again the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to prevent the Agricultural Department from spending any part of the money appropriated for the conduct of this Bureau in making topographical surveys, and the reason for that is that the Geological Survey is continually making topographical surveys, and these surveys are supplied to the Agricultural Department if they are needed. It is thought to be unwise to have the Agricultural Department and the Geological Survey both making these surveys.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I have a letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Soils and the Secretary of Agriculture, saying no topographical surveys are made in the Bureau of Soils. It seems to me, therefore, the amendment is entirely unnecessary, but I do not see that it will do any harm, and I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, and I ask the attention of my colleague to it, while it is true that the Bureau of Soils makes no topographical surveys, still they do make a survey that in a sense might be called topographical. They examine as to the condition and contour of the surface of the ground and report upon it where they make a survey, and it is necessary to do this to make a soil survey. They get the topographic sheet wherever it has been published by the Geological Bureau and take that in the first place, but where there is no topographic sheet they must report upon the contour of the ground. No topographical survey is made like the one that is made by the Geological Department, but a sufficient topographical survey is made to describe the contour of the ground and the character of the soil, without which they can not carry on the soil investigation.

Mr. MADDEN. Could not all that be made by the Geological Survey?

Mr. MANN. But I will state to the gentleman that there is a demand here every time the sundry civil bill is considered, a violent and most energetic demand on the part of Members of this House off the Committee on Appropriations, to increase the appropriation for the topographic survey in order that they may have these maps for the use of the Bureau of Soils, but the Committee on Appropriations has never been willing to make as large an appropriation as some gentlemen desire in order to accommodate the Bureau of Soils. Very often it happens that there has been no topographic surveys made in a territory. Take the gentleman's State and mine. Topographical surveys have been mostly made in the county of Cook or along the Des Plaines and Illinois rivers, where there is no need for a soil survey, and there is no occasion for making soil surveys in my district, all of which has been surveyed topographically, and the gentleman's district has been surveyed topographically, and nobody wants to have a soil survey in a thickly settled portion of a city like Chicago, represented by my distinguished colleague, but down in the State where there has been no geological or topographical survey made, that is where they want the soil survey made. There is no occasion for the Geological Department to make a survey at all. Now, while it is not technically a topographical survey, still the word "topographical" refers to the contour of the ground, and it might be held that they could make no soil survey there at all.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will my friend yield for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will it not be now a matter of common discretion as to whether Secretary Wilson and the other Bureau duplicate their work? In short, they would not do so, unless absolutely necessary to do their respective duties?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand wherever there is a topographical survey made by the Geological Bureau they at once in the soil survey take the topographic sheet and use it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Of course, and they do not duplicate their work at all.

Mr. MANN. That work is not duplicated.

Mr. GRIGGS and Mr. MADDEN rose.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard a moment on this important matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has the floor.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to ask my colleague [Mr. MANN] if we are to understand that the work of the topographical surveying is not duplicated at all, but that where the Department of Agriculture makes a survey the Geological Survey then never repeats that same survey?

Mr. MANN. I would not undertake to say that much. Where the geological survey has been made there is no topographical survey by the Bureau of Soils. But it may happen, and probably will, that the Bureau of Soils makes its contour survey before any topographical survey has been made by the Geological Bureau, and subsequently the Geological Bureau may make a topographical map of that section of the country. But there is no duplication of work so far as that is concerned.

Mr. GRIGGS and Mr. GAINES of Tennessee rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield to my friend from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS], if he wants to ask me a question.

Mr. GRIGGS. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois, and also the author of this amendment at the same time, if the striking out of the word "topographical" and the insertion of the word "geological" would not settle this matter definitely?

Mr. MANN. I am not able to say.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have had a practical experience in this matter in my district in the soil survey there several years ago.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement made by my colleague to the effect that the Department of Agriculture makes no topographical survey except where it wants to get the contour of the earth prior to making a soil survey——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is as far as it goes, so far as I know.

Mr. MADDEN. And the topographical survey proper is always made by the Geological Survey. I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless objection is heard, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] will be considered as withdrawn.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 22, page 29, strike out all after the word "expenses," and insert "$333,460."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] if we can not come to an agreement on the length of time during which this amendment shall be debated?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, may I have read now and considered as pending an amendment to the amendment that has just been offered?

Mr. SCOTT. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] to the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of said appropriation shall be expended otherwise than for a fair distribution of the work of the Bureau of Soils among the States according to their area and agricultural importance: And provided further, That no preference in the expenditure of said appropriation shall be made in behalf of any locality because it is in a State which has made appropriation to aid in such work.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to that amendment.

Mr. GRIGGS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question. If an agreement is entered into as to the time for debate on this particular amendment, will that exclude other amendments afterwards?

Mr. SCOTT. It will not exclude other amendments, but it will exclude debate on other amendments. We want to finish debate on this paragraph at as early a time as possible, and I would like to ask the question——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will state to the Chairman of the committee that I hope there will be no curtailment of debate on this proposition. It is one in which there is a great deal of interest on this side of the House, and one that we think is of equal importance with the provisions of the bill that have gone before and have been very generously discussed. Since he sent for me yesterday afternoon and asked me to inquire about the matter I have done so, and I find on this side of the House requests for three hours' debate on this item.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think, in view of the attitude of that side of the House in wasting time when it is not necessary, that they ought to take three hours on this proposition?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will answer that by saying this, that for the past two days—that is, yesterday and to-day—we have been discussing one paragraph in this bill, and all of the discussion was by that side of the House. Whether wasted or not I am unable to say. It was certainly wasted on a good many Members of the House.

Mr. MANN. I was not referring to the discussion; I was referring to the time that was wasted on divisions, like the division on the question of taking up this bill at all, where every gentleman on that side of the House voted against considering the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I do not think the gentleman is accurate in that statement, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SCOTT. I think the gentleman from Mississippi must recognize at this stage of the consideration of the bill it would be almost preposterous to grant three hours' time to debate an amendment to one paragraph on each side of the House, which is six hours' debate altogether. I move that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in an hour and a half.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I have an amendment; and will not the gentleman allow ten minutes' debate on that amendment?

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to make this request, Mr. Chairman, that if any amendments besides those already offered are intended to this paragraph that unanimous consent be given that they be read now and be regarded as pending if there are any of them. I shall have to insist on my orginial motion because I think it is very liberal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves that all debate upon the pending amendment and all amendments thereto be closed in one hour and a half.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I move to make that one hour and forty minutes.

Mr. SCOTT. I will accept that amendment if that will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas as modified.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to say that I think that a point of order has been raised by the chairman of the committee against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, and it strikes me that ought to be disposed of now, before we have any debate.

Mr. SCOTT. I did not reserve a point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi, but I did reserve it against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. No point of order was reserved against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment to increase the appropriation made in the bill to meet the estimate of the Bureau of Soils. The increase is $120,000 in the matter of soil surveys and $43,000 for the utilization work. In the limited time it will be impossible for me to go into the details and merits of this proposition. In general debate I discussed it fully. I want now to call attention to some statements made by the chairman of the committee in his remarks upon this particular subject. He stated, among other things, that the soil surveys, in his opinion, were practically useless unless they were followed by the utilization work, which demonstrate the uses that the soil survey indicated the land could be put to. Yet in the bill, as it appears now, the appropriation for making the soil surveys is increased $37,000, and the appropriation for the utilization work, without which, according to the opinion of the chairman, the survey is practically useless, is reduced $37,000. That is, I submit, Mr. Chairman, an unwise course to pursue. It is, according to the chairman of the committee—and indorsed, as I understand, by the committee—an increase of $37,000 for a purpose which, in his opinion, is useless without the utilization work.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What is the utilization?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The utilization is the demonstration crop made by another corps of men sent out by the Bureau after the soil survey is made to discover if the soils which in the opinion of the Bureau are adapted to certain plant life are in fact so adapted. For instance, they sent experts down to Texas, to Alabama, to Connecticut, and made surveys of the soil, and after making a physical and chemical analysis of them and noting the relation they bore to similar soils elsewhere, it was the opinion of the Chief of the Bureau that they were adapted to the culture of Sumatra leaf tobacco. He then sent the utilization men down here, and they made a demonstration crop. They believed that certain of these lands would grow certain varieties and grades of tobacco. They made the experiment. It did grow the tobacco, and the revenue which the Federal Government has collected from the tobacco grown as the result of these experiments has exceeded already the cost of making the soil survey and the demonstration crop. [Applause.] They did the same thing in the alkali lands of the West. A soil survey was made, and then the utilization men followed it, and they demonstrated that alfalfa and other plants could succeed in the alkali lands of the West.

I want to get these facts clearly before the House, so that there will be no confusion. Under our custom of providing for many subjects in one paragraph and making a lump sum appropriation for all it is difficult to segregate the amounts intended to be appropriated for the different items included in the paragraph. This amendment proposes to increase the total for the Bureau of Soils by $163,000, and I want the House to understand clearly why this sum is pitched upon. The totals for the Bureau are submitted in estimates which set out in detail the several purposes to which it will be devoted. Last year $80,000 was expended in making the soil surveys and $37,000 in the utilization work, a total for the two purposes of $117,000. This bill carries that same amount, but with the understanding that the whole of the $117,000 shall be used in making the soil surveys and none of it in the utilization work. We are assured by the committee that the Bureau of Plant Industry will take over this utilization work, but the fact remains that no additional appropriation is given that Bureau for this work, and the result therefore is that, while the burden of doing the utilization work, which last year was done by the Bureau of Soils with this $37,000, is turned over to the Bureau of Plant Industry, no additional funds are provided that Bureau to do the work with.

The $37,000 is to be retained by the Bureau of Soils to be used exclusively for soil surveys, which the chairman assures us are practically useless without this demonstration work follows them. There are now on file more than 400 applications for these soil surveys, but under the appropriation carried in this bill only 59 of them can be made. At that rate it will require fifty years to finish the work which, in the opinion of the Department, ought to be done. England began in the early days of the last century to make these very soil surveys which we are now making, and to follow them up with the same utilization work which we propose to do, and the yield of her acres has increased while ours is diminishing. France, Germany, all the progressive countries of the Old World have done the same thing and everywhere the same result has followed. The Bureau asks, in the estimates this year, for an increase both for the surveys and for the utilization work. The estimate is for forty survey parties at $5,000 each and for twenty-five utilization parties at $3,200 each. In other words, for $200,000 for the surveys and $80,000 for the utilization work. My amendment proposes to so increase the appropriation carried in the total of this paragraph as to give this sum. The bill now carries $117,000 for these two purposes—or, rather, for the single purpose of making the surveys—and my amendment proposes an increase of $163,000 so as to bring the total up to $280,000 for both purposes, the amount asked for in the estimates.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me impress upon the House once more that the transfer to the Bureau of Plant Industry of the duty of doing this utilization work carries with it no additional appropriation to do the work with; and the $37,000 which was last year used by the Bureau of Soils in this utilization work is left with that Bureau this year, to be devoted exclusively to survey work, which the chairman himself tells us is practically useless without the utilization work follows it.

One more suggestion, Mr. Chairman: The bureau that makes the survey, and which ascertains its relation and adaptation to plant life, so far as that can be done theoretically, is more likely to prosecute with energy, earnestness, and success any work which has for its purpose to demonstrate the correctness of that theory than some other bureau which had nothing to do with the survey and perhaps no sympathy with the theory advanced.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I also ask unanimous consent that all who speak on this paragraph have permission to extend remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. General permission is not within the authority of the committee to grant.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to alternate in his recognition.

Mr. SCOTT. I shall be glad to have some one on the minority side recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB].

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, in a few words I will answer, I hope to the satisfaction of the members of this committee, the proposition laid down by the gentleman who has just completed his remarks. In the first place, no doubt, this request comes from the Chief of this Bureau. He, of course, is interested in these soil surveys, as are very many men on this side of the Chamber. The only difference between the gentleman who has just expressed himself and the members of the committee is that while we are in favor of these soil surveys we want the Bureau of Plant Industry to do the utilization and practical work after the surveys are made. We do not propose to duplicate this work.

In other words, we do not propose to have the agents of the Soil Survey going through the country demonstrating what can be done after the survey is made, because we think that is a function that belongs entirely to the Bureau of Plant Industry. This Bureau of Plant Industry is well equipped. It has this work well in hand, and is performing this service to the satisfaction of the country. Now, it is true, as has been stated, that it will probably take, under the present plan, about fifteen or twenty years to do all this soil-survey work; but bear in mind that it is not necessary at all to have the soil of every county in the United States surveyed. A whole group of counties in a Congressional district, having the same character of soil, will be reached and the results obtained by a survey, perhaps, of one or two counties in that district. I know this applies to my district, and to, perhaps, a hundred districts represented on this floor. This question was answered this morning by a gentleman who stated that there was no occasion for soil survey in his immediate district at all. In addition to that, the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry has informed me that he can demonstrate this work, and can utilize these soil surveys as fast as they are made.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman say that the Bureau of Plant Industry can do that?

Mr. LAMB. That is what the Chief of that Bureau told me.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. There is the sum of $37,000 that was used by the Bureau of Soils in making these demonstrations and utilizations. That work will not be done further by the Bureau of Soils, but will have to be done by the Bureau of Plant Industry. Now, there is no increase made in the appropriation for the Bureau of Plant Industry, so you require the work to be done with an appropriation of $37,000 less than they had last year.

Mr. LAMB. I think there is the authority right in the Bureau of Plant Industry to cover this subject.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. There is no question about the authority, but it is a question of appropriation. You do not give them the money.

Mr. LAMB. I think this committee has been liberal to both of these Bureaus, and am satisfied the Bureau of Plant Industry has funds sufficient for the work. In my humble judgment the Soils Bureau should always have been a division of the Bureau of Plant Industry, and could have done this work in connection with that Bureau.

In 1896 this appropriation was $15,000; in 1898 it was $15,000; in 1900 it was increased to $26,000; in 1902 to $109,000; in 1903 to $169,000; in 1905, to $214,000. In 1906 it was $204,000. We have given them this year $204,000, which in the mature and well-considered judgment of the committee they deem to be a sufficient amount for the Bureau of Soils.

As I said before, this is the best digested and maturely considered bill that the Agricultural Committee has reported to this House for ten years, and I ask my friends on this side of the House to stand by the committee in this report. It is in the interest of economy; it is conservative; it does no wrong to anybody; it does no injustice to the Bureau; it gives them as much as they had before, and they can make these surveys, and the Bureau of Plant Industry can utilize the work that they do. I hope it will be your pleasure to stand by the Agricultural Committee in this report.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which has just been offered by my colleague [Mr. HUMPHREYS] is the result of much careful consideration and conference among those Members of the House who believe that the soil survey is of the highest practical advantage, not only to the real farmers, but to the whole country, and that the amount appropriated by this bill for soil-survey work, viz, $170,000, is wholly inadequate for that service.

This amendment increases the appropriation $163,460, of which it is expected $120,000 will be expended in actual surveys and $43,000 in utilization work. It will bring the soil-survey appropriation up to $333,460, to which is to be added $34,700 for salaries, clerical and expert services in the Bureau, making a total of $368,160 for all branches and departments of the Bureau. To my mind this sum is exceedingly moderate, if not positively small.

Early in the session, recognizing the importance of this work, I introduced a bill to make the total appropriation for this branch of the Agricultural Department $500,000, and I still think that sum should be provided, but after careful consideration and conference those of us who are friendly to this work and want to see it pushed and extended have concluded that it is perhaps best to advance gradually, and that the proposed amendment has a better chance of adoption than one large enough to meet the real needs of the situation as we see it. In this view of the matter I fully concur, and in advocating the amendment I desire to go somewhat into the history and character of this work.

The soils of the United States are by far the greatest natural resource of the country from which wealth is derived and the greatest endowment of the American people.

Previous to 1894 no effort had been made by the Government to inquire into the extent and possibilities of the utilization of the inherent resources bound up in the soils of the country. Of the appropriation for that year a small sum—$2,000—was set aside from the lump sum for the general expenses of the Weather Bureau for "investigations of the relation of climate to organic life." With this allotment there was organized in the Weather Bureau a division of agricultural soils. From this small beginning the present independent Bureau of Soils had its origin. From the time of its first inception to the present the character of the work of the Bureau has been of fundamental importance to all agriculture, and its value to the tillers of the soil can not be overestimated.

Its importance and value has been frequently noted and commented upon with favor by the Secretary of Agriculture. In his report for 1905 he says:

> The work of the Bureau of Soils is of such a fundamental character that its results are being more and more widely used, not only by the other bureaus and divisions of the departmental work, but by State agricultural experiment stations and State geological and economic surveys, as a foundation for further work along highly specialized lines. At the same time that the demands upon the Bureau for additional work are increasing, the facilities for accomplishing this work have remained stationary, or in one case, have been decreased.

And again, in the same report:

> The soils of the United States are considered as the greatest natural economic endowment of the American people, far exceeding in the value of their annual products all of the returns secured from mines and fisheries. It is the purpose of the soil-survey work to outline the most economical method of securing the utmost efficiency in the handling of these soils and in the production of food products from them. The questions involved concern not only the farmers themselves, but also every person interested in labor, commerce, manufacturing, or professional life. The problems are fundamental.

Speaking of the practical usefulness of such surveys, at page 55 of the same report he says:

> Surveys of single areas of this description have furnished prospective settlers with information which has prevented the unwise investment or total loss of thousands of dollars, in many instances constituting every dollar possessed by the individual. At the same time these settlers have been directed to lands within the same areas where their investments could be made with safety and their new homes established without risk of disappointment. The actual settler has thus been benefited, and new communities have secured advance information which only years of bitter experience would have furnished them under their own undirected efforts.
> It will thus be seen that the soil-survey reports and maps concern not only those engaged in the broad study of economic agriculture and its resources in the United States, but that they are of high value for daily use by a great variety of agricultural and commercial interests. The increase of the use thus made of the maps and reports is evidenced both by the requests received for reports already published and by the requests which are continually being made for additional surveys.
> A constant study is being made of the cotton soils of the Southern States. These communities have shown wonderful progress both in agriculture and manufacturing during the past decade. The study of soils in the Yazoo and Red River basins of Mississippi and Louisiana has shown ideal soil and climatic conditions for the continued production of maximum cotton crops.
> Similarly, the upland cotton regions have been found to present two dominant soil problems. The first is that of preventing the bodily removal of the fertile surface soil through erosion; the second is that of securing such a rotation of crops and use of green manures as will restore the organic matter to soils depleted by long-continued clean cultivation in one crop. Both of these problems can be met and are being met by enterprising farmers in nearly every community where soil surveys have been made. The mere statement of these problems and the accounts given of cases where their solution has been worked out are of inestimable value to the planters whose attention has not formerly been called to the work already done by their own neighbors and by their local authorities.

He opens his report for 1906 as to soils with this language:

> Underlying all attempts to improve the general agricultural welfare of the country lies the necessity for a correct knowledge of the character and variety of its soils. Such knowledge is fundamental, and without it no great progress can be made in securing further diversification of crops, the introduction of new crops, or the more economical production of the great staples now known.

And further on in the report says:

> Before the farmers of all sections of the United States can reduce agriculture to a basis of permanent business success the knowledge of these facts must be thoroughly disseminated and fully understood.
> Each year brings an increasing number of requests for survey work in particular localities to serve a great diversity of interests.. The development of new lands in the United States has not ceased and the need for specific and unprejudiced information concerning soils in newly developed regions has become widely recognized.

And in his report for 1907, the last, submitted at the opening of this session of Congress, he sums up the matter as follows:

> With a more thorough knowledge of the soil and its adaptation to crops and the proper methods of soil management, the full extent of the agricultural development which may take place in the United States in the future is very great. The undeveloped portions of the United States are not confined wholly to the arid West, portions of which are now rapidly filling up, although this constitutes the greater part.
> The soil-survey work of the Bureau is the largest undertaking of the kind that has ever been inaugurated in any country. The area surveyed and mapped during the past fiscal year was 20,560 square miles, or 13,158,400 acres, and there have been completed to June 30, 1907, surveys covering a total of 139,247 square miles, or 89,118,080 acres. This area is more than 15 per cent of the amount represented by the farm lands of the United States.

> That the amount of money annually invested in fertilizers by the farmers of the country, now amounting to upward of $100,000,000, will continue to increase seems certain. But just as certainly a large percentage of the money—perhaps a third—is annually wasted and brings no adequate return, owing to a lack of understanding of the soil's requirements.

> It has been found that infertility in soils is very frequently due to the presence of bodies deleterious to plant growth, and the difficult task of isolating and identifying these bodies and studying their effects on plant growth has been undertaken in the work of this Bureau. Several of these substances have actually been removed from the soil and their properties determined.

I quote the extracts from the Secretary's report not only because they contain an excellent statement of the character and importance of this work, but also to show that the Secretary of Agriculture fully appreciates the work that is being done by this Bureau, is fully alive to its importance, and is by no means indifferent or hostile, as has been intimated during the course of this debate.

It will be seen from the Secretary's words that the work of the Bureau of Soils has a dual purpose. The soil survey in mapping and classifying the soils and pointing out the problems which confront the farmer, and this to serve as a foundation for further work of devising methods for the utilization of the soil resources so as to secure maximum efficiency and production with the least possible waste of both labor and inherent ability of the soils to produce crops:

> The purpose of a soil survey is to provide an accurate basis for the adaptation of soils to crops. It seeks to present as clearly and as forcibly as possible the conditions of an area in such a manner as to make it possible for prospective settlers to take up lands suited to certain crops, and to enable present owners of land to learn from the experience of other localities what crops are best suited to their own soils and climatic conditions. In the present struggle for commercial supremacy the importance of such accurate knowledge of agricultural conditions is becoming daily more evident. No community and no nation can afford to waste its time and energies in the pursuit of interests to which its conditions are unsuited; nor, on the other hand, can it afford to lose any chance of inaugurating and developing those interests for which it is peculiarly adapted. A soil survey aims to eliminate to some extent such waste in the line of agriculture. Its most valuable function is undoubtedly the improvement of existing methods, so that larger yields of our staple crops can be secured, although more showy results are gained in the development of special industries.

It is the object of the soil survey to prepare maps which will indicate the extent, the distribution, and the location of the principal types of soil found in the United States. These are considered to be of equal importance with the various sources of fuel supply and the different kinds of ores, whose distribution and extent is carefully ascertained by all civilized governments. In addition to the fundamental work which concerns the area and distribution of the soils, there is based upon this a careful study of such particularly important problems as the best adaptation of crop to soil, the best method of maintaining or restoring soil fertility, the proper ways for redeeming land threatened by the accumulation of alkali, and the general study of the soil and crop resources of the entire country.

It is seen from these quotations taken from publications of the Bureau that it has never been satisfied to simply map and classify the soils, but to also point out practical agricultural possibilities both in the way of adaptation of crops to soils and in methods of handling, or soil management, to insure the maintenance or restoration of soil fertility.

I wish to call your attention to some of the benefits of the soil-survey work from the financial view-point.

Soil-survey studies along the Atlantic and Gulf seaboards have demonstrated that the Norfolk sand, Norfolk fine sand, and the Norfolk fine sandy loam are peculiarly adapted to the production of those early vegetables and fruits which furnish the supply for the Northern city markets. It has also been shown in this connection that where transportation is adequate, land belonging to those three soil types which formerly had a value of $5 an acre can readily be made to have a value of from $100 to $200 an acre for the production of the truck crops.

In one locality, in Harrison County, Miss., a tract of land of one of the above types, Norfolk fine sand, was purchased for $6 per acre, and when it was seen that the growing of radishes, lettuce, etc., during the winter months for the Northern city markets was successful, the price of well-cleared land in that particular vicinity immediately advanced to about $80 per acre.

In or near the same area a large landowner, a former director of an experiment station, said, while the soil survey was in progress, "I do not care to sell any land now; when this soil-survey report is published showing the character, adaptation, and intrinsic value of the soils my land will command more than double the price now asked."

Thus it is seen that in many cases, at least, the monetary benefits accruing from these surveys are immeasurable when compared with the cost, which will not average more than one-half cent per acre.

The work of the Soil Survey from its early existence has been dual in its purpose, as is shown by the report of the Chief of the Bureau, then Division, for the year ending June 30, 1896:

A second feature of the work of the Division should be the examination of the physical character of these different soils to determine the conditions which they maintain for crops and to see how these conditions should and can be controlled or changed to adapt them to the classes of crops which it is desired to grow. This will include, of course, the investigation of the effects of fertilization, of irrigation, and of methods of cultivation on the soil conditions.

From the inception of this work up to 1904 the appropriations kept pace with the demands made upon the Bureau, but since that year the appropriation has decreased, while the demand for soil-survey work has been greater than ever.

Parallel with this decrease in appropriations is the accumulation of unsatisfied requests for work on file. There are over 400 requests for soil surveys on file at the present time, and with the present appropriation only about 50 can be made, and it is not possible to make as many surveys each year as there are recorded new requests for surveys.

It can readily be seen from the foregoing that without any increase in appropriation the efficiency of the Bureau of Soils is crippled; that it can not hope to do enough work to make any impression upon the demands already filed, to say nothing of meeting new and urgent requests which are received daily for its aid on general and special soil problems.

From my own State there are eleven requests on file for as many urgently needed surveys, and with the present appropriation I am advised that hardly more than one, or at most two, can be granted.

A few words as to what these surveys are may be of value. Trained soil experts go into a selected area and make a complete examination of the soils within the given territory. These areas usually go by counties and average about 600 square miles each. Not only is the surface of the ground carefully observed and mapped, showing the undulations of hill and valley, the streams that water it, and the contour of the land, but borings are made deep into the ground at short and frequent distances and samples of the soil are taken, examined, and analyzed by the experienced trained soil experts. In this way the character and constituent elements of practically every square yard of land in the whole area is determined, and when this is done it is all depicted and shown on a soil map which is made of that region, showing where the different character of lands lie, just as a State map shows the boundaries of each county. But this is not all. With each map there goes a book which explains and discusses the different soils which have been found, how each particular soil is to be cultivated and treated, the crops that should be planted and will thrive best on each, and the fertilizers which will best meet the demands of the land. This, then, should be followed up by the demonstration or utilization men, trained soil experts, who demonstrate practically the methods that should be used. And just here let me say that I can not appreciate the criticism of those who claim that these utilization men duplicate the work which is being so admirably done by the Bureau of Plant Industry. Each has his sphere, and I do not believe that there is any duplication; but, be that as it may, it can be remedied and all duplication prevented by administration.

In any event the discussion now, as to who shall do this utilization or demonstration work, is largely academic. There is no need for either demonstration or utilization until the surveys are made, and the appropriation proposed by this bill for surveys alone is wholly inadequate. And while this demonstration work is necessary to the fullest enjoyment and benefits of the soil survey, I dissent from the proposition so often advanced against this work, that the survey is wholly useless unless followed by the utilization men. The map which explains the soil and the accompanying book which explains and treats of its characteristics and value, of the crops that can be raised and the fertilizers that should be used, is alone and of itself immensely valuable to the intelligent and practical farmer.

Now, let us see some of the things that this work has accomplished. It has discovered land in Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Texas exactly adapted to producing the finest grades of Cuban tobacco. It has experimented and raised from Cuban seed a tobacco both for filler and wrapper that is the only tobacco grown in the world the competition of which the Cubans fear. I have seen and smoked cigars made from this tobacco, and both color and flavor are distinctively that of the higher grades of imported tobacco. A large and thriving tobacco industry has grown up in Florida. It is opening up in Texas and Alabama, and recently a large company has been formed to grow foreign tobacco on an extensive scale in Mobile County. In my own State they are experimenting, and I have recently had given me a few choice cigars made from tobacco grown in the northern part of Harrison County. I mention this one item of tobacco, because it is a typical instance of an entirely new industry growing up as a result of soil surveys.

In Mississippi, as a result of the survey of the McNeil area, a large trucking business has sprung up, which is constantly extending both in area and importance. And these, as heretofore suggested, are only examples of what the work accomplishes. It is designed not only to develop new crops, but to improve the results from old ones by introducing the best methods of cultivation and fertilization. It tests and examines the soil, and not only tells us what the soil needs to produce given crops, but what, if anything, there is in it which is harmful to particular crops and how this hurtful substance can be destroyed or neutralized. It was found that certain fertile land near Arlington, Va., would not grow roses. The soil experts examined the soil, located the poisonous substance, and showed how to destroy it, and the same is true as to lands which it was found would no longer profitably grow wheat, potatoes, cowpeas, and other products. In all these cases soil surveys located the trouble and pointed the way to avoid it.

To sum it all up, these surveys ascertain accurately the character of the soil, the things it is good for, the fertilizer that it needs, the deleterious substances to be overcome, the way it is to be cultivated and handled, and gives the farmers of that section the information necessary to enable them to conduct their business in an absolutely safe and scientific way.

Certainly this is a most important and worthy purpose. To those sections of the country which are not thoroughly settled up its importance can not be overstated. With the soil survey before him, the prospective settler and farmer can select the very land he needs; he knows what he is getting; there is no experiment; it is all plainly shown on his soil map, and he knows just what to plant and how to cultivate and fertilize the crop. My own district is one in which there is much vacant land, but in which agriculture is advancing rapidly, and I am pleading for my people when I advocate this increase. I know the good which these surveys have done, and I want more of them, not only to bring wild lands into cultivation, but also to secure the best results on farms which are now being worked.

In few of the Southern States is anything like the whole area cultivated. I think only about 16 per cent of the lands of Louisiana, one of the most fertile in the Union, is now in farms. What Mississippi's percentage is I do not know, but know it is comparatively small. Consider what this work means toward settling up these States, thus increasing their annual products and wealth as well as their taxable values and revenues.

It was suggested by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture during the general debate on this bill that the present system of surveying areas of about 600 square miles should be abandoned and what he terms a "regional survey" substituted therefor; and he suggests as types of such surveys the proposed Appalachian forest reserve and the semiarid region of the West. In the semiarid belt between the latitudes 100° and 104° there are 301,176 square miles, the population of which is 600,732, or an average of 2 inhabitants per square mile, and this includes the city of Denver, with 153,017 people. In some portions the average population is much less than 2 per square mile. In New Mexico it is 1.1, in North Dakota 1.5, in South Dakota 1.4, and in Oklahoma only 1 inhabitant to every 2 square miles. Surely these figures dispose of this contention, and the Appalachian survey proposition, while more densely populated, is subject to the same objection, only in a less degree. It is apparent that for the present surveys of this sort attempt to cover entirely too much territory when the number of persons to be benefited is considered. What is needed are surveys in sections toward which settlers are turning and that are sufficiently populated to enable them to do something toward utilizing the survey and in reducing the lands to cultivation.

The importance and necessity for this work have been fully recognized by all the older countries. Germany and France long ago took it up and are still continuing it on a large scale. In England it has been prosecuted for a hundred years or more, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURPHY] has a soil map and report published in England over seventy years ago, and then it was in its third edition. These countries have all seen and appreciated the necessity of intelligently investigating and taking care of their soils.

I appreciate, Mr. Chairman, the need for economy and I favor keeping the expenses of Government down to the lowest point consistent with good administration. But this does not seem to me to be the place to economize. The farmer and the farm are the basis of our prosperity. The agricultural products of this country constitute its greatest wealth and make all the nations of the earth purchasers at our doors. The Department of Agriculture was organized to help the farmers of the country. Its appropriations should be liberal and sufficient. I do not believe in skimping and economizing where the great basic industry of the country is concerned. More than one-half of the people of this country are engaged in farming and allied pursuits. This majority is entitled to and should receive the highest consideration. The demand for this work is general and just. As I stated in the outset, this amendment does not appropriate as much as I would like to see given, but we believe it is the best that can be done at this time, and its adoption will not only provide for a considerable enlargement of the work, but will also demonstrate to the Department and to the farmers that this Congress is alive to their needs and that their interests shall not be neglected. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to differ with so many of my colleagues and friends on this side of the House on a proposition of so much importance, but the committee which has had this bill under consideration have given the matter very careful attention, and have reached, we think, a conclusion which is just alike to the Bureau of Soils and to the best interests of all the people. My entire record has been for the most liberal appropriations for every bureau of this great Department. This appropriation for this Bureau amounts to $204,000 for the coming fiscal year. It is enough to meet the real work of the Bureau. Everyone agrees, who has had any experience in the Committee on Agriculture, that there is a disposition among the bureau chiefs in the Department of Agriculture to reach out and grasp more authority, to broaden the scope of their jurisdiction and work, and they come to Congress year after year for increases in appropriations that they may reach out and make their bureaus, therefore, more important, the magnitude of their work wider. There is a possibility that something of this spirit may be underneath this tremendous pressure to increase the appropriation for this Bureau, which, in my opinion, under the circumstances, has been dealt with most generously by the committee.

The fact is the bill carries an increase for the soil-survey work proper of nearly $38,000 for the coming fiscal year, as against the present fiscal year, because it is understood that, as a matter of administration in the Department of Agriculture, the utilization work heretofore done by the Bureau of Soils, and which was only begun during the past year, will hereafter be transferred to and done by the Bureau of Plant Industry. So that we have given them an actual increase of nearly $38,000, and this will enable the Bureau to put on seven additional field parties for the coming year.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is to make the surveys with—this increase.

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Now, there is no additional appropriation for the Bureau of Plant Industry to follow that up with utilization work.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to my friend from Mississippi that the committee had assurances from the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, Doctor Galloway, who is an able and conservative man, in many respects the ablest in that Department——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I agree to all of that.

Mr. LEVER. That he does not need a cent increase in his appropriation to do this very work that we are now spending $38,000 a year to do, and it is understood that this new work of utilization of the Bureau of Soils is practically a duplication of work carried on in the Bureau of Plant Industry for many years.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Is it not a fact that Doctor Galloway said he did not need any money to make experiments in tobacco culture in Texas, Connecticut, and Alabama, and that he advised against it, and that the Bureau of Soils made it, and it has developed into such a success that it to-day yields more revenue than it cost to make the demonstrations and experiments.

Mr. LEVER. As a matter of fact, the experiments along the lines suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] have been completed and little money will be expended in the future upon them, but Doctor Galloway assured the subcommittee, and I think the full committee, that this utilization work for which we are appropriating $38,000 for this fiscal year for the Bureau of Soils will next year be done by the Bureau of Plant Industry. So that the Bureau of Soils to do soil work proper, to do the work for which it was established, to do its legitimate work, has in this bill an increase of $38,000 for the next fiscal year—an increase entirely sufficient to meet the reasonable demands.

I want to call attention to this fact, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] brings it up, that in my judgment there is very, very little value to these soil surveys unless they are to be followed up with utilization or demonstration work.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is what I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. I would like to have one minute more in which to complete that statement.

Mr. SCOTT. I yield the gentleman one minute out of my time.

Mr. COCKS of New York. And I will give him two minutes out of my time.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, are we proceeding under the five-minute rule? I do not think these gentlemen can yield time.

Mr. LEVER. I do not yield.

I want to call the attention of the committee to this fact: That this soil-survey work does not, in my judgment, amount to a row of pins unless followed up with demonstrations, unless the farmer has the benefit of the advice of experts; and I want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] that in this very tobacco work it was brought out in the committee that after the survey had been completed by the Bureau of Soils the soil expert did not make experiments—the soil man did not grow the tobacco.

The soil survey had completed its function when it discovered that the particular soil gave promise of successful tobacco culture. It took a practical grower—a plant man—to complete the experiment by proving from the actual growing of the tobacco that the Bureau of Soils was not mistaken in its conclusion that particular tobacco soil had been found. The two bureaus should work in harmony, without duplication of work. Each has its own functions. This utilization work seems to me to be a plant problem, and should go to the Bureau of Plant Industry.

Now, we are up against this proposition. It is asked of us to appropriate a large amount of money—$163,000 increase by this amendment—to do the work that the Bureau of Plant Industry promises us to do, and I am sure will do it as well, without any increase of appropriation at all; and, in addition, let me suggest, that if the soil-survey maps have to be explained by a soil expert, what good do, they amount to to the farmer, anyhow? If the Bureau of Soils can not give to the farmer a map which a man of ordinary intelligence can understand without having to have a soil expert to explain it, I think we had better quit and let the whole business go, for it can be of no practical value. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the proposition before us is to increase the appropriation for the soil survey to the amount of $130,000. This will practically double the capacity of the Bureau of Soils and make it possible to do twice the field work it is now doing. This question ought not to resolve itself into a fight as to whether or not the Agricultural Committee should be allowed to control this bill. Nor is it a question to be decided by the will or the jealousy of different bureaus in the Agricultural Department. The interests of the country should be the controlling factor in our deliberation. We must say by our action whether or not we, as the Representatives of the people, recognize the need of more work in this line. The people I represent on this floor are in great need of a soil survey, and have been earnestly petitioning for this work to be done for them. The Bureau has been unable to respond to their appeal because of the lack of force available. The ravages of various insects attacking our cotton and grain crops have made it apparent that our people must diversify more than ever before. They are earnestly investigating in order that they may intelligently understand what are the capabilities of the soil composing their farms. We have a variety of soil in this one district equal perhaps to that of any State in the Union. In addition to cotton, corn, wheat, oats, and other small grains, forage crops, fruits, grapes, berries, and vegetables, they are also looking to the production of the sugar beet, tobacco, alfalfa, honey, peanuts, Irish and sweet potatoes, and, in fact, practically every crop that can be produced on the farm anywhere in the United States. We have the climate and the soil that promises rich returns for our labor.

But the question now is, What are the capacities of our various soils and their fitness for the production of these crops, and what is lacking in them to accomplish the desired results? The basis for this knowledge is a soil survey, from which can be builded a system of agricultural knowledge and progress heretofore unequaled. Ours is not a bleak, unsettled waste, but a thickly settled, intelligent farming population, in the best climate and having the most productive land in all the world. The Department at present is unable to come to our relief. The people of our section of the country, and from all over the country, who till the soil and produce the crops that are the foundation of our prosperity, turn to the Congress and appeal to their own Representatives for this needed aid. Shall we turn a deaf ear to their entreaty? It is their land, their country, their Congress, and we are but their servants and are intrusted with the duty of obeying their will. The money to be appropriated is theirs, and the benefits of it will accrue to them and to the whole country. Petitions from our boards of trade, municipal councils, organizations of millers, grain men, cotton buyers, and merchants, the farmers' unions, and all the farmers join in this appeal to give them the knowledge necessary for their prosperity, and which can be obtained only by a soil survey. They say to the Congress, "Give us the soil survey and we will do the rest." The demand is intelligent, sensible, and just. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] seems to be opposed to the soil survey.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, not at all.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. That is the effect of his whole argument. If he is not opposed to the soil survey, then why not allow the work to be done more speedily, especially in the thickly settled communities like the district I represent, where thousands of farmers can not get the knowledge they need except by these surveys? Why take fifteen, twenty, or twenty-five years to complete the work? At the present rate it will take fifty years to complete this work in the United States. We want the benefit of it now. The desire is reasonable, the object laudable, and the effect would greatly facilitate the development of farming interests. The additional sum that we ask—$130,000—to be used for the farmers will prove a greater paying investment for the whole country than the same amount expended for any other purpose by this Congress. Why should we be mean and niggardly in the appropriation made for the benefit of the farmers and liberal in other things?

The Agricultural Department is not supported as it should be. Its development in the interests of our people should be pushed as rapidly as possible, and the appropriations should be made to amply supply all the forces which the Department could intelligently use. The sum we ask is practically a mere trifle in amount, but is of the utmost importance to our people, who need to learn at once the qualities and the deficiencies of the soil. Knowledge is power; and we should not retard this work, but should assist by every means the development in agricultural knowledge that is now so earnestly sought by our people. The farmers are organized and are organizing in all the States for a campaign of education, that knowledge may lighten the burdens of labor and intelligence increase the product of their toil. Let us do our duty and vote for this appropriation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that soil surveys do great good, but there is doubt about the desirability of entering upon an extravagant campaign in soil surveys. Last year $80,000 were expended for this purpose, and this year, after a most careful consideration, I am told the Committee on Agriculture has decided to increase it by $38,000; or, in other words, to appropriate $118,000 for that purpose. The gentleman who introduced the amendment seeks to increase that by some $120,000. The Bureau chief having charge of this work, I am told, says that this bill provides money for all the work that they can legitimately do. If that be true, there is no reason why more money should be set aside.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. MADDEN. I did not intend to misrepresent the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. You are mistaken about what my amendment provides. It does not require $120,000 additional to $118,000.

Mr. MADDEN. How much does it require?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The whole thing is only $163,000—that is, for additional soil surveys and in the utilization work which you have cut off.

Mr. MADDEN. The Bureau of Plant Industry does a lot of the work that is proposed to be done with the money sought to be appropriated by the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. GRIGGS. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. MADDEN. And promises to do all the work that is needed without any additional appropriation whatever.

Mr. GRIGGS. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. GRIGGS. If the gentleman will permit me, the Plant Bureau is doing nothing of the sort.

Mr. MADDEN. They promised to do so.

Mr. GRIGGS. No, sir. Their agents in my district and in Florida, across the line from my district, refuse to do anything except to improve the tobacco by conducting experiments in breeding and fertilization. That is what they say.

Mr. MADDEN. The Bureau of Plant Industry this year has spent $80,000 in the work that is proposed to be done by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS]. If that be the case, why appropriate money extravagantly and uselessly, as this amendment proposes?

Mr. BOWERS. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. MADDEN. I only have a minute or two, or I would.

Mr. BOWERS. I only want to ask the gentleman what he has to say to that portion of the amendment which increases the sum for making the actual survey? What objection has he to the actual survey?

Mr. MADDEN. They are making surveys faster now than the people who are interested in the land can utilize them, and there is no purpose whatever in making the survey unless it is of some use after it is made.

Mr. GRIGGS. The whole country is not like the land on State street.

Mr. MADDEN. The surveys are useless unless they can be utilized after they are made, and there is no doubt whatever, from all the information that can be obtained upon the subject, that the Department is doing all the work that is needed as rapidly as it is needed. It is spending all the money that should be spent and all that can be economically spent. And I trust, therefore, the amendment will not prevail.

[Mr. SMALL addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture, I feel that I should at least express my views upon this amendment. In doing so I confess embarrassment. I regret exceedingly being compelled to take issue with so many of my colleagues on this side of the aisle. Each of the gentlemen on this side who has spoken in advocacy of this amendment, I believe, has stated that he speaks from observation and experience. I have had neither. Not one dollar of money appropriated for this Bureau has ever been expended in my section of the State of Missouri, to my knowledge. Hence I approach this question unbiased, uninfluenced by the fact of past favors or hope of favors to come.

I want to say in behalf of the committee generally that the committee, acting as a whole, and having within its membership gentlemen from every part of the country, from the Northeast to the Southwest, and from the Northwest to the Southeast, taking in the whole scope of our country, that the committee having in mind the sole purpose and desire to do that which the members believe is for the best interests of all the people, regardless of section or locality, dealt with this question, as they did with all other questions, in a spirit of absolute fairness and, as we hoped, of liberality.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that when we once put an appropriation in a bill history teaches us that it continues to grow. It never gets less. I tell you, sir, it behooves those charged with responsibility here, those who are responsible for the expenditure of public money, to exercise some degree of frugality and economy in this appropriation and all appropriation bills. I say to this House now that if you vote for this amendment, increasing the amount as proposed, there is no man here whose service will be long enough to see that amount reduced. I care not whether an emergency or necessity exists or not, whether there is a demand for it or not, the appropriation will continue. I assert the fact in all candor that I believe the committee has written into this bill as offered to the House a sum adequate and sufficient to do all the legitimate work of the Bureau of Soils.

Gentlemen complain that under present arrangements it will take forty or fifty years to survey all the land in the United States. Perhaps it may. But let me call their attention to the fact that under the existing arrangement, and arrangements we have had in the past, the Bureau of Soils is now nine years ahead of the utilization work. So that the Bureau has not kept the two projects together.

After hearing the chiefs of the various bureaus of the Department, after having paid close attention to their statements and estimates and weighing them carefully, I believed and the committee believed it was best to rid the Bureau of Soils of the work of demonstration and experimentation and lodge it where it ought to be, in the Bureau of Plant Industry. We have given the Bureau of Soils an increased appropriation. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I must not be written down as opposing the agricultural interests of this Republic, because I believe firmly that the one interest superior to all others in the American Republic is that of agriculture. [Applause.] I will go as far as any man in favoring and in advocating, with my voice and my vote, any and every thing which will even tend to build up and foster the agricultural interests of our country. I am the friend of the man on the farm——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAMB. I ask that my colleague have one minute longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Agriculture in this Committee of the Whole seems to be between the devil and the deep sea. For the last two or three days the committee has been criticised for making large appropriations, it even having been implied that it had recommended larger appropriations than the Bureau officers themselves had recommended. Now it is being criticised for not making a sufficiently large appropriation. The members of the Committee of the Whole ought to understand that the Committee on Agriculture has given very careful investigation to every item in this bill. The chairman of the committee and the senior member of the minority spent thirty days in the Department, examining the Department and the appropriations required, before Congress met, and the committee itself gave hearings for five weeks, considering carefully every part of this bill. Now, my judgment is that this appropriation ought not to be increased, for various reasons. In the first place, the committee has recommended an increase of about $38,000 over the amount that was expended last year. If the amount which is asked for in this amendment should be added, it would increase the appropriation $163,000, or about double the amount recommended by the Bureau.

I have no doubt that the Bureau is doing an excellent work, but it is difficult to get suitable men to do this work. The Bureau has out seventeen different parties making these surveys, and, if I remember correctly, the Chief of the Bureau testified at the hearings that it would be impossible to get suitable men to do work on a materially larger scale than he was already conducting it. Therefore very likely the money could not be used to good advantage or economically even if it were appropriated.

There is very much question whether the work of this Bureau is not being largely duplicated by the Bureau of Plant Industry, and in any case the members of the Committee of the Whole ought to understand that after having gone over this matter carefully all the members of the Committee on Agriculture, both of the majority and minority, agreed to the appropriation reported. They are satisfied that it is a suitable appropriation now, and the Committee of the Whole ought to back up the Agricultural Committee in its recommendations. [Applause.]

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of any appropriation that is for the benefit of agriculture. It is the foundation of our greatness, and it ought to receive the fostering care of the Government. The gentlemen speaking against this amendment talk about $163,000 as something enormous. When they talk about the testing of fuels for the benefit of manufacturers and mine owners of this country and propose to appropriate a quarter of a million dollars for it, they call it a small sum. When they talk about extending markets for the manufactured goods and sending agents abroad to investigate trade conditions, they speak then of multitudinous thousands; but when they speak in behalf of the farmer these gentlemen want to reduce the amount to some small and trifling sum. The question we ought to consider is, Ought this work to be done at all? I ask the gentlemen of the committee reporting this bill, Ought this work to be done at all? If so, it ought to be done adequately. The appropriation carried in this bill is not an adequate appropriation for any such purpose.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Government has entered upon this work. It has undertaken it as one of the functions of the Federal Government. The complaint I have to make is not at the size of the appropriation. The appropriation is too small, but I do, in this connection, desire to complain at the unfair and one-sided way in which this appropriation has heretofore been expended.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me? I should like to state to the gentleman from Missouri that on the question of whether or not these matters have been parceled out for several years, as somebody thinks it appears from the hearings, the head of this Bureau informed me to-day personally that all applications for soil surveys made now and hereafter will receive the same attention as those made heretofore.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to hear that, but I should, in addition, like to hear the head of the Bureau say that he regards this as a function of the Federal Government; that it ought to be carried on at Federal expense, and that when we have appropriated the money necessary to carry on his work, that he should not come down to the legislature of my State and say, "If you do not appropriate money to aid in this work you can not have your fair proportion of the money that has been appropriated for this purpose by Congress." That money ought to be expended by the Federal Government in the interests of the people of this Republic, and it ought not to be used to hold up State legislatures and compel them to appropriate State money to aid the United States to perform its duties and carry out its policies.

I believe soil-survey work should be extended. I favor the pending amendment. I would support even a very much larger appropriation. But, Mr. Chairman, when this money is appropriated then it should be fairly distributed among the States.

If this is a Federal function then let it be performed by the Federal Government with money raised by Federal taxation. Do not go to Missouri and say to the legislature, "You are entitled to your share of this appropriation, but you shall not have it unless you come up and aid the great Federal Government in performing the duties which devolve upon it." Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I favor this appropriation because I believe it is in the interest of the wisest economy. I believe that the more money we spend in this direction the more money we will make. I have no fault to find with the committee; they are doing the best they can under the circumstances. I favor this increase for the reason that it will make money for the country instead of being a waste of money. In support of that appropriation I desire to call the attention of the committee to a situation in my own State. In 1900, after ten years' work of investigation, the State of Wisconsin put out a soil map, which I have here, upon one question, that of raising sugar beets. Up to that time Wisconsin had produced no beet sugar. That soil map was arranged by utilization of surveys made by the State geologist and experimental work done by the agricultural bureau, looking up the counties of the State which produce the best and greatest amount of beet sugar. Following this work companies were formed and went into the manufacturing of beet sugar where they could locate their plants and get the farmers to grow the best beets producing the most sugar. That map cost the State of Wisconsin a good deal of money, but it paid.

In 1900 we produced no beet sugar, and in 1904 we produced 100,000 tons of sugar beets for which the farmers of the State received $450,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURPHY. I have only a few minutes.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman if that survey work was done by the State?

Mr. MURPHY. It was; by the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. SCOTT. We are not attempting to interfere with the work of the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. MURPHY. I understand that; but I say that if the State of Wisconsin can do this which in four years will bring in an annual income of $450,000, the United States can very well afford to spend $200,000 in the States that will bring back millions.

Mr. Chairman, this is no experiment; I want to say that it is a matter that has been considered in other countries for years.

I have before me a work written in England in 1839, Morton on Soils, which contains a map of Whitfield example farm, in the county of Gloucester, showing in colors the soils and geological formation, the topography and drainage, in fact almost everything which our soil maps issued by the Bureau to-day contain. That map was prepared for the purpose of forming the basis of a scientific system of improving that farm and making it more productive for tenant and landlord and for ascertaining what crops would be most profitable and what fertilizers should be applied to the various portions. The author, speaking in reference to that map and the accompanying plans, uses this language: "When any defect exists in the conduct or operations of others, the best mode of correcting it is to show by example the superior advantages of a better plan of proceeding." To no class of people does this remark so strictly apply as it does to farmers. If the landowners of England seventy years ago considered the matter of such importance that they were willing individually to incur the expense necessary to survey and map their individual farms for the purpose of obtaining the information that would enable them to increase and maintain the fertility of those farms, it can scarcely now be considered extravagant or unwise for us to set about obtaining the information that must be the basis of all intelligent effort to improve the condition of our farming lands. The amendment proposes an increase of only $160,000 for a work which may return us millions. The scientific study of soils has long engaged the attention of great investigators because of its great importance.

In 1813 Sir Humphrey Davy published his Essentials of Agricultural Chemistry, which treated of the composition of air, soil, manures, plants, and of the influence of light and heat upon plant growth. Thaer, Sprengle, Schübler, and Liebig followed him in this line of investigation. Professor Snyder of the University of Minnesota in his exhaustive work on The Chemistry of Soils and Fertilizers, quotes from Liebig's works to show his enthusiasm the following extract:

> I shall be happy if I succeed in attracting the attention of men of science to subjects which so well merit to engage their talents and energies. Perfect agriculture is the true foundation of trade and industry; it is the foundation of the richest of States. But a rational system of agriculture can not be formed without the application of scientific principles, for such a system must be based on an exact acquaintance with the means of nutrition of vegetables and with the influence of soils and the actions of manures upon them. This knowledge we must seek from chemistry which teaches the mode of investigating the composition and of the study of the character of the different substances from which plants derive their nourishment.

Professor Snyder further says that Liebig's writings on the composition of plant ash and the importance of supplying crops with mineral food led to the commercial preparation of manures, which in later years has developed into the commercial fertilizer industry. We have reached a time in our national life when it is apparent to all that the methods which proved satisfactory and remunerative in early days can no longer be continued with safety. We have been wantonly wasteful of the great natural resources of our country. We have destroyed our forests and depleted our soils. We did not consider it a national necessity to exercise care so long as a great extent of fertile land was at hand which could be procured at a slight cost, but the rapid absorption of the public domain already warns us that if we would provide for the future population of our country we must by the employment of intelligent and scientific methods restore and maintain the fertility of the lands in our oldest States.

Many of us remember when Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota were the wheat fields of the country. To-day we look beyond them to the Dakotas and the extreme Western States for our bread. The climate of those older States has not changed very materially. The rain fall is sufficient. The season is long enough and the soil if properly treated is fertile enough to provide crops in as great abundance as ever. The abandoned fields of the older States which once supported a large population by agriculture alone can be utilized and made productive by supplying to the soils the peculiar elements which have been exhausted. To accomplish this purpose it is absolutely necessary that knowledge of the soil contents be secured, and for this purpose the appropriation asked for here is intended. The objection is urged that without further explanation and experiment the farmer will not derive much benefit from this work. To remove that objection it is proposed to follow up the field investigation by the necessary laboratory work and then put in the field the demonstrator who has this necessary information at hand and who is in sympathy with the work to test by actual demonstration the theories drawn from the preliminary work. It is admitted that the farmer is conservative and hesitates to experiment. He is justified in that course, for his living depends upon his success or failure in producing crops, and he very wisely declines to launch out into new ventures that may subject him to financial loss. If, however, he is given the opportunity of seeing the scientific theory put into practice and the result proves satisfactory, he is not only willing, but anxious to avail himself of the benefits to be thus obtained. There may be failures, there may be vexing disappointments before success is achieved, but the benefits will greatly exceed the losses, and the entire country will share in the profits.

It is urged that the work of demonstration should be done by the Bureau of Plant Industry.

That may or may not be true, and in any event that is a matter to be worked out by the Agricultural Department. The essential point is that the work be done and that sufficient means be provided for doing it well and doing it as speedily as practicable. The testimony given at the hearings before the committee shows that with the present force the applications for soil surveys now pending can not be satisfied in less than ten years. Waste and deterioration of soils are constant, and the resulting losses in crop production should be checked as speedily as possible. The time is approaching when we will be compelled, by the increase of population, to adopt the most approved and scientific methods of agriculture as well as the most advanced methods of manufacturing if we expect to maintain our national prosperity. Every dollar that is added to the earnings of every acre increases the farmer's capacity to employ labor, to buy merchandise, to educate his family, and to advance the interests of his community and State. Every dollar that is lost because of wasteful methods that may be corrected is a distinct loss to the country, and the country can well afford to aid to the extent requested here in improving the condition of the farmers of the country upon whose success the prosperity of every other business depends. The financial depression now present can not be permanently relieved until the money received from abroad for products of the farm puts into the channels of trade the funds necessary to start and maintain the other industries. There will always be a foreign market for farm products when they can be sold at a lower price than similar products from other countries can be sold. There was a time when we had little competition in the European markets for most of our farm products, but South America, Canada, Australia, and other countries are strong competitors in many lines now, and we must be prepared to meet that competition.

We have heretofore devoted our attention to cheapening the cost of production by increased use of machinery, but we can not hope to do a great deal more in that line. We must therefore pay more attention to increasing the production of the acres we cultivate and to cultivating the acres that are now unused or not used to the best advantage. The problems thus presented can not be solved by the individual farmer working alone. Many of them he is unable to solve, even if he be willing to attempt them. We have long since decided that these lie within the domain of Federal action. That being the case, no good reason exists why the solution of those problems should be delayed.

Mistakes may be made, disappointments may occur, and there may and probably will be some waste in the effort to find the best way to improve existing conditions.

After problems have been solved, it may require much of demonstration to convince and satisfy all the farmers that the methods proposed are the best, but every dollar carefully expended, as this will be, in improving the fertility of our soils and increasing their productiveness will be repaid many times over.

The splendid achievements of the Agricultural Department have richly repaid the people for the support which that Department has received.

That support should be continued and increased as a testimonial of confidence and in appreciation of valuable services rendered. We should also support the Agricultural Department to any extent necessary to accomplish its work, because the work of the Agricultural Department is actually creating wealth for the country. This is a vital necessity at this time, when so much of our money is expended for purposes and in directions that can never return even the principal sum expended.

It therefore behooves us as never before to prevent the agencies engaged in the development of our permanent resources from being hampered in their work that a little more may be expended on our colonial possessions which have already absorbed hundreds of millions of dollars contributed by the farmers of our own country. The Empire State of New York has thousands of acres of abandoned farms which supported a large population. The New England States are in the same condition.

In the State of Virginia and other Southern States there are enormous tracts that were once cultivated which are now abandoned as farms and returning to forest because their owners were unable to properly care for them and preserve the fertility of the soil. There is work that the nation must do in determining how to reclaim those lands and restore their fertility.

It will add millions of dollars to the national wealth, and at a time when we are spending more on our military and naval service than some of the greatest nations of Europe it is a matter of the first importance that everything possible be done to increase the productiveness of our farms, which must in the end bear the greater portion of the burdens of the State. The splendid achievements of our Army and Navy are the pride of every citizen, but we should not forget that no Department of our Government, no branch of our service, has done more to advance the national prosperity and secure the permanent happiness of our people than the Agricultural Department has done. Every encouragement that can be given should be given looking to a continuation of the work. No assistance, moral or financial, should be withheld that can to any extent advance the work of any division or bureau in that Department, and for those reasons I cheerfully vote for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the Committee on Agriculture has been placed somewhat in a false light. I do not believe there is a single member of the committee that is not in hearty sympathy with the work being done by the Bureau of Soils. When we came to hold hearings at the opening of this session of Congress, we had the Chief of this Bureau and two of his assistants come before the committee. We devoted, I believe, more time to this Bureau than to any other bureau in the Department. It was our desire to obtain all the information we could concerning the work carried on by that Department. After we had completed our hearings and came to frame the bill, it was the unanimous opinion of the committee that no more money should be included in the appropriations this year than last. Why? I think I can give the reason in a very few words. In the first place, when we came to examine the question and the Chief of the Bureau, we found that he had overstepped the rules of the Department; that he had overstepped the limit placed by Congress in the appropriation last year, and was carrying on work he had no authority of law to do in making demonstrations.

We have in the Agricultural Department several different divisions or bureaus. We have one bureau that is carrying on all the demonstration work that has been conducted by the different bureaus. That bureau has among its force the expert men who are familiar with the work carried on in all the other bureaus. This one bureau is used as a sort of a clearing house, where demonstration work is being carried on for all the bureaus. The Bureau of Soils was encroaching on the work of this bureau known as the "Bureau of Farm Management." We found there was duplication. We found they were doing the same work as this Bureau of Farm Management. It seemed to the committee that it was good business judgment to stop the overlapping of work; that we should confine each department to the particular work it was supposed to do, to the particular work that belonged to it, and not permit it to overstep its bounds and trespass upon the work of the other bureaus. That is why we did not increase the appropriation. Not only that, but this bureau came before the committee, after it had carried on this demonstration work for over a year without authority of law, and undertook to secure permission from the committee, undertook to secure an item in the bill that would authorize it to do that which it had been doing for over a year—admitting on the face of it that it had no authority to do the work it was already carrying on.

The fact is simply this, that the Committee on Agriculture, after calling in the Secretary, decided to have the Bureau of Soils discontinue the demonstration work and confine itself to the work of soil surveys for which it was created and the work that it was intended to perform. Taking away from it the work of demonstration, which it has been doing without authority of law, leaves the appropriation for soil surveys increased by $38,000. So really they have an increase of $38,000 over what they had last year for soil surveys.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, we who favor this amendment do not wish to be understood as criticising the Committee on Agriculture in any possible manner or as reflecting in any way on the work which those gentlemen have done. We admit they have worked hard and have brought in, in most all respects, a fairly good bill [laughter], but I submit that in one particular instance in this long and elaborate appropriation bill the Committee of the Whole House may assume that it knows as much as, and perhaps more than, this particular committee.

Permit me to say a few words in behalf of this amendment, and for an increase of the appropriation for the Bureau of Soils in behalf of rural New York. We think that with a larger appropriation for work through the Bureau of Soils much benefit may come to the small farmers of our State, and if any assistance or help can be given those farmers they need it and deserve it; and our State, as one of the Commonwealths of this Union, deserves it. Only a very small portion of the agricultural districts of our State have been surveyed by the Bureau of Soils, and, in my judgment, those surveys, maps, and reports which go with them are not only of interest, but of practical benefit to our farmers in the way of information, indicating the various grades or types of soil in the localities surveyed, and also indicating, to a large extent, the kind of plants or crops for the production of which they are best adapted.

The statement was made on this floor a few days ago, during the discussion of this appropriation bill, that farmers do not care for those surveys, reports, and maps. My experience is different. Madison County, a part of the district which I have the honor to represent, and which is located practically in the center of New York, was surveyed a few years ago; maps were made and reports accompanying the same. I sent to the farmers in the district surveyed all the maps and reports which were allotted to me, and demands have been made for many more than I have been able to supply. This shows that the agriculturists up there, the practical farmers, are interested in the work, and the statement made by my colleague the other day, that his people were not interested in soil surveys and do not care to have it done in their agricultural districts, does not apply, at all events, to my part of the State. I have here in my desk, and can produce them, or have them printed in the RECORD, if desired, many petitions and applications from individuals, granges, and other agricultural organizations of the State of New York, demanding soil surveys, which they will not get and can not get for many years to come unless this appropriation is increased. I submit that this survey work alone, without any utilization work being done, gives the farmers much practical and useful information. They interest them in their lands and in their work. They show the different types of soil in the sections surveyed, and give them some assistance in the way of making the best use of their land.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that our farmers of New York are entitled to some consideration at the hands of this committee and of this House. The sums allowed for work in animal industry, plant industry, and especially to the Bureau of Forestry, are large and have been materially increased in this appropriation bill, while the item allowed for work by the Bureau of Soils has not been increased for several years. This is not fair. Agricultural chemistry, entomology, plant development, and forestry are all well enough; but ultimately the wealth of this nation consists not in its mines or factories, but in its soil and the products thereof; and money expended in the higher cultivation of the soil and in improving the conditions of agriculture never is wasted.

This bill carries a very large appropriation, nearly four millions, for work in forestry, the preservation of the forests which exist and the reforestization of the denuded plains and hilltops. New York asks no aid from the National Government in this line of work. It was the pioneer in this field of enterprise. It organized its own forest service before this Bureau was created in the Department of Agriculture. It has spent more money than any other State, and I think more than all the States combined, for the benefit and preservation of its forests. It buys and protects its own forest reserves, and at present owns about a million and a half acres, while other States are demanding that the National Government buy their mountain ranges at good prices.

The farmers of our State helped construct and maintain the Erie and Oswego canals, on which the products of the great and fertile West have floated down through our State to the great markets of New York and other Eastern cities. They have helped reduce your freight rates and have kept them down for years, and the grain and other products of the Mississippi Valley have been shipped on those canals and have driven New York farmers out of the markets which they formerly had, and have driven them out of the business of raising grain, corn, cattle, and other bulky and heavy produce. Many of our farms in central and southern New York have been abandoned, or partially so, during the last few years. On account of the high cost of labor and the cheap rates for the produce from the Mississippi Valley they have been unable to compete with that section of the country in the great markets of the East. Some of our farmers have taken up the business of raising vegetables, fruits, and garden sauce and other perishable commodities; and in this particular kind of agriculture they need all the assistance and information that the Bureau of Soils and the Department of Agriculture can give them.

Again, New York is pledged to build a barge canal at an estimated cost of $101,000,000, and I fully believe that it will cost $150,000,000 before it is completed and all riparian damages are paid. This $150,000,000 worth of bonds will constitute a lien on our farms just as effectually as on our city blocks. The farms will have to pay their proportion of it, and at the same time it will help Western farmers, in the reduction of freight rates, to take the market away from our New York farmers.

New York farmers help you gentlemen from the West by reducing your freight charges to the great markets of the East. They help raise the price of your crops. They help develop the Mississippi Valley and the great West. Of course this commerce which comes down through our State helps Buffalo and New York and other cities along the line of the canals; but our farmers have suffered by competition from your fertile territory and have been practically driven out of business of the character formerly carried on.

Large States never get their full share of assistance from the National Government; perhaps because they are able to do things which small and poor States can not do for themselves, and also because their delegations in Congress do not combine and work together with a common purpose and for a common end in the same manner that Senators and Members from small States accomplish results and get advantages and benefits for their States. I do not put this in the form of a complaint, but simply remind you of it that you may consider it in the application of the farmers of New York for assistance which can be given them by the extra appropriation carried in this amendment.

Since our farmers can not compete with the West in the production of grain, corn, cattle, and other bulky products of the soil, if they live and prosper they must do so by intensive farming, and in that work they need the assistance and scientific knowledge and skill which can be given them by the Bureau of Soils. They need soil surveys, maps, reports, and also experimental or utilization work on the part of the Government. Many of them are unable financially to make experiments themselves, and if these experiments are made by the Bureau of Soils our small farmers can take advantage of them in the way of raising vegetables, fruits, and other perishable products, because our great markets are convenient.

In conclusion, let me ask you to be liberal to our farmers who need assistance of this kind. We ask that you gentlemen who are getting the benefit of our great appropriations in the maintenance of the Erie Canal and the construction of the barge canal manifest some appreciation of these benefits and help our farmers out in this small way. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I ask unanimous consent to continue my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. COCKS of New York. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COCKS of New York. To speak on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman indicate on which side he proposes to speak?

Mr. COCKS of New York. On the other side from that advocated by the gentleman who has just taken his seat.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized. The Chair will say in explanation of his position that the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture handed in a list of the names of those who wanted recognition, and the gentleman's name was not on the list.

Mr. SCOTT. It was unaccountably omitted, and I apologize for that.

Mr. COCKS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I also come from the great State from which the gentleman comes who has just taken his seat. My farmers are exactly in the kind of business, and have been for two or three generations, to which he says his farmers are driven by the grain growing of the Mississippi Valley. Now, my district is nearly all surveyed, but I have yet to hear from one practical farmer where they have one bit of advantage from these soil surveys.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COCKS of New York. You know how I am fixed.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The Secretary of the Treasury states in his report there are more requests from the gentleman's——

Mr. COCKS of New York. The Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The Secretary of Agriculture—than any other district in the United States.

Mr. COCKS of New York. He is a constituent of mine.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. COCKS of New York. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I wish to ask if all the gentleman's district has been surveyed?

Mr. COCKS of New York. No; not all.

Mr. DRISCOLL. How much?

Mr. COCKS of New York. About two-thirds.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is not nearly all of it surveyed?

Mr. COCKS of New York. I do not know about all, but——

Mr. DRISCOLL. So you have all surveyed you want?

Mr. COCKS of New York. But therefore I feel I will be able to say what a great advantage has arisen from it where it has been surveyed and where it is not in the future.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Give the rest of us some chance.

Mr. COCKS of New York. But I say, furthermore, we have a proposition coming before us to increase the appropriation which is not even recommended by the Department, and we are establishing a dangerous precedent. If this was such a crying need and such a great advantage, certainly the Secretary of Agriculture would have recommended this enormous increase. This Bureau comes before us and asks an increase of $300,000 without the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture. Now, I am a farmer myself and desire to do everything for the benefit of the farmer I can, but I do not consider increasing the appropriation at this time would be of any advantage.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman a farmer or an agriculturist?

Mr. COCKS of New York. I am a farmer, and Uncle Joe will vouch for me.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You farm by telephone, do you not?

Mr. COCKS of New York. Now, I would like to say, gentlemen, that if I thought this would do half the good which the gentlemen who are so anxious for this increase claim for it, I would be willing to yield and say it is all right; but I have not heard one of them tell us how it is going to benefit any particular farmer. If they want to get the soil analyzed they can send it to the State's experimental station or to the laboratory here at Washington. If they want to find out how deep the loam is, or how deep the clay is, or how deep the sand is, they can go and dig a hole on their farm; that is all they do in part of the soil survey, drill holes and——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture does recommend and commends this most favorably in all of his reports?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COCKS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I guess it is just as well.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I am very much afraid that the Agricultural Committee is making a personal matter of the Soil Survey. They seem to stand in solid phalanx against this amendment to increase the appropriation. I do not blame some of them. I do not blame the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT], the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. POLLARD], all of whom represent States where they only have to throw corn out of the window in the spring and get their wagons and gather it in the fall without labor. [Laughter and applause.] They do not know anything about farming. [Applause.] They know absolutely nothing about it; nature does it for them. I am surprised, however, at my friend from Virginia [Mr. LAMB]. As I ride through Virginia and look at the red hills, with the soil all washed away, and when I ride through the State of my friend from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] [laughter and applause]——

Mr. COCKS of New York. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GRIGGS. No; I do not yield. When I call to mind the condition of the State of my friend from South Carolina and see the bald and barren spots, with cotton growing 6 inches high—we call it "bumble bee" cotton in Georgia [great applause and laughter]—and think of his opposition to soil surveys or anything else, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of enriching the land and enabling the farmers to utilize it, I am indeed surprised. I confess that Georgia needs all the help along this line she can get. [Applause.]

I do not blame the gentleman from Oyster Bay [Mr. COCKS], who claims to be a farmer. A grower of what? Of oysters and clams [laughter and applause], and the gentleman has not yet, and I judge from what he is doing right now, shown that he has learned anything from either—that is, not to insist on interrupting when some other gentleman has the floor. [Laughter.] In addition to the oysters and the clams, and the asparagus, and the cabbage, I understand he grew the President [applause and laughter], and the Secretary of the Treasury. With all of these great and good vegetables growing on my friend's farm, he ought to be satisfied.

A MEMBER. And three Members of Congress.

Mr. GRIGGS. Has he grown three Members of Congress? Then I want to compliment the gentleman on the fact that he has grown something good. [Laughter.] If he has grown three vegetables which have graduated into Members of this House it was a pretty good day's work, farmer or no farmer.

Mr. COCKS of New York. Two of them on the other side.

Mr. GRIGGS. I do not blame the gentleman from Oyster Bay who only grows Members of the House of Representatives, asparagus, oysters, clams, Presidents of the United States, and Secretaries of the Treasury, I do not blame him for being opposed to this amendment. [Laughter.] Virginia and Ohio, proud mothers of Presidents and Cabinet officers, must at last give up the ghost and join in glad acclaim to the gentleman from Oyster Bay, the proud grower of oysters, clams, asparagus, onions, cabbages, Members of Congress, Cabinet officers, and Presidents, all on one common Long Island farm. [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. MANN. From clams to the President is a long variation. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRIGGS. It is a far call from clams to the President of the United States. [Laughter.] I do not blame a man for opposing soil surveys who can do all this. You get so arrogant that you forget the common farmers throughout the United States. [Applause.] You never did know their needs, and if you find them out now through what many of us on this side of the House and a few on that side have told you, you do not care anything about it. Yet you believe yourselves to be the great leaders of agriculture. [Laughter.] You have met together in solemn conclave and prepared a bill which you think ought to go through without amendment. Why? You have not offered a solitary reason this afternoon, except that you think you know more about it than anybody else. I never belonged to this Agricultural Committee, but I did at one time belong to a better one than ever sat in this House. An old gray mule and myself made up the committee. [Great laughter and applause.] I was the chairman. [Applause and laughter.] If you agriculturists knew anything about that, you would be in favor of increasing this appropriation just as we are to-day. [Applause.] We never had any amendments offered to our bills. [Laughter and applause.]

They were all accepted just as we agreed on them. We had no trouble about time to speak. I cussed when the plow handles hit me and the mule brayed when the horn blew. [Great laughter and applause.] Our farm was a little like the supposed plantation of my Chicago friend [Mr. MADDEN], who, I am told, has large plantations on State street in the heart of that great city. But, seriously, gentlemen, why cry "extravagance" whenever a small appropriation is asked for the benefit of the farmer? I understand that the Navy has used up $150,000 worth of shot and shell in target practice at Magdalena Bay, where our fleet has been for the past few weeks. Nobody calls that extravagance. Then why talk of wasting money in helping the men who must stand behind the guns whenever real war comes? Some one many years ago announced the great truth that before the hammer hit upon the anvil, before the fires blazed in the forges, the cultivation of the soil began. We must depend on the farmer at last. Let us hold up his hands as he moves along the basis of our greatness as a people. [Great applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I make the usual request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the success of an enterprise depends upon the energy and the intelligence that are expended upon it. Great business projects thrive by reducing waste to the minimum, and by making every factor and part of the business yield their maximum of profit. It is the application of science to industry that brings success. In the last analysis, agriculture is the basis of every nation's wealth and prosperity. And in proportion as agriculture thrives the people thrive. Since agriculture is so important, should not the utmost that science can do be applied to it?

In Illinois scientific agriculture is rapidly taking its place by the side of grammar, spelling, and arithmetic as a branch of study in the public schools. The result of this is sure to make the coming generation love the farm more and to be more intelligent farmers. In connection with a convention held at Syracuse, N. Y., last October to investigate ways for improving farming conditions in New York State, President Roosevelt wrote in a letter to Mr. Giles H. Stilwell:

> There must be a far more careful and scientific study than in the past of the adaptation of soils to crops so that unprofitable crops may be eliminated and the others extended in such fashion as may be suited to the widely varying climatic and soil conditions of this State. There must be an extension of animal husbandry and adaptation of breeds of animals to suit soils, climate, and topography; and a careful study of manurial and fertilizing requirements of the soils must be made.

Mr. Chairman, the era of the old-time farming is gone. To-day is the day of scientific farming. The man who goes out to work upon the farm and till it must know to what kind of crop that particular soil is adapted. There is no use of talking about growing wheat upon ground which is adapted to some other crop and which has not the elements that go to produce wheat. But it is necessary, if you are going to grow a crop of wheat, or corn, or potatoes, to know what the elements are in that ground that will produce those crops. And if these elements be lacking, they must be supplied. The State from which I come I think is a fairly good agricultural State. The reputation of Illinois is pretty good in that respect. [Applause.]

Yet, I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the State of Illinois realizes to-day more than ever in her history the necessity of the soil survey [applause], because the farmers of Illinois have learned that a proper understanding of that to which the soil is adaptable has enabled them to grow bushels of corn and wheat where formerly they could grow very little. I could show you in the district which I have the honor to represent one of those old prairie farms that a few years ago could be bought possibly for $10 an acre, that in the last year grew 75 bushels of corn to the acre when it was treated properly according to a soil survey. [Applause.] Go to the State of Arkansas, where a few years ago there was a lot of old prairie land that possibly was not worth $2 per acre, and yet under this soil survey and these utilization men that have been talked about here, that land grows 75 bushels of rice to the acre, and is worth from $50 to $75 per acre. In the great State of New York we find in twenty years the valuation of the farms has deteriorated $168,000,000.

Last fall it was necessary for the Chamber of Commerce of Syracuse, N. Y., to call a convention to reclaim more than a thousand farms that had been abandoned in that great agricultural State. There is no way, Mr. Chairman, to do this except by a proper soil survey, and then follow it up with the utilization men, who show what can be done upon a particular kind of soil.

Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this increased appropriation, because I believe that the farmers of this country will realize more than fourfold for what is being spent here. In the State of Illinois, in the district which I have the honor to represent, the State university has done a great deal in their soil surveys and experiment-station work, but I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that the State of Illinois needs more, and every State in this Union needs the soil survey and the experiment stations that they establish. [Applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I am not a member of the Committee on Agriculture, and I dislike to take issue with the judgment of the committee, but I am heartily in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] to increase the amount of appropriation for the soil survey. I am in favor of it, Mr. Chairman, from a practical, tangible demonstration of the benefit accruing from a soil survey which was made in the district I have the honor to represent. I think I can say with truth and sincerity that the farmers of the Tennessee Valley in Alabama are as progressive and keep as much in touch with improved agricultural machinery and scientific advances, certainly, as any section of the South. There have been two soil surveys made in our district, and I am now urging the third. The first survey was one of the earliest made in Alabama. The movement for a soil survey was urged on me by our farmers desiring to take advantage of the knowledge of the improvement of the soil and its fertility offered by the Government. The result has been most gratifying from every standpoint. Gratifying, not only because it has had the effect of teaching the farmer what crop his soil was best adapted to produce, but it has been the best advertisement we have had to bring in settlers. One soil survey was made of one entire county in the western portion of the Tennessee Valley, the county of Lauderdale, Ala. It embraced the entire county.

The other survey embraced portions of the counties of Limestone and Madison, and I have pending an application to have the same investigation made in Jackson County and every other county in the Eighth Alabama District, because I believe that great benefit to our agricultural interests will come from these soil surveys. I am greatly surprised to hear anyone speak to the contrary. When these different soil surveys were made in our district I sent two or more, a small number, of the Lauderdale County surveys to the land and immigration agent of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, one of the greatest trunk systems of the South, that runs through the county of Lauderdale. I also sent to the same agent of the Southern Railroad, a great and important line, the pamphlet and maps of the soil survey of Madison and Limestone counties, through which its line of road passed.

The land and immigration agents of these two great railroad systems requested me to send them for distribution all of the soil-survey bulletins that I could spare, because they were splendid advertising matter, to be distributed in the great States of Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, and other Northern States, many of whose people were desirous of going South, where cheap lands, good climate, and a hearty welcome awaited them. Before getting through I sent several thousands of these bulletins, with maps, to each of the land and immigration agents of these great railroad systems. About two years after the distribution of this literature I called on the agent of the Louisville and Nashville road to know what beneficial results, if any, the soil-survey pamphlets had brought.

He replied, giving me the number of families that had passed over his line of road for the preceding twelve months, where they came from, and where they located. One hundred and seventeen families had passed. Ninety per cent of them were native-born Americans, and they came from the following States as in order named: Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, and other Northern States. They had "taken up" or purchased thousands of acres of land and made their homes thereon. But the most gratifying part of his report was that the county of Lauderdale, through which his railroad passed and where the soil survey had been made, had received quite three times more of these settlers than any other county on the line of his road. The agent of the Southern road reported practically the same result. I regret that I can not publish the letters written to me on which I base this statement. I am supporting the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] because I want to continue this work.

What you may attribute it to I know not, but I attribute it to the fact of the soil-survey maps and pamphlets sent out. They were not Italians who came down there to disseminate the teachings of the Mafia or the Black Hand societies. They were American-born citizens, bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh who came down into this country—men and women who fraternized with our people, joined us in our celebrations, and gladly aided in building schoolhouses and churches—and they are there to-day, having taken up a large number of acres of our cheap, fertile, untilled lands, living as agriculturists, happy and prospering. I say if a soil survey can produce so great a benefit as that, I am not only for the increase proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi, but really would be willing to vote even for a larger appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at a statement made by a member of the Committee on Agriculture when he said his defense against this amendment was that he thought the Chief of the Bureau probably was greedy and stretching out his hands to get more power and authority than he ought to have. That, I am quite sure, is true. I am referring to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] and some others. Yet I find in the RECORD, and during this very debate, that worthy and distinguished gentleman, aided by other earnest Democrats, advocating that experts be sent down in the cotton region of the South to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a standard for the different grades of cotton, calling to his assistance expert cotton classifiers, by fixing a standard of middling cotton, and using the same as a basis, establishing nine different grades, etc. The unique and attractive part of that debate was the forcible suggestion made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], who probably never saw a cotton plant growing, or had any knowledge of our great staple, that such legislation as that would lead to disputes respecting the different cotton grades, which would inevitably bring subsequent legislation by Congress as would require the Government of the United States to have an expert and attendants, with a cotton laboratory at all the cotton commercial centers in the South. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] is entitled to the thanks of all of us who believe that the sovereign States of the Union can look after such matters and look after the maintenance of some of the individual rights and personal liberties of its citizens and not ask the Federal Government to take charge in full.

We know if the Government should appoint cotton experts, it would not be but a few years before the Secretary of Agriculture would be asking Congress to create a commission of from five to seven cotton experts to meet here in Washington and fix the different grades of cotton according to the reports made by the experts sent out to gather information. That is just the way all such legislation begins—ask for experts, then a commission, and then the Federal Government, to the detriment of the State and individual rights over their own private home affairs, assumes and exercises control over the whole subject-matter. I am not intending to, nor do I, reflect upon the good faith or sincerity of anyone, but I do say, Mr. Chairman, that I do regret this growing tendency to look to the Federal Government to help us and guide us in all our worldly matters, and with perfect respect I enter my earnest dissent to such propositions as I understand them.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman evidently has not read the so-called "cotton amendment," or he would not come to the conclusion that he has.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, I have. Its evil is not now, but hereafter—legislation that will follow. I believe that kind of legislation initiated here will result, in the course of a few years, in the establishment of a laboratory board of experts from the Government in all the great commercial centers of the South where cotton is sold for the purpose of passing upon the different grades; and I was glad that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] made that objection, that the Government was extending its authority too far. [Applause.]

Mr. McKINLAY of California. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to say a word in support of the amendment offered to the bill of the committee. There has been a great deal said to-day about the farmer and about the benefit that would come to the farmer by reason of an increased appropriation, by which intelligence might be disseminated, and through the means of which he might obtain a better idea as to the character of the soil that he was to cultivate. But there is another side to the problem, and that is that the prospective farmer must be taken into consideration.

If my reading serves me right, one of the greatest problems we have to contend with in the United States, and have had for the last ten years, is the tendency of our population to congest in large cities. We find everywhere complaint that the lands are being forsaken and people are congesting in the cities, and it is almost impossible to scatter them out over the land. On a little trip about a month ago I met a manufacturer of automobiles from New York.

He told me he was on his way west for the purpose of trying to hire men to work in his factory. He said: "Although we pay 20 to 25 per cent more wages to the men in our factories than they are getting in the West, yet we can not get them to do the work we give them." I said: "What is the reason?" He said: "The reason is because, although we pay them $5 or $6 a day, they can not live on it in the city of New York." And that applies to nearly all the cities of the Union now. They are so congested and overgrown with population that rents and the price of living have risen to such an extent that this tendency to congest the population in the cities must in some way be broken up.

So within the last couple of years we see a tendency to return to the farms, and we find in the various States of the West the farms are being cut up. Our great holdings in California of 10,000 and 20,000 acre ranches are being cut up and offered to small landholders, and we find thousands of workingmen and mechanics coming in and taking up the lands.

Therefore we wish to give them encouragement. In my own district we have over 2,000,000 acres of land that ought to be settled up. We find them coming in from cities and towns, and they want knowledge. They want to know how to handle the land they settle upon. To the average town man the problem of tackling a piece of land and making a living upon it is almost as great as the problem of tackling the stock market. So I believe in increasing these appropriations, in doubling, if necessary, the number of parties that shall be sent out. In my own district I have requests from every county of the Sacramento Valley, asking that soil surveys shall be continued. Last fall when the soil survey was finished in one of my counties I was given 2,000 of their reports and maps. In three weeks they were gone, and I had 2,000 more requests, and I have had requests for an extension of the soil surveys in almost every part of my district. This applies to all of California, and so it seems to me that no amount of money could be expended that would give better results and do better and more lasting work than that for the extension of the soil survey. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, when the Bureau of Soils was first established as a division in the Weather Bureau of the Department of Agriculture very little was specifically known about the soils of the world. Liebig's ideas as to the mineral theory of plant growth had prevailed for upward of fifty years, and chemists all over the world were endeavoring to explain the differences in soil fertility by chemical analysis of soils and plants. This had long been recognized as inefficient and insufficient to explain the problems constantly arising upon the farm. It was recognized vaguely that we had different classes of soils, such as sands, loams, and clays, but even with these there was no exact knowledge of their relation to crops or to specific treatments. In all the world there were but four definitely established soil types, viz., the loess soils of China, the chalk soils of England, the moor soils of Germany, and the chernozem or black earth of Russia. Chemical fertilizers had been introduced and found to be very beneficial, but nothing was known specifically about their action. We are now using upward of a hundred million dollars' worth of commercial fertilizers annually in this country, and yet their action is so uncertain and so greatly influenced by soils, crops, and weather conditions that in very few cases has anything approaching an exact method of treating soils with fertilizers been worked out.

The Bureau of Soils, as a result of the fourteen years of constant and devoted investigation, has worked out the general laws governing the distribution of crops on the soils of the United States. It has made soil surveys and has published maps covering, in the aggregate, approximately 140,000 square miles in all but two of the States and Territories. It has worked out the principles of soil fertility and the cause of the low yield of crops, and in doing this has shown that Liebig was wrong in placing so much importance upon the chemical composition of the minerals of the soil, as it has now found that the fertility or yield of crops is influenced by the chemistry of organic constituents of the soil.

In the progress of the soil-survey work 400 distinct types of soils have been recognized, their peculiarities studied, their relation to crops and their crop adaptation determined, and we now have for the first time in the history of the world the first approximation to a complete classification of the soil resources of a great country as the foundation for the highest development of its agricultural industries. The results of the soil survey are used to a very large extent by our people. The soil maps are taken as the basis for cropping operations; they are recognized as adequate evidence in courts of law; they are accepted as sufficient and satisfactory evidence for the sale and conveyance of farm property. The great work of the Soil Survey is referred to in items of admiration and praise by all the civilized nations of the world and as an example which they must ultimately follow.

The investigations of the Bureau of Soils on soil fertility, on the rotation of crops, and on the office and use of fertilizers is educating our farmers to a more intelligent use of their soils and these views are being accepted the world over as the beginning of a new era in scientific agriculture that is raising and elevating the practice of agriculture and making it more certain and more effective. The average yield of the cereal crops in the United States is one-third or one-half the yields obtained from the older soils of Europe and Asia. With the increase in population and the consequent necessity for providing even more bounteous crops than we are now receiving, the soil must respond more bountifully to our labors, and this may only come safely and wisely through such investigations as the Bureau of Soils is now conducting. It is to support and extend this fundamental work of the Department of Agriculture that I think a larger appropriation is necessary for the Bureau of Soils.

The work of the Bureau of Soils consists of an examination of the character and extent of the different classes of soil which make up the agricultural domain of the country.

The soil of the United States constitutes the one great inexhaustible natural resource of the country. From it spring not only the food and raiment of the people, but nearly one-half (42 per cent) of the materials used in manufacture and a majority of the materials exchanged in commerce. From the soil, in the present generation, the farmers of the United States have won a living for themselves and for their countrymen and in addition have furnished the commodities whose sale and exchange have much reduced the dependence of this country upon the capital of foreign nations.

SMALL PROPORTION OF LAND UNDER TILLAGE.

The agricultural domain of the United States (exclusive of the outlying possessions) in 1900 comprised 5,739,657 farms, aggregating 841,201,546 acres. Of this area almost exactly one-half is improved land, and the remainder consists of wood lots, swamps, and land that has never been plowed or cropped. Although this is a great total, less than one-half of the whole land area has been turned into farms, and less than one-fifth is actually improved. Even upon this showing the farm lands of the United States comprise seven times the farm-land area of France, with 39,000,000 people; eight times the farm-land area of Germany, with 60,000,000 people; and thirty-one times the farm-land area of England and Wales, with 34,000,000 people. The American farms now existing could be made to produce enough to feed many times the country's present population, were the best and most intensive agricultural methods of European countries applied, and still have a surplus for export.

It is to the full development of these vast but dormant resources that the soil-survey work is devoted.

The work of making soil surveys was begun in 1899, and in nine years' work the surveys have covered 139,247 square miles, or more than 89,000,000 acres of land. This amounts to about 10 per cent of the total land area held in farms in the United States. Each year from fourteen to seventeen parties of two men each are kept in the field, and thirty-five to forty-five areas, usually counties, are surveyed each year. In order that the greatest economy in expenditure may be achieved, the soil survey parties are kept in the field the year around, in so far as is possible being assigned to areas in the South Atlantic and Gulf States during the winter time, and being assigned in summer to more northern communities when the climatic conditions permit of outdoor field work. In this way large areas are surveyed each year at a minimum cost, the average cost of the field work amounting to about $2.75 per square mile, or less than one-half cent per acre for all areas thus far surveyed.

The Soil Survey recognizes at present 13 great soil provinces, 58 soil series, and 461 soil types. Of these types some 130 are more or less local in character, while the remainder are of widespread occurrence within their respective provinces.

Enough has been said to demonstrate the wide range and the wonderful richness of the soil resources of the country. The other problem of equal importance, possibly the greatest agricultural problem of the nation as a whole, is that of the proper and complete development of these resources along lines which shall give not only increased crop values, but also increasing ability to produce crops upon the part of the soils.

Careful consideration must be given to the fact that at least 461 types of soil possessing distinctive properties are already known to exist. It rests with some one, whether a private individual or a public official, to determine the crop or crops to which each one of these soils is best adapted; to devise the methods of soil management by which each one of these soils may be made to produce a sufficient crop to repay all expenses and to render a profit; to adapt the systems of farm economy through crop rotations, tillage, and fertilization so that these different soils may produce their crops for long periods of time at least without deterioration and, if American farming is to become a science, with actual increase in crop-producing power.

The soil-survey work thus posseses a dual aspect: (1) It must deal with those problems of crop and soil adaptation which concern the present individuals and generation; and (2) it must accumulate a fund of information in regard to soils which will assist in solving the broad problems of the nation's soil resources and the utilization of these resources, not only for the support of a growing population, but also for maintaining a favorable balance of trade for the nation.

From these reports on soil surveys the individual farmer may learn the relationships of the soils upon his own farm, not only to the other soils in the immediate neighborhood but to soils of the same character in widely separated regions. He may thus observe and study understandingly the methods and results obtained under the most favorable conditions by successful farmers upon these soils. His horizon of observation is enlarged, and he may more surely apply the experience and the observation of others to his own particular needs and conditions. He is able to consider his own farm not as an isolated property, but in its due relationship to other farms located upon the same soils and in a region of similar climatic surroundings. The single report thus serves the purpose of the individual whose problem is one of a fixed and occupied region.

At the present time, as at all times in the history of the country, there is a large class of persons who for various reasons desire to secure new farms in more or less distant localities for the pursuit of general agriculture or for the production of special crops. Inquiries from such persons always cover certain climatic and soil features, and each desires to secure information which will enable him to compare conditions personally known to himself with those of new localities under consideration. Inquiries of this nature are constantly received at the Department of Agriculture, and wherever possible the information is supplied by the reports and maps covering the areas concerned. No advice to do this or that is communicated; only the information upon which a judgment may be based. The use of soil-survey reports for this purpose is by no means confined to reports upon regions which are sparsely settled or newly opened for agricultural occupation. The constant changes in farm values in all parts of the United States are calling the attention of individual farmers to particular localities in the older States, where possible advantages may be gained from the sale of high-priced lands and the purchase of others which, for the time, are offered at a lower figure. Greater demands have been made during the past few years for soil-survey reports covering areas in the Eastern and Southern States than for those in any other localities. Whatever the cause, the attention of individuals and investors is strongly shown by this demand.

* * * * * * *

All of these uses of soil maps and of soil-survey reports are immediate and present. They are more or less personal to the individual farmer, investor, or student. They do not constitute the only use, nor possibly the greatest use, of these surveys. As agriculture, based on the soil as its fundamental resource, is the greatest business of the country at the present time, so it must remain for many generations to come. Agriculture is still a generalized business, although its specialization into horticulture, market gardening, tobacco culture, cotton culture, and other subdivisions has begun. With increasing population, with greater intensity of cultivation, greater demands will continually be made upon the soil and greater precision and skill in the selection and handling of soils for special crops will be required. It will be extravagantly wasteful to allow these developments to occur along the lines of chance and to secure the ultimate ends as the result of haphazard trial or experimentation. The soil and climatic factors which govern plant and crop growth must be understood and appreciated. Whenever through any cause a particularly valuable crop is brought to perfection upon a given soil, the extent and geographic distribution and the climatic environment of that soil must be known in order to insure the successful spread of its culture.

* * * * * * *

The time has come in the agricultural development of the United States when accurate and detailed knowledge of the soil—its character, varieties, capabilities, and adaptations—is of great importance; and as the years go by such knowledge will become more and more important, until ultimately our greatly increased population will need and will be able to utilize fully the diverse capabilities of these 461 different types of soil.

The importance of the work of the Bureau of Soils to the State of Mississippi can not be overestimated at the present time. The older farm practice of raising cotton as the great money crop, and only devoting enough land to corn to suffice for the production of a small amount of the feed for the work stock is being supplanted by the introduction of new crops whose soil adaptations are not fully known, and the methods of cultivation and fertilization need to be studied. Throughout the entire northeastern part of the State extends the great prairie belt, formerly devoted to large plantations given over almost exclusively to the production of cotton. The investigators of the Bureau of Soils say that there are no soils in the eastern part of the United States better suited to the production of alfalfa than these same prairie soils. A few farmers have undertaken its cultivation. They have been fairly successful, and the community is desirous of knowing the extent of the lands upon which this valuable crop may be raised. One great need of the cotton planter, in order that he may reduce the cost of production of his crop, is hay, and alfalfa supplies this need to a remarkable degree.

There are thousands of acres of these alfalfa soils lying in the eastern and northern part of the State. The location and extent of these soils should be determined as soon as possible, in order that the possibilities for alfalfa growing may be made known, not only to those who are at present citizens of the State, but also to others who are desirous of securing lands and homes within the State.

There are other soils within this same region which are now producing but small yields of cotton and other staple crops which are capable, when once their properties and crop adaptations are understood, of producing fruits and truck crops for sale upon the Northern markets and for home consumption. All of this section of the country is well served by transportation facilities, and the only thing which is necessary to bring about a great development of the agricultural resources of the northern portion of the State is a thorough understanding of the great capabilities of the soils, and of the best methods for tilling and for fertilizing them.

This work of the soil survey and of soil management should be pushed, for through its influence it will be possible to largely increase the yield of cotton upon the Mississippi plantations, to decrease the cost of production of the great staple and aid those other crops which not only yield a profit to the farmer, but also give the home comforts of fresh vegetables and fresh fruits to his family and to his community.

In the study of the soils of the Southern States, it has been found that a great variety of soils exist within the cotton belt, and it is also true that nearly 200 different varieties of cotton have been originated and developed within these regions. All kinds of cotton are not equally suited to be produced upon all kinds of soil, and one of the most valuable pieces of work which can be done by the Bureau of Soils in the interest of cotton planters is a study of the adaptation of the soils of the Gulf States to the production of the different known varieties of cotton. The varieties of cotton which are well suited to production upon the moist alluvial lands of the Mississippi Delta are not all suited to production upon the drier, more sandy lands of the upland portion of the State.

The cottons which will do the best upon the black prairie lands are not at all the varieties which are suited for growth on other soils within the State. Each of these varieties of cotton, because it has long been grown upon the particular soils where it was originated, thrives to better advantage and produces more cotton upon its appropriate soil. Annually thousands of bushels of cotton seed are sold upon the open market to the farmers of Mississippi without the slightest reference to the character of soil upon which this cotton is to be grown. Little is known, either by the experiment stations or by any other agencies, in regard to the particular adaptation of soils to the production of these different varieties of cotton. The soils of the entire cotton belt should be studied carefully, in order to determine the kind of crop, in the first place, which each one is best suited to grow, and then the variety of that crop which is peculiarly suited to the given soil and the existing climate. Thousands of dollars which are carelessly expended every year in the purchase of seed and of fertilizer may thus be saved and the annual yield of cotton may be more than doubled by a simple inexpensive study of these fundamental soil facts. Cases have been known where two different varieties of cotton were planted side by side upon the same soil on the same plantation, the land prepared with equal skill and fertilized with equal care, but because one variety of cotton was suited to the soil and another was not, the adapted variety produced yields of 300 pounds of lint more to the acre than the varieties not so well suited to the soil. At a price of 10 cents per pound this difference in yield would amount to $30 per acre. A single piece of information which can easily be obtained by the Bureau of Soils in regard to all the great soil types and all the varieties of the chief staple crops might thus mean a difference between failure and success on the part of the farmers. I hope the pending amendment will be adopted. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CANDLER, Mr. SMALL, Mr. RANDELL of Texas, and Mr. RICHARDSON requested leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SCOTT. With the understanding that the remarks are to apply to this bill, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. With that understanding, is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can enlighten the House or the members of this committee upon this subject, except to inform them that I am in favor of this amendment. [Applause.] One of the principal reasons therefor is this: I am in favor of any and every proposition that will aid in any way the actual tiller of the soil. [Applause.] I am informed from the discussion that has gone on thus far that some of the Eastern States, and especially that part of the State of New York known as Long Island, have all their territory surveyed. I know of many thousands of acres of land in the West, and some few in the district I represent, that have not been surveyed. I know the people are clamoring for these surveys. I know they want to have them made for the purpose of increasing the agricultural products of their districts.

Now, we talk about economy, but I notice that for some time on the floor of the House whenever an appropriation is sought for that directly affects the true toiler of the soil, economy is the motto. [Applause.] Whenever the products of his labor are put into the commercial channels of this country in which other interests are involved, then one, two, or three millions are cheerfully voted. [Applause.]

I am in favor of the meat inspection proposition, because it inspects the products of the farm, and I am also in favor of giving a little more money to increasing the products of the farm. To-day one of the great crying evils of the country is the high cost of living; and if you increase the opportunity of greater production you thereby decrease the cost of living to the great mass of the laborers of this country.

It can not be said that because two bureaus are wrangling over this proposition that we, the Representatives of the American people, should stand by and take their judgment on a matter of this kind. We represent the people, and because a chief of a bureau says that he has enough, shall we sit here idle and say because of that we will not increase an appropriation—whereas we hear now the Members representing this country, North, East, South, and West, demanding soil survey—shall we give no reason why it shall not be done, but simply say, "No; we must economize because some chief of a bureau says that he has enough?"

I for one am not willing to take the statement of any chief of a bureau that he has sufficient appropriation to make all needed surveys, when the people are clamoring for more. My people demand soil surveys, and so it is in every agricultural portion of the United States. They ought to have it regardless of the paltry sum which is sought to be appropriated by this bill. [Applause.]

Fear not too great an accumulation of knowledge of the soil. This wondrous world and its productivity is too little known. Study it well and proclaim the knowledge thus obtained, for the true basis of all prosperity is Mother Earth.

Every dollar spent in this direction is like "bread cast upon the waters," which returns many fold to all our people. [Applause.]

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, how much time is left to this side?

The CHAIRMAN. Ten minutes.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent that I may use that time or control it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the committee, and I should like one minute.

Mr. SCOTT. I will yield that time to the gentleman.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the Agricultural Committee, but I do not agree with the majority of that committee who oppose this amendment. So convinced am I that this amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], calling for an increase in the appropriation for soil survey and soil utilization purposes, is fair and just, I favor its adoption.

It is in the interest of the farmers of America, and it does seem to me that you might grant them this little sum without delay, for we all know that they have little enough consideration now. I desire to take issue with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB], a member of the committee, when he says that one or two surveys is sufficient for an entire Congressional district. The soil of the county in which I live is entirely unlike the soil of the county south of me. That soil is entirely different from the soil in the county west of me, and so on and on. The argument that he makes does not at all apply to this case. I favor the passage of the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I feel assured that many speeches made here this afternoon have been made under a misapprehension as to the real meaning of a soil survey. I am also assured that a large proportion of the so-called "demands" that have come up from the country for these surveys are based upon a misapprehension of their meaning. I have a letter sent to me by the Chief of the Bureau—sent to me perhaps because it was written by a citizen of my own State—to illustrate the demand throughout the country for these soil surveys, and I want to read a few of the reasons the writer gives for asking for a soil survey:

First. Our farmers have been disappointed in the crops for the past four years on account of the excessive rainfall during the greater part of the crop season.

Second. A large majority were settlers on the land in the early days and have been selling the fertility off their farms.

Third. They never had much education, and have not kept step with the march of progress.

Fourth. They have suffered from the overflows that come periodically from the rivers.

And so, if I cared to take the time, I could read a dozen other alleged reasons for wanting a soil survey, not one of which presents a question which would be answered by a soil survey. There is not a single problem suggested in this letter which properly belongs within the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Soils, and no question is suggested which could be answered by a soil survey.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I can not yield, of course. It has been the opinion of some members of the Committee on Agriculture for many years that the average farmer was not able to understand and utilize the soil survey. The Bureau has contended to the contrary until this year.

This year they came before us, and I quote what the Chief said:

To obtain the fullest information and the greatest benefit from the soil survey, we have found it necessary to send out what we call utilization parties, to show how the soils of any particular area, county, or district would be most profitably utilized.

Is it not clear enough to be seen that this is the careful phraseology used by a man in gracefully retiring from a position which he has occupied heretofore? Now, there have been surveys during these nine years, during which time the Chief of this Bureau had not yet discovered that it required "additional information" to make these surveys of value—there have been made during these nine years surveys over 140,000 square miles of territory.

I insist, Mr. Chairman, that before doubling this appropriation to send out enough parties to make twice as many surveys per annum as we are making now we would better allow some utilization to be made of the knowledge that already obtains. We would better make the farmers acquainted with the results of the work they have already had. In my own home county a soil survey was made. It was made there at my request, because I doubted the value of this work and wanted to test it by comparing it with my own knowledge. I was born in that county. I have lived there all my life, and I thought I had some reasonable knowledge of the character of the soil and what it would produce. So I had this survey made. There were 2,000 reports issued. I sent every one of those reports into that county. I wrote to twenty of my personal friends, uncommonly intelligent, progressive farmers, and asked them to read carefully what that report stated and let me know whether they learned anything of value from it. I got just one answer, and that man said that if he had had the information when he came there thirty years ago, he might perhaps have made use of it to his advantage, but there was not anything in it that was new to him now. That was three years ago, and since then not one human being has said a word to me when I have been home about the value of the information which he got from that survey, showing clearly enough, Mr. Chairman, that unless these surveys are followed up by somebody who can interpret their meaning to the people, the people get absolutely no value from them. Now, who is the proper person to follow them up? Why, the people who know how to raise crops, the people who have given their lives to the study of plants and how to breed and plant and cultivate them. They are the people, and that division is already organized in the Bureau of Plant Industry. I want to say to the members of this committee that this change has been made with the absolute approval of the Secretary of Agriculture. He knew what was to be done before it was done. He stated to the committee it was his opinion that this work should not be duplicated, that there should not be built up two great divisions in the two bureaus of this Department to cover precisely the same ground. He stated that the amount carried in this bill would be ample for this Bureau to do all the work it could properly do, and that the work of utilization would be continued by the other Bureau, where it properly belongs. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate on this amendment is closed. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi) there were—ayes 102, noes 87.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. SCOTT and Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi.

The House again divided and the tellers reported—ayes 100, noes 88.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Tennessee is entitled to have his amendment reported.

Mr. SCOTT. I am perfectly willing to have the amendment considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "countries," page 29, line 17, the following:

"To investigate, with a view of improving the conditions relating to the supply and sale of domestic tobacco to any foreign country or countries where the business of buying and selling tobacco is conducted by the Government."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves that the committee do now rise.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the motion to rise for the present in order to make this statement. I understand that an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD]——

Mr. GRIGGS. He withdrew that amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Then the amendment now pending is that offered by the gentleman from Tennessee. I have no disposition in the world to crowd out any other amendments. My one idea is that the usual time for adjournment has arrived.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, I will sleep better if the gentleman will let us vote on this amendment now.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the vote being taken, the debate on the matter being closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, can we have the amendment reported?

Mr. POLLARD. Can we have the amendment read again?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It has been in the bill for two or three years.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 19158, the agricultural appropriation bill, and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. ASHBROOK was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of John M. Stocking, H. R. 19183, Sixtieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia was granted leave of absence for four days.

EULOGIES.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives shall at 2 o'clock on Saturday, April 25, 1908, consider resolutions upon the life, character, and public services of the Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN and the Hon. EDMUND W. PETTUS, late Senators from the State of Alabama.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 13077. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish four condemned brass cannon and cannon balls to the Confederate Monument Association, at Franklin, Tenn.; and

H. R. 17055. An act to validate certain acts of the thirty-seventh legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred, as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation required by the Department to complete the service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KNOX introduced a bill (S. 6438) to appropriate the sum of $30,000 as a part contribution toward the erection of a monument at Germantown, Pa., in commemoration of the founding of the first permanent German settlement in America, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6439) granting a pension to Miami L. Perveil, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WARNER introduced a bill (S. 6440) to regulate commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, and to amend the act approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to say that by introducing the bill I do not commit myself to all its details. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRANE introduced a bill (S. 6441) granting to Percival Lowell certain lands within the San Francisco Mountains National Forest, in the Territory of Arizona, for observatory purposes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

Mr. WETMORE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6442) to increase the pension of James L. Foss; and

A bill (S. 6443) granting an increase of pension to Sarah T. Young (with the accompanying papers).

Mr. RICHARDSON introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6444) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Moore; and

A bill (S. 6445) granting an increase of pension to Edward B. Louderbough.

Mr. GORE introduced a bill (S. 6446) for the relief of the Freeman Brothers, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6447) giving Herman Lehman (Montechema) an allotment, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BACON introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 6448) for the relief of the estate of Emily R. Hathorn, deceased; and

A bill (S. 6449) for the relief of the legal representatives of John P. Lamar, deceased.

Mr. CURTIS introduced a bill (S. 6450) for the relief of the heirs of John Birkett, deceased, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6451) granting an increase of pension to William Relph, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NELSON (for Mr. KITTREDGE) introduced a bill (S. 6452) granting an increase of pension to John W. Hewitt, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WARREN introduced a bill (S. 6453) for the relief of the New York and Cuba Mail Steamship Company, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McCREARY introduced a bill (S. 6454) for the relief of the State Street African Baptist Church, of Bowling Green, Ky., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (S. 6455) to make Holland, in the State of Michigan, a subport of entry, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 6456) to make Petoskey, in the State of Michigan, a subport of entry, and for other purposes.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6457) granting an increase of pension to Josiah M. Rice, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CARTER introduced a bill (S. 6458) to authorize the Yellowstone Valley Steel Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Missouri River in Montana, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SIMMONS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 75) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to make a survey and examination for a continuous waterway from Boston, Mass., by various routes to Wilmington, N. C., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PILES submitted an amendment authorizing the President to nominate and, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint as brigadier-general and retire upon his own application any officer now on the active list of the Army who served at any time as an enlisted man or commissioned officer during the war of the rebellion, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the construction, erection, and completion of a statue of Gen. Nathanael Greene, to be erected on the battlefield of Guilford Court House, in Guilford County, N. C., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

FOREIGN TRADE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that 1,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 375, which is a contribution by Naval Constructor Evans on shipping matters, and is very brief, be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

There being no objection, the order was reduced to writing, and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That 1,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 375, Sixtieth Congress, first session, "Trade follows the Flag," be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

MINING TECHNOLOGY BRANCH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed and the Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

The joint resolution (S. R. 35) to provide for a mining technology branch in the Geological Survey was announced as the first business on the Calendar.

Mr. TELLER. I think the joint resolution had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over without prejudice.

Mr. TELLER. Let it go under Rule IX. We shall want more than five minutes to debate the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go to the Calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

The bill (S. 48) to reimburse depositors of the late Freedman's Savings and Trust Company was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the absence of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], I ask that the bill may go over. He is making some investigation concerning the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR.

The bill (S. 4812) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that also go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

DISCHARGE OF COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I desire, out of order, to make some reports.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reports will be received, in the absence of objection.

Mr. FORAKER. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report adversely, with amendments, Senate bill 6206, and to report adversely Senate bill 5729. I am not instructed, however, to move their indefinite postponement, as is usual, but to ask that they be given places on the Calendar, and to give notice that at the earliest convenient opportunity they will be called up for consideration. As far as I am concerned, I shall ask that the Senate disagree to the adverse report on Senate bill 5729 and that the measure be considered and passed.

Mr. WARREN. The reports are not long, I presume.

Mr. FORAKER. I made no report, except what I have just stated.

Mr. WARREN. I was going to ask that the report might be read, if there was any report.

Mr. FORAKER. No; I did not feel like dwelling on the subject beyond the remark I have just made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bills reported by the Senator from Ohio will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5729) to correct the records and authorize the reenlistment of certain noncommissioned officers and enlisted men belonging to Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, who were discharged without honor under Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, and the restoration to them of all rights of which they have been deprived on account thereof; and

A bill (S. 6206) for the relief of certain former members of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of United States Infantry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bills will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, regarding the bills just reported, a minority of the committee desires to make a report, which I send to the desk. It is very short, and I ask to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report (No. 446), as follows:

[Senate Report No. 446, Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

CERTAIN FORMER MEMBERS OF THE TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT UNITED STATES INFANTRY.

April 1, 1908.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following as the views of the minority, to accompany S. 6206:

We, the undersigned members of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, are opposed to an adverse report upon the bill (S. 6206) for the relief of certain former members of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of United States Infantry, as amended.

On March 11, 1908, we joined in a report to the Senate made in pursuance to Senate resolution No. 208, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session (Senate Rept. No. 355, pt. 1), and in a portion of the report referred to we recommended the enactment of a bill similar to the amended bill now reported adversely.

We adhere to our recommendation made at that time, and favor the passage of the amended bill, which reads as follows:

[S. 6206. Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

A bill (S. 6206) for the relief of certain former members of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of United States Infantry.

Be it enacted, etc., That if at any time within one year after the approval of this act the President shall be satisfied that any former enlisted man of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of United States Infantry who was discharged from the military service as a member of said regiment under the provisions of a special order No. 266, and dated at the War Department on the 9th day of November, 1906, had no participation in the affray or guilty knowledge of the persons engaged in said affray that took place at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13–14, 1906, the President may authorize the enlistment of said man; and any man who shall enlist in the military service under authority so given by the President shall be held and considered to have reenlisted immediately after his discharge under the provisions of the special order hereinbefore cited and to be entitled, from the date of his discharge under said special order, to the pay, allowances, and other rights and benefits that he would have been entitled to receive from said date of discharge if he had been honorably discharged under the provisions of said special order and had reenlisted immediately.

F. E. WARREN,
H. C. LODGE,
WM. WARNER,
H. A. DU PONT.

I am opposed to an adverse report upon any measure which would relieve the innocent members of the discharged battalion of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, and I favor the immediate enactment of legislation for their relief.

N. B. SCOTT.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire that the minority report may have due record on the Calendar, so that it will come up automatically with the adverse report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FORAKER. In view of the minority report, and what is set forth therein, I think it due to the Senate I should state that so far as I am aware no member of the Committee on Military Affairs has changed his mind with respect to the legislation that should be enacted since the reports were made from that committee on the 11th day of March.

It will be remembered that four members of the committee, who were a part of the majority making the report on that occasion, recommended the passage of the bill to which the Senator from Wyoming has just called attention. It will be remembered that four other members of the committee, constituting a minority, recommended Senate bill 5729, which I reported adversely a moment ago.

It was impossible, as those reports indicated, to command a majority vote in the committee for either of these measures, and the only way to return the bills to the Senate at all was by an adverse report. That was the only kind of a report we could get. So they have come back to the Senate without either bill having any advantage over the other. They are both reported adversely, they both go to the Calendar, and I suppose that consideration of both will be asked in due time.

I have already given notice, that so far as Senate bill 5729 is concerned, the one originally introduced by myself, I shall ask, as soon as it can be conveniently taken up, that the Senate disagree to the adverse report and that the bill be passed, if it can secure enough support.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have only a word to add. Since my colleague on the committee has stated that four members of the majority, who recommend adversely the bill introduced by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], favor the one introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], and that four others favor the bill introduced by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], I think I ought to state that the other five members of the committee, which completes the number to the full committee of thirteen, are not in favor of either measure.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, as perhaps the Senate noticed, I signed a minority report alone. I favored the so-called Foraker bill, but if we could not have that I was willing to take the other bill.

I fear that while we may be disputing over the difference of opinion held by different Senators those innocent men may be suffering. Consequently I did not want to engage in anything that would look like obstructing one or the other of those bills; but I am looking only to a bill that will do these colored soldiers justice.

J. DE L. LAFITTE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 5268) for the relief of J. de L. Lafitte was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to cause to be investigated and examined the circumstances of an embezzlement of quartermaster funds on board the United States Army transport Logan, discovered while Jacques de L. Lafitte, captain, quartermaster, United States Army, was serving as transport quartermaster, amounting to $2,923.44; and if upon such examination and investigation he shall be satisfied that said Lafitte exercised due diligence and care, under the circumstances existing there at the time, in view of his physical disability, and had no personal knowledge that such embezzlement or embezzlements were occurring, and exercised due diligence in ferreting out and disclosing same, then he is hereby authorized and directed to release and discharge Lafitte from any further liability for the sum of $2,923.44, and to refund and pay back to him whatever sums may have been withheld and deducted from his pay.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENLARGEMENT OF HOMESTEADS.

The bill (S. 6155) to provide for an enlarged homestead, was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in section 1, page 1, line 6, after the word "California," to strike out "Idaho," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who is a qualified entryman under the homestead laws of the United States may enter, by legal subdivisions, under the provisions of this act, in the States of Colorado, California, Montana, Nevada, North Dakota, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, and the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, 320 acres, or less, of nonmineral, nonirrigable, unreserved, and unappropriated surveyed public lands which do not contain merchantable timber, located in a reasonably compact body, and not over 1½ miles in extreme length.

SEC. 2. That any person applying to enter land under the provisions of this act shall make and subscribe before the proper officer an affidavit as required by section 2290 of the Revised Statutes, and in addition thereto shall make affidavit that the land sought to be entered is of the character described in section 1 of this act, and shall pay the fees now required to be paid under the homestead laws.

SEC. 3. That any homestead entryman now occupying lands of the character hereinafter described, heretofore entered by him, upon which final proof has not been made, shall have the right to enter public lands, subject to the provisions of this act, lying contiguous to his former entry which shall not, together with the original entry, exceed 320 acres, and residence upon and cultivation of the original entry shall be deemed as residence upon and cultivation of the additional entry.

SEC. 4. That at the time of making final proofs as provided in section 2291 of the Revised Statutes the entryman under this act shall, in addition to the proofs and affidavits required under the said section, prove by two credible witnesses that at least one-eighth of the area embraced in his entry was continuously cultivated to agricultural crops other than native grasses beginning with the second year of the entry, and that at least one-fourth of the area embraced in the entry was so continuously cultivated beginning with the third year of the entry.

SEC. 5. That nothing herein contained shall be held to affect the right of a qualified entryman to make homestead entry in the States named in section 1 of this act under the provisions of section 2289 of the Revised Statutes, but no person who has made entry under this act shall be entitled to make homestead entry under the provisions of said section, and no entry made under this act shall be commuted.

SEC. 6. That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any tracts of land subject to entry under this act do not have upon them such a sufficient supply of water suitable for domestic purposes as would make continuous residence upon the lands possible without serious hardship to entrymen, he may, in his discretion, designate such tracts of land, and thereafter they shall be subject to entry under this act without the necessity of residence: Provided, That in such event the area cultivated in any such entry shall not be less than one-eighth of the entire area of the entry during the second year, one-fourth during the third year, and one-half during the fourth and fifth years after the date of such entry.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who reported the bill, concerning it. As I understood it from the reading—I have not given it a careful examination—it changes the law so as to grant in certain States to certain designated classes 320 acres of land for homestead instead of 160 acres. Am I right, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, sir; the Senator is right, as far as certain lands or classes are concerned.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me that that is a pretty serious matter. Ten men could go into one of these States and take up something over 3,000 acres of land. They are valueless in a sense at the present time, but an enormous amount of money is being spent for irrigation purposes and as the irrigation projects proceed the lands may become very valuable.

I really think that we ought to pause before passing a bill of this kind without giving it very careful consideration. Possibly the Senator can explain it to my satisfaction; but on first blush it looks to me like a very dangerous innovation, and that the bill ought not to be passed without full consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hold in my hand the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907. On page 18 of that report I find that the honorable Commissioner makes the following recommendation:

Dry farming, or the raising of crops in semiarid regions by special methods of agriculture, has passed the experimental stage in many localities. No law adapted to the entry of lands suitable for this purpose exists, as the desert-land law is inapplicable and the homestead law, besides requiring residence, is too restricted in the area of land that may be entered.

I therefore recommend the enactment of a measure applicable only to those States and Territories containing semiarid lands, permitting the entry, under the agricultural classification above, by any qualified resident citizen of the State or Territory where the land sought to be entered is situated, of not exceeding 640 acres of land (in as compact a form as possible) not capable of artificial irrigation, which does not contain sufficient moisture to produce a natural growth of trees, and which, because of the fact that it does not furnish potable water sufficient for domestic use, or because of other conditions arising out of the semiaridity of the land is not suitable for continuous habitation. Residence should not be required as a prerequisite to patent, but proof should be required of the planting and raising of consecutive crops of valuable agricultural products (other than native grasses) for a fixed period before final proof; provided, however, that careful restrictions be imposed to insure that the entries are made for the sole use and benefit of entrymen for the purpose of actual cultivation and not to increase range holdings, create monopolies of land, or other abuses.

Mr. President, I call your attention to the fact that the Commissioner recommended 640 acres of this class of land, but I found that there was a sentiment not only in the House of Representatives, but here in the Senate that 640 acres was too much for one entryman to enter, and therefore in framing the bill following the recommendations of the Commissioner of the General Land Office as to the class of land, I decided to make the amount 320 acres.

I call the attention of Senators to the fact that the bill does not in any way, shape, or form affect the present homestead law; that it does not in any way affect lands that are now subject to entry under the homestead law, but it simply affects the lands that are to-day uncultivated in the Western States and which can be cultivated only by the dry farming process.

It will also be noticed that the bill requires the full term of five years for residence, when residence is required, and that the commutation clause of the homestead law does not apply to the bill. Not only that, but it seems to me and to those who understand what dry farming requires, that 320 acres is no more land available for cultivation than 160 acres under the present homestead law, where all can be cultivated by irrigation, for anyone who knows anything about dry farming knows that the entryman has to summer-fallow the land, and it is impossible to cultivate more than one-half at any one year. So if they cultivate one-half of it, all that it is possible to do by dry farming process, the entryman would have no more land cultivated at any one time than the man that has entered 160 acres and can cultivate all of it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. TELLER. Suppose a settler has taken 160 acres of land under the present law, could he take another 160 acres under the bill, so as to make 320 acres?

Mr. SMOOT. He can take 160 acres, as provided in the bill, if he has not made final proof, as provided in section 3 of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. Suppose there are 160 acres of adjoining land. I have a letter on my desk of just that kind, asking if this bill is passed whether it would protect him if he filed on the adjoining land. I can not find anything in the bill that, I think, would relieve that kind of a settler.

Mr. SMOOT. That question was thoroughly considered by the Representatives from all the Western States. They were called together by the chairman of the Public Lands Committee of the House. I have had a great many letters, just the same as the Senator from Colorado, asking if the provisions of this bill apply to men who have already entered 160 acres, and would allow them to enter an additional 160 acres——

Mr. CLAY. With the Senator's permission, let me ask if section 3 does not cover that feature. It provides—

That any homestead entryman now occupying lands of the character hereinafter described, heretofore entered by him, upon which final proof has not been made, shall have the right to enter public lands, subject to the provisions of this act, lying contiguous to his former entry, which shall not, together with the original entry, exceed 320 acres, and residence upon and cultivation of the original entry shall be deemed as residence upon and cultivation of the additional entry.

Mr. SMOOT. It applies to all citizens where final proof has not been made of their former entry.

Mr. TELLER. I have here a copy of the bill reported by the Senator from Utah, with an amendment, and it contains nothing of that kind that I can see.

Mr. CLAY. I have read from the third section of Senate bill 6155.

Mr. SMOOT. That is right. That is the bill under consideration.

Mr. TELLER. Then I have not the bill. I should like to have the Calendar number.

Mr. SMOOT. The Calendar number is 471, and the number of the bill is S. 6155.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether unanimous consent has been given for the consideration of this bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is under Rule VIII, and would go over upon objection. It has come up under the rule and is before the Senate, if there is no objection.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will say to the Senator from Utah that it seems to be a very important bill. So far as indicated by the Calendar, there is no written report from the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CULBERSON. I doubt the propriety of disposing of the measure finally to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say this——

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection; indeed, I would be glad to have the Senator continue and conclude his statement in explanation of the bill, but I did not want it to be understood that the time for objection had passed.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say in answer to the Senator from Texas that this bill was agreed to by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate with a single exception, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], and it was on his motion as a member of that committee that Idaho was stricken out. That is the only amendment made by the committee to the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator with his permission——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. TELLER. I have the bill now. I had a wrong print. Section 3 deals with this question:

Subject to the provisions of this act, lying contiguous to his former entry.

Does the Senator understand that the land must be adjoining?

Mr. SMOOT. No, sir; it was decided that it might be anywhere contiguous to it.

Mr. TELLER. In the neighborhood?

Mr. SMOOT. In the neighborhood of the land.

Mr. TELLER. I think that is a fair interpretation, but the Department has, on certain occasions, construed that "contiguous" means "adjoining."

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think they so contrue it, or at least I do not understand, after consultation with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, that they do.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think the word "contiguous" means "adjoining," though I know certain cases in which it has been held that it does.

Mr. CLAY. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Utah to section 3.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMOOT. With pleasure.

Mr. CLAY. After carefully reading section 3 again, I am certain I construe it correctly. It reads:

That any homestead entryman now occupying lands of the character hereinafter described, heretofore entered by him, upon which final proof has not been made—

Then this third section would not apply, except in entries where final proof had not been made?

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I stated, Mr. President. The reason is, as Senators must know, that the public lands of to-day are getting poorer and poorer, and a man who goes out in the Western country to locate upon them and make a homestead finds it harder and harder to make a living. Therefore we felt that we should go as far as this bill provides, by saying that the man who had not made final proof upon his entry of 160 acres should have the privilege of entering another 160 acres.

Mr. CLAY. The settler who had made his final proof and received his letters patent would not be entitled to 160 acres additional?

Mr. SMOOT. No, sir; undoubtedly not.

Mr. CLAY. That would place settlers in an entirely different position, would it not? Would not this bill give the advantage to the applicant who had not made his final proof? He would be entitled to 320 acres, and the applicant who had made his final proof would only be entitled to 160 acres.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the committee thought, and I believe all the Senators from the West and the Representatives think, that there would not be any special advantage, because the man who has received his final letters patent for his land had the pick of all the land before the man who is now trying to obtain title made his selection. Therefore he would have that advantage.

Another thing. I notice that the final proofs perfected on homestead entries are getting smaller in proportion to entries made each year. I am told at the General Land Office that there is only one in about five and a half entries that is carried to final proof. The reason of that is because men go and settle upon those lands and they find it impossible to make a living on 160 acres, and so they abandon their entry. I find that is the case in most of the Western States.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if he will allow me to suggest an amendment in line 13, page 2, striking out the words "contiguous to" and inserting "within the township of," so as to read, "within the township of his former entry." That would put it within the immediate neighborhood. I am afraid the word "contiguous" will be held to mean "adjoining," and that would afford relief to but very few people.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I would not object to that amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Then I will move that amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Although I wish to say to the Senator that that question was discussed with a number of Representatives from Colorado, and they were decidedly in favor of the wording of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. Their attention perhaps has not been called to some of the experiences which I have had where the word "contiguous" was held to mean "adjoining." That was some years ago, and not under present conditions. But I know the question is liable to be raised again. It became my duty when I was Secretary of the Interior to change that ruling, and I did so. But I am afraid the word might be again so considered. I held that it meant in the neighborhood or vicinity.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Colorado——

Mr. TELLER. I think it should be confined to the township.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Colorado feels that it is absolutely necessary, I will accept the amendment; otherwise I would object to the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I think it would be a valuable amendment, for I think it would apply to people in the neighborhood, and no man would take a homestead very far away.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I had the floor, Mr. President, and yielded to the Senator from Utah. I want to make a further observation about this bill. I think it ought not to be considered under the five-minute rule. To my mind it is a very serious question, no matter what the Department may have recommended. The Senator from Utah, I presume, can not assure the Senate that irrigation projects will not be established in these arid regions, where it is contemplated to give this additional land to settlers.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course it would be impossible for me to say that at some future time there would not be an irrigation project reach this land; but I want to say to the Senator that I believe a man who settles upon the class of land described in this bill as nonirrigable, who lives there for five years, and perchance within some twenty or thirty years there is an irrigation project brought to him or to his door, is entitled to all that would come to him under that irrigation project.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there are two difficulties about that, in my mind. One is that no man can assume that these irrigation projects will not reach these lands until twenty or twenty-five years from the present time. I assume that to be so. The other difficulty is that under the last section of this bill a man is not required to live five years on these lands. I want to read that section.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that section 6 of this bill applies strictly to lands that never can be watered. The Secretary of the Interior will pass upon that class of lands, and the conditions surrounding those lands are such that no matter if a thousand years pass, they will never be irrigated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that may be so, yet there is another provision here to which I wish to call the Senator's attention, that after giving twice the amount of land to these settlers that is allowed them under existing law, under section 6 they are not required to live on it, but they are required to cultivate a portion of it. I suppose that is by "dry farming," which I believe is double plowing, or plowing twice in a year. I am not well informed on that subject.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps I had better explain to the Senator what "dry farming" is.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have an explanation of it, because I do not understand it, but am only guessing at it.

Mr. SMOOT. So long as the State of Utah had lands for sale under their several grants, this bill was not necessary for her further development, but the State of Utah has disposed of nearly all of her granted lands and must now rely upon citizens entering lands under the general laws, and we have no law applicable to dry farm lands, and section 6 of the bill provides for dry farming solely.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do.

Mr. WARREN. Is it not a fact that in dry farming the supposition is that the ground must lie fallow every other year, so that you get but one crop in two years, and therefore 320 acres is only equal to 160 acres farmed other than by dry farming?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the statement I made in the beginning, and I still adhere to it. Whole sections of our State are now under what is called "dry farming." A few years ago, before the Campbell process was discovered, dry farming was a very hazardous undertaking under the most favorable conditions; but to-day we find that sections of our State, where a few years ago nothing but a wilderness existed, are cultivated and good crops of grain are raised under what is known as the "Campbell dry-farming process." It is done in this way: The snows that fall during the winter——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask if the bill which passed the Senate some time ago providing for dry farming is on its way through the House, or what has become of it?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there was a bill which passed the Senate in relation to dry farming, and it is now in the other House, with the distinct understanding, however, that this bill will take the place of that bill. There is no disposition on the part of the House to have that bill, which passed the Senate, now pass the House and become a law; because this bill is a consolidation, as it were, of what is known as the "Mondell bill," requiring residence, and the Smoot bill, permitting nonresidence.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The intention, then, is to have but one dry-farming bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, sir; that is the intention.

Mr. BORAH. Now, if it is in order, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if he would have any objection to inserting, after the word "of," in line 9, page 1, the word "arid," so as to read:

Three hundred and twenty acres, or less, of arid nonmineral, nonirrigable, unreserved, and unappropriated public lands.

Mr. SMOOT. A great many Western Representatives especially desired that the word "arid" or "semiarid" be not put in the bill, as they took it for granted that it was certainly a repetition, because the bill itself provdes that the land shall be nonirrigable.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understood the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] had the floor. I can give some information to my colleague in regard to that matter. I offered the amendment in the committee suggested by the Senator, and it was refused. I also made the inquiry as to whether or not the bill which we passed in the Senate on March 2, known as the "dry-farming bill," was to be withdrawn, but I could have no assurance of that fact. I also asked that the bill be amended so that a mile and a half of land could not be located along the edge of a stream, as may be done under this bill. All of those propositions being objected to or rejected, then I asked that Idaho be eliminated from the provisions of the bill. I did not see any necessity for two dry-farming bills, and this bill did not profess to be a dry-farming bill, which was, of course, conclusively shown by the refusal of the committee to accept the amendment limiting the bill to arid and semiarid lands.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the junior Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMOOT. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. BORAH. It occurs to me that the word "nonirrigable" does not cover the entire situation. We have lands in Idaho which are nonirrigable, but still they are not arid lands; and in the northern portion of our State people might get hold of lands which are in every sense nonirrigable, which they would not have to irrigate, and still they would not be worthless. They could be used. I am not in favor of giving 320 acres under those circumstances.

Mr. SMOOT. Nor am I, I want to say to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I would be in favor of giving 320 acres to anyone who would go upon arid and nonirrigable lands and redeem them as a dry-farming proposition. While our State is not now included in the provisions of the bill, I would like to see it included under certain conditions, but I think the word "arid" ought to go in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. On line 9, after the word "or," as I understand, the Senator proposes——

Mr. BORAH. No; after the word "of" on page 1, line 9, to insert the word "arid," so that it will read:

Three hundred and twenty acres, or less, of arid nonmineral, nonirrigable, unreserved, and unappropriated surveyed public lands.

Mr. DIXON. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. DIXON. I want to suggest to the Senator from Idaho that I would not use the world "arid." At a meeting of the Western Representatives and Senators a month ago we discussed the proposition of inserting the words "arid" and "semiarid." There is some question as to what the word "arid" means and as to what construction the General Land Office might put upon it. "Arid" might mean land on which possibly no rain ever fell. If you are going to insert any qualifying clause, I would suggest the word "semiarid;" for land west of the 100th meridian, where the rainfall averages not over 15 per cent, except in some very favored localities, I think, has been universally construed to be semiarid land. If the amendment is to be made as suggested by the conditions prevailing in a very small portion of northern Idaho, I would suggest that the word "semiarid" be used. I think that was the unanimous opinion of the Western Representatives when this bill, introduced and reported here by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and introduced in the House by Mr. MONDELL, was substituted in lieu of the bill which I had introduced.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say that if the Senator from Idaho thinks it is for the best interests of his State, and he will confine the amendment to semiarid lands, I will accept the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before any amendments are offered I want to be heard a moment in reference to the propriety of continuing this discussion under Rule VIII.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will allow me to explain as to the dry-farming proposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been taken off of that theme by interruptions.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want the Senator to explain that. I am seeking information.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I started to say before interrupted, the process of dry farming is this: First, they have to have deep plowing. The land is plowed in the fall, and, being loose, the snows that fall during the winter find their way into the ground. The old theory of dry farming was that the top soil should be almost baked in order to keep the water in the ground from evaporating; but under the modern method that is not the proper way to dry farm. As soon as the grain is planted in the spring, in order to make it grow and develop, they find now that agitation of the soil is what is needed, rather than the roller to form a crust. I have seen great fields of wheat from about 2 to 3 inches high where the farmer took his harrow and went over the whole field. A man who did not understand the dry-farming process would think that he was going to destroy his crop entirely, but it has been found that the agitation of the soil brings up the moisture that has fallen in the winter, so that the roots of the grain can receive it, and thereby it develops into perfect grain, and is cut and thrashed, and the results show a profitable and successful crop. I know in my State we have whole districts where ten years ago no person on earth ever thought that there would be a kernel of grain raised, and to-day that whole district is raising 30 bushels of wheat to the acre as a result of the dry-farming process.

Mr. President, we have in the State of Utah parts of whole counties where it is impossible to get water to irrigate one acre. The whole watershed surrounding the county is such that it is impossible that water can be stored in any way, and our State legislature has appropriated time and time again for the purpose of trying to find water sufficient in those districts by way of artesian wells or by boring deep wells to enable people to live upon those lands. But it has been utterly impossible to get one single drop of water there, and to-day men live in little villages, where there are the schoolhouse, the church, and the community interests, and have their farms 35 miles off. Such a farmer has to haul every drop of water that distance for his horses and for his own use. He can not ask his family to go and live upon the land. They can not do it. He goes by himself and cultivates it in the spring; he has his little cabin there and remains during the harvesting of the crop. It is cut and thrashed right on the land, and then the grain only is drawn to his home.

This is the class of land that we want to benefit. This is the class of land in the Western country that we want to cultivate, to help pay the taxes in sparsely settled districts, and help bear the burdens of the people who pay the taxes on irrigated land.

Mr. President, I want to say that I do not believe that there has been a measure which has been introduced here that will be so beneficial to the Western States as the dry-farming proposition, and if this bill is enacted into law, it will allow an extension of that great industry to hundreds and hundreds of thousands of acres. I certainly hope that the Senator from New Hampshire will not object to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SMOOT. With pleasure.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, if the bill is now subject to amendment, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted at the end of line 13, page 1.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that there is pending an amendment, which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] gave notice he would offer, which would be first in order.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Montana being stated.

Mr. CARTER. I will wait until after the Senator's amendment is stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest, Mr. President, that I had the floor. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the statement made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and yet I am not fully persuaded as to the wisdom of this bill. It is with a great deal of reluctance that I even make a suggestion concerning matters relating to the Far Western States, especially the States that have land that is semiarid and arid. I have a fairly good record during the period of my public life in voting for almost every bill that has been presented by the representatives of those States. I gave my assent very cordially to the irrigation bill, which I hope and believe will be of great value to certain States of the Union, but I have been somewhat surprised during the last year or two to notice the attempts that are being made, in good faith no doubt, to extend the provisions of that bill. We voted the proceeds of the sales of public lands for the purpose of putting water on lands that needed it and now we have before this body at the present time, I think, one or more bills proposing to divert a portion of that money to drain swamp lands; in other words, instead of putting water on arid lands, we are now going to take water from other lands at the expense of the Government, and divert a portion of the irrigation fund, as I recall, for that purpose.

Mr. DIXON. Will the Senator yield to me to make an explanation?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. DIXON. The bill for drainage purposes reported by the Public Lands Committee does not take a dollar out of the reclamation fund. The money that goes into the reclamation fund at this time is money received from the sale of public lands in the arid States. There are seven or eight of the States east of the one hundredth meridian where the proceeds from the sale of the public lands does not go into the irrigation fund. It is merely the proceeds of the sales from those public lands which go into the drainage fund under the bill which has been reported.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I am correct in saying that during the last Congress a bill passed the Senate without any consideration appropriating a million dollars from the irrigation fund for the purpose of draining lands in North Dakota.

Mr. DIXON. And I am very happy to say that the Committee on the Public Lands of the other House, of which I was a member at that time, promptly killed that bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very glad to know that, but it shows the tendency in this direction.

Mr. President, concerning this matter, I think we ought to have some light. My attention has been called to the fact that we passed a bill at this session, on the 2d day of March, 1908, which seems to accomplish much of what is contained in the bill now under consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator allow me to explain the difference?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill to which the Senator has reference is entirely a dry-farm proposition. There are States in the West that have what may be called dry-farm propositions. The provisions of the pending bill apply only to nonirrigable land, and where residence is not required on land that has no earthly chance of water being brought on it.

In some of the Western States there are sometimes little draws in a canyon where during the winter perhaps a little water—enough for domestic purposes—could be stored. It was for that reason, and under such conditions, that some of the Western States wanted to require residence upon the lands, and so the bill requires the cultivation of 40 acres of land such as is described; but they did not feel, if there was water sufficient for domestic purposes on the land, that the requirement as to residence should be done away with. Therefore this bill is the consolidation of that proposition with the dry-farming proposition, as contained in the bill to which the Senator has referred.

I will assure the Senator of one thing, that, if this bill passes here—it is reported already from the committee of the House—if it becomes a law, the purely dry-farm bill which the Senate passed will not be pushed and will not be passed by the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, a single word more. The proviso of section 6 requires the entryman to cultivate one-eighth of the 320 acres the second year, one-fourth of it the third year, and one-half during the fourth and fifth years. My impression is that if a man undertakes to cultivate 60 acres of that kind of land in any one year he is doing about all that any American citizen ought to be required to do.

I remember some years ago reading a very interesting little book, the title of which was "Ten Acres Enough." It was not of this kind of land, however. I know that. "Ten Acres Enough"—enough to raise and educate and support a family in Europe. It was a very interesting contribution to the problem of agriculture, and I think it was well founded.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he knows where the man who wrote that book resided?

Mr. GALLINGER. He was a European, I will say; and I think if the Senator will go to Europe he will find that families are being supported on 10 acres, but those 10 acres are cultivated; they are not scratched over. They are farmed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that we have some 10-acre tracts in the State of Utah that a man can make a very good living on.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. SMOOT. And I know many men who have no more than 10 acres. Speaking of the amount of cultivation under dry farming, I want to say that if I were a farmer I would rather cultivate 5 acres of dry farm land than I would 1 acre of irrigated land. I could plant it easier, I could cultivate it easier, and I could reap the crop easier off the 5 acres than I could off 1 acre of irrigated land, and it would not be nearly so expensive.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, a question to the distinguished Senator from Utah, who knows a great deal more about farming in the semiarid and arid regions than I do. Does the Senator think if an entryman has 120 acres of such land, that he can actually cultivate more than 60 acres of it with profit?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is impossible to cultivate more than 60 acres of it, because the farmer has to summer fallow every acre.

Mr. GALLINGER. But you require him under this bill to cultivate 180 acres of it.

Mr. SMOOT. One hundred and sixty acres.

Mr. GALLINGER. One hundred and sixty acres of it the fourth and fifth years. Do you believe it can be done?

Mr. SMOOT. I certainly do; and if this bill becomes a law, I want it so worded as to make the man who enters under it to cultivate every acre of the land he can. I do not want the public domain taken up as a mere grazing proposition. That is the reason I have made the proviso so strong. Some people say it can not be done. I say it can be done. Under the dry-farm proposition of summer fallowing 160 acres, a man wants 320 acres of dry farm land in order to make a living on it. If he can not do it, then let him go somewhere else and take a farm under the irrigating system.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, my chief objection has not been stated. This bill was not called to my attention until this morning. I have glanced at it casually, and very likely I am laboring under some misapprehension concerning it; but, for the life of me, I can not see why by doubling the homestead entry from 160 to 320 acres of land an enormous section of country may not be colonized. Then there may arise a demand for an irrigation project and the beneficent purposes of the irrigation law to a large extent will be diverted, and we shall have a speculative enterprise instead of a legitimate enterprise. I have such an apprehension in my mind. I do not know that any parties have that purpose in view, but I should fear it if we passed this bill.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to make an explanation?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. TELLER. There are thousands and tens of thousands of acres of land that it is utterly impossible to irrigate. Everybody knows that who is familiar with the matter. I presume there are thousands of acres of land that you could not irrigate if you spent a thousand dollars an acre on the proposition, even if water could be obtained. In many of the States you can not get water unless you carry it in buckets. That is the class of land that it is proposed to provide for.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill provides:

SEC. 6. That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any tracts of land subject to entry under this act do not have upon them such a sufficient supply of water suitable for domestic purposes as would make continuous residence upon the lands possible without serious hardship to entrymen, he may in his discretion designate such tracts of land, and thereafter they shall be subject to entry under this act without the necessity of residence.

So the Secretary of the Interior is to decide the question as to whether this land is to be resided on or not. He is the one to say whether it is possible to have an irrigating system there, so as to make it irrigable land.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to look into this matter a little further. The Calendar is almost entirely clear, and there will be no difficulty about getting this bill up in the near future. I must for the present object to its consideration under Rule VIII.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, prior to the objection taking effect, I ask the Senator to allow the amendment which I proposed to be stated.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] stated, and also the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. Possibly they might clear the whole matter up so far as I am concerned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] will first be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 9, after the word "of," it is proposed to insert the word "arid," so as to read:

That any person who is a qualified entryman under the homestead laws of the United States may enter, by legal subdivisions, under the provisions of this act, in the States of Colorado, California, Montana, Nevada, North Dakota, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, and the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, 320 acres, or less, of arid nonmineral, nonirrigable, unreserved, and unappropriated surveyed public lands, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] will now be stated.

Mr. TELLER. I should like, if it is in order, to suggest an amendment or a modification of the amendment suggested by the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON], who is a member of the Committee on Public Lands. Instead of saying "within the township," I think it would be better to say "within 5 miles of his former entry." It might be that he lived on the border of the township.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 13, after the word "lying," it is proposed to strike out "contiguous" and to insert "within 5 miles of," so as to read:

SEC. 3. That any homestead entryman now occupying lands of the character hereinafter described, heretofore entered by him, upon which final proof has not been made, shall have the right to enter public lands, subject to the provisions of this act, lying within 5 miles of his former entry which shall not, together with the original entry, exceed 320 acres, and residence upon and cultivation of the original entry shall be deemed as residence upon and cultivation of the additional entry.

Mr. TELLER. That will give him 5 miles in every direction to make his selection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 13, after the word "length," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That no land shall be subject to entry under this act until the Secretary of the Interior shall have ascertained and certified that no water is available or obtainable at a reasonable expense for the reclamation thereof by artificial irrigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I venture to ask—and I presume there will be no objection to it—that the bill be reprinted with the proposed amendments in brackets.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the bill be reprinted with the proposed amendments in brackets. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered. The bill goes over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered immediately after the routine morning business on Friday next.

Mr. PILES. I shall have to object to that unless the unfinished business now on the Calendar is disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well; I will not press the request.

POINT ROBERTS RESERVE, STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. NELSON. I ask leave to make a report at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the report will be received.

Mr. NELSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2934) permitting homestead entries upon certain lands in Whatcom County, Wash., being a portion of the "Point Roberts Reserve," to report it favorably with amendments and I submit a report (No. 445) thereon.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Public Lands were, on page 2, line 19, after the word "lands," to insert "and public notice thereof;" and at the end of the bill, in line 21, after the word "them," to insert "subject, however, to all the provisions of the homestead law," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described lands, to wit: Lots 3 and 4, and the west one-half of the southwest quarter of section 1; lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, and the south half of the northeast quarter, the south half of the northwest quarter, and the south half of section 2; lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, and the south half of the northeast quarter, the south half of the northwest quarter, the southeast quarter, the east half of the southwest quarter, and the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 3; the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter and lot 1 of section 4; lot 1 of section 9; the north half of the northeast quarter, the north half of the northwest quarter, and lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 of section 10; lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 of section 11; the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter, and lot 1 of section 12, all in township 40 north of range 3 west of the Willamette meridian; and lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 of section 33; lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 of section 34; lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 of section 35; lot 1, section 36, all in township 41 north of range 3 west of the Willamette meridian, all of said above-described lands being in Whatcom County, State of Washington, and being a portion of the "Point Roberts Reserve," be, and the same are hereby, opened to settlement and entry under the homestead laws of the United States only, in such manner and at such time as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That the actual bona fide settlers upon said lands on January 1, 1908, shall have sixty days from the date of opening of said lands and public notice thereof to make entry of the lands settled upon and occupied by them, subject, however, to all the provisions of the homestead law.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT OF ANTE-BELLUM CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next bill in order on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 1050) to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order.

The Secretary read the bill and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the report in that case be read, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. DILLINGHAM March 31, 1908, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1050) to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, beg leave to report the same with the recommendation that it do pass.

The committee report that a bill of which this is a copy was reported favorably at the last session and passed the Senate on the 2d of March, 1907. The committee append as a part of their report the report of the Committee on the Judiciary upon that bill (S. Rept. 3979, 59th Cong., 1st sess.), which was presented by the late Senator Pettus.

Said report is as follows:

"This section of the Revised Statutes was enacted March 2, 1867, during the bitterness and passion of the reconstruction period, and it has been repealed in part several times.

"That section prohibits the payment of any claim against the United States originating before the civil war to anyone who did not prove his loyalty to the United States during that war.

"But in December, 1868, the President issued a proclamation of general amnesty and pardon to the Confederates; and the Supreme Court of the United States, in Armstrong's case, in 13 Wallace Reports, page 154, in the opinion delivered by Chief Justice Chase, declared the effect of the proclamation to be that every person who acted in that war against the United States was by that proclamation restored to all his rights and immunities as a loyal citizen of the United States, or, in other words, that the pardon of the President, in a temporal sense, had the same effect as the pardon of our Master as declared in the Bible:

"'Let the wicked man forsake his ways and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and the sin which he has sinned shall be mentioned unto him no more forever.'

"So the President's pardon, in legal effect, repealed section 3480 of the Revised Statutes.

"This Senate, on reports made by Senator Hoar, Senator DANIEL, and Senator WARREN, in the Sibley tent case, gave the same meaning and effect to the President's proclamation—that is, that it in substance repealed section 3480 of the Revised Statutes. (See report made by Senator WARREN, 56th Cong., 1st sess., in S. Rept. No. 440.)

"It may be asked, If section 3480 has in effect been repealed, why repeal it formally? The answer to the question is that the formal repeal is necessary to convince the Executive Departments that section 3480 is not in full force and effect, as they are still acting on it as the law of the land; for while the Judiciary Committee was considering this bill last week a member of the committee read letters from the Departments (not the Department of Justice) to the effect that if section 3480 were repealed claims amounting to perhaps millions, barred by that section, could be presented.

"Long since the President's proclamation the Secretary of the Interior gave a warrant to a 'rebel' for a small sum paid before the war for land which had previously been granted to a railroad; but the Comptroller of the Treasury would not permit it to be paid, because there was no proof of the loyalty of the claimant. Thereupon the Secretary of the Interior asked that the question be referred to the Attorney-General, but this was promptly refused by this officer, the Comptroller, who assumed to know 'all the law there is.'

"The committee recommend that this bill be passed."

Mr. BACON. I think it may be possibly a matter of some interest to state that the report which has just been read, which is unique in some of its features, was written by our former associate, the late Senator Pettus.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF D. S. PHELAN.

The bill (H. R. 1815) for the relief of the estate of D. S. Phelan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the estate of D. S. Phelan, late of the State of Tennessee, $169.02, balance in full of account due to him for services rendered as mail contractor on route 10195, in the State of Tennessee, from January 1 to June 30, 1861.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This completes the Calendar under Rule VIII. The Secretary will announce the first bill on the Calendar under Rule IX.

SETTLEMENT OF STATE ACCOUNTS.

The bill (S. 415) regulating the settlement of the accounts between the United States and the several States relative to the disposition of the public lands, and for other purposes, was announced as the first bill on the Calendar under Rule IX, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. McCREARY. I should like to have the Senator who reported the bill make some explanation of it. It is a very important measure.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, the same bill has very frequently been reported by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate and, I think, also by the Committee on the Public Lands in the House. It is to equalize the amounts claimed to be due to the several States under different acts of Congress.

The first proposition is to allow to the States 5 per cent of the income from the sales of public lands, less the cost of the sales. It also provides that in cases were Indian reservations are located in the different States the lands included within those reservations shall be estimated at the price of $1.25 per acre and the payment of 5 per cent shall be made upon that basis.

I think that reaches back to legislation occurring in 1855 in behalf of the State of Alabama, and then subsequently, in 1857, by an act for the benefit of the State of Mississippi. There was included in the act affecting the interests of Mississippi lands of other States in the Union at that time.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. GAMBLE. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the Senator as to the aggregate amount of money to be paid out of the Public Treasury under the bill.

Mr. GAMBLE. It is estimated that it will be about $8,000,000. That is as near as the amount can be estimated.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. GAMBLE. Certainly.

Mr. McCREARY. This is a bill to regulate the settlement of the accounts between the United States and the several States relative to the disposition of the public lands. How many years back does it extend?

Mr. GAMBLE. It will go, I presume, back to about 1857, the time of the last settlement. The provision of the bill relating to Indian reservations means permanent reservations occupied and held by the Indians. It is felt that that would be an equitable recognition of the different States where Indian reservations are retained within them, and the burden of which falls upon the community in the lessened production and development.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GAMBLE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did I understand the Senator to say that the bill would carry an appropriation of $8,000,000?

Mr. GAMBLE. About $8,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. The last three lines of the bill say a total of $28,101,644.91.

Mr. GAMBLE. I call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the fact that the last provision of the bill relates to the act of 1836. There was a very large surplus in the Treasury of the United States on account of the sale of public lands, aggregating something upward of $28,000,000, and under the act of 1836 that sum was loaned to the different States in the Union, with an assurance that at any time the Federal Government could demand from the several States the return of the money. Of course it never has been returned. It is not expected, I presume, that it ever will be returned. The bill relinquishes to the several States specified any claim for a return of the money, and this is understood as equitable recognition when we take into account the other considerations shown or expected to be shown to the other States that did not receive any part of that fund.

Mr. GALLINGER. So the $28,000,000 is a total that does not apply to the bill.

Mr. GAMBLE. No; not at all. It is simply a relinquishment.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. GAMBLE. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that the $28,000,000 has never been paid in part or in whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. TELLER. No part of it. There was a large distribution among the States then existing, and it has been held ever since. The pending bill provides only for a positive debt that the Government by statute created. In other words, it is provided by law that this money shall be paid to the landholding States, and it has never been paid, as the Senator from South Dakota says.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator kindly inform those of us who do not live in the public-land States and are not familiar with these matters what is the law he alludes to which provides for the payment of 5 per cent?

Mr. TELLER. There is a statute, passed away back so long that I can not tell—the Senator from South Dakota, I presume, can give the date of it—which provided that 5 per cent of the sales of public lands should go to the States. That was supposed to be a sort of recognition of the failure to pay any taxes to assist the State in maintaining its government. The Government never pays any tax on land, as the Senator knows.

Mr. BACON. The act provided that 5 per cent of the proceeds of the sale of the lands in each State should go to that State.

Mr. TELLER. To that State, as I understand it.

Mr. GAMBLE. And that has been recognized in the acts passed by Congress admitting different States into the Union.

Mr. TELLER. There was a general law passed, and when a new State is admitted it provides that it shall come in under the provisions of that act. I have not looked at it for some years.

Mr. GAMBLE. I think the original law was passed in 1855.

Mr. WARREN. I take it that it applies merely to lands sold for cash. Of course a great amount of land passes into homesteads, and that brings no revenue to the State.

Mr. TELLER. I understand not.

Mr. GAMBLE. It has a further application to bounty-land locations and agricultural-college scrip, because they were issued practically upon a money basis and for a money consideration. The estimate for lands taken under the military bounty land warrants is $1.25 per acre, so that is the general purpose of the bill.

Mr. BACON. That fund, I understand, is one in which all the States are interested.

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. And not simply the public-land States.

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes; all the States.

Mr. BACON. Before the Senator takes his seat, will he kindly explain to those of us who are not familiar with public-land matters exactly the interest that the States have in the fund to which he makes allusion?

Mr. GAMBLE. I will state to the Senator from Georgia——

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. GAMBLE. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to have the report read in this case.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Kansas permit the Senator from South Dakota first to reply to my inquiry, and then make his request?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. GAMBLE. I will state in reply to the Senator from Georgia that, as shown in the report, section 4 of an act passed June 23, 1836, provided—

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall deliver the same—

I speak of the amount of the donation or loan to the several States—

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall deliver the same to such treasurers or other competent authorities, on receiving certificates of deposit therefor signed by such competent authorities, in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary aforesaid; which certificates shall express the usual and legal obligations and pledge the faith of the State for the safe-keeping and repayment thereof, and shall pledge the faith of the States receiving the same to pay said moneys and every part thereof, from time to time, whenever the same shall be required by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purpose of defraying any wants of the Public Treasury, beyond the amount of the five millions aforesaid: Provided, That if any State declines to receive its proportion of the surplus aforesaid on the terms before named, the same shall be deposited with the other States agreeing to accept the same on deposit in the proportion as aforesaid.

That is the part of the law which provided for the loan of the $28,000,000 referred to.

Mr. WARREN. To twenty-six States?

Mr. GAMBLE. To twenty-six States.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. GAMBLE. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. I requested a few moments ago that the report of the committee be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection the Secretary will read the report accompanying the bill.

Mr. CLAY. With the Senator's permission——

Mr. GAMBLE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I have the report before me and I have read a part of it. It is voluminous. Evidently, unless Senators have given more attention to the bill and the report than I have, it will be a very difficult task to undertake to pass upon the bill to-day. I see that it sets forth that $8,182,000 will go to certain States, naming the amount to go to each State, and it sets forth——

Mr. GAMBLE. The bill does not pretend to name the amounts that go to the different States.

Mr. CLAY. The report sets forth the amount that will be given to each State.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose that is an estimate.

Mr. CLAY. It is an estimate simply made by the committee. It then sets forth the sum of $28,101,644.91:

The amounts deposited with the States under this act are shown by a report of the Treasurer of the United States of May 13, 1892, printed in Senate Report No. 226, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, as follows:

Naming them.

The bill provides in section 4:

And the obligations to pay or return said money entered into by and upon the part of the several States receiving the same are hereby canceled and fully discharged.

Evidently to pass upon a measure of this importance and with so many complications Senators ought to have time to examine critically the report and the bill. It is evidently a bill of considerable importance. I hardly think that we ought to consume the time to-day. It will take Senators hours to read and critically analyze the report. I hope the Senator from South Dakota will not press the bill for consideration to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to reading the report?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this is a question which has been before the Senate very many times. I have not carefully examined the bill, but the measure has been here in some shape ever since I have been in public life.

I am not very clear as to the exact date at which the loan was made. It was not a loan, but the Government having a surplus of a considerable amount, Congress determined to deposit it with the States. It was a surplus derived from public lands, and upon the theory that all the States were interested in the public-land system (because that was the original theory, and it was the theory until we passed the reclamation act) the money was deposited with the States. I can tell the Senator from Georgia how much Georgia got out of it. Georgia never was a land State, I think. Georgia got $1,051,422.09, and Georgia still holds that money. Alabama got $669,086.79, and so on. New York, being one of the great States, and having a greater population and so forth, got $4,000,000 and something. I do not remember just how much New York got, but I remember that it was over $4,000,000.

It was contemplated that when the Government needed the money, the Government would call on the States for it. The time, perhaps, when the Government needed it most was when the States were not in a condition to pay it, and so it never has been called for. There has been no attempt ever to collect the money from the States. I often think, when I hear our Eastern friends complaining somewhat of what we are doing in the West, that here is $28,000,000, and I have occasionally sat down and figured interest on it. I can not now tell how much it would be, but the amount is tremendous. Nobody expects the States ever to pay it. Still it stands as a debt against each State. The bill has one merit at least, that it wipes that debt off the books. There will be no pretended claim hereafter.

The amount that is supposed to come to the other States from the 5 per cent is less than one-third of what was deposited in the different States. The Senator from South Dakota says the amount is about $8,000,000, I think.

Mr. GAMBLE. That is as near as it can be estimated.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know what States will get it or how it is distributed. The report probably shows.

Mr. CLAY. The report shows.

Mr. GAMBLE. The report shows. If the Senator from Colorado will allow me, I will suggest, in response to the request of the Senator from Kansas, that the report is very full and very extended. The bill has been reported favorably, as I said, and all the details have been carefully gone into reciting the law and the practice. I do not know when the Senate will have any more opportunity for the consideration of the bill than at this time. I would be glad to have the measure considered and the report read.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I simply want to say in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado that in making a comparison as to the large assets of the Government to the older States and to the Western States, if my recollection is correct, these deposits were made in the Administration of General Jackson, in his second term, and since that time the "older States," if I may so designate them, have gone to a very much larger expense than the amount then deposited in the prosecution of the war which brought to the country the States to which the Senator now alludes as those which have received less than the amount of the deposits out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. TELLER. I do not suppose even the Senator from Georgia would think of charging up to the new States the expense of the war.

Mr. BACON. No; I do not. I am not begrudging them anything they have had; but the Senator said the Eastern States had received this large amount of deposits, and he had even scrutinized it to the extent that he had calculated the interest on the amounts of money.

Mr. TELLER. Several times.

Mr. BACON. I simply wanted to call attention to the fact that it was deposited with States prior to the Mexican war, and that a very large part of the country, in which is included the States which are land States, came to the United States as a result of that war, and that possibly it would even up accounts. While we do not propose to strike any balances or charge any balances, it might be seen that the older States have not received possibly more than they were entitled to, even if the money is not returned.

Mr. TELLER. The older States did not do any more in the prosecution of the war than some of the new States did.

Mr. BACON. I am speaking of the States that have been carved out of the territory we got as a result of the war, one of which is the State from which the Senator from Colorado comes.

Mr. TELLER. Only a part of it.

Mr. BACON. A large part.

Mr. TELLER. The Mexican war eventuated in the appropriation by the Government of Mexican territory through a treaty which has certainly been the most profitable engagement the Government ever entered into. You may charge up against Colorado all the Mexican war came to, and Colorado will, on the other side, show benefits the Government has received from Colorado that will overbalance the whole of it. Then you can take Montana and Idaho and Utah and Washington and the other sections of the country—perhaps Washington did not come in, but a part of Utah did—lower Idaho, California, and Nevada, and, Mr. President, if you strike a balance, you will find that the Government is greatly indebted to the Western country and indebted to it in ten times more money than it cost.

Mr. President, I am not finding any fault about this money having been put in the States. It belonged to the States. The Government had not any particular thing to do with it at that time. While I think myself the Government could have expended it in certain directions which would have been more beneficial, yet the theory was at the time—and I say it has been the theory ever since until lately—that all the States were interested in the public land and in the proceeds thereof, and it was either to be turned over to the States or to be used for the benefit of the States. I am not finding any fault with it.

No attempt has ever been made by any Administration to collect it. No Administration ever will attempt to collect it. If they did, they would utterly fail. There is not any way to collect it, and I do not regard it as a moral obligation on any State to pay it. But I do think it is worthy of attention when you come to consider whether the new States, who have not taxed these lands, are not entitled to the 5 per cent Congress provided they should have upon the sale of the public lands.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to call attention to the fact that it is most unusual for either individuals or communities to resist action of this kind. The debt of these States amounts to $868,000,000 at simple interest on the amount that was loaned them under President Jackson's Administration. I have just computed the interest, and if they are ready to pay it——

Mr. TELLER. That is simple interest. How much would it amount to at compound interest?

Mr. HEYBURN. I waive compound interest.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinshed business, which is House bill 7618.

SNAKE RIVER DAM, WASHINGTON.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1, after line 11, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the said Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, shall not at any time charge or collect any toll or fee for the passage of any boat or craft of any kind through any lock or locks which said company may construct or cause to be constructed under the provisions of this act, or any regulations pursuant thereto; and

Provided further, That the said Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, shall at its own expense keep at all times competent and sufficient attendants at said lock or locks for the purpose of opening and closing the same when required so to do by any person or persons navigating said river, or any portion thereof, or desiring to pass through its locks; and

Provided further, That the Government of the United States shall at no time be at any expense for construction, repairs, or maintenance of the said dam, lock, or anything in connection with said dam or lock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has just been read.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, my purpose in offering this amendment is to guard against any possible inattention or neglect on the part of the Benton Water Company in the management and conduct of the lock or the dam or the navigation incident thereto, should the bill become a law; and it is also to provide against the Government being called upon to come to the relief of this company for the purpose of maintaining in working and necessary condition the lock which they propose to construct. It is that the Government may not hereafter be called upon to come to the assistance of these parties either as to constructing or maintaining the canal or the locks or keeping open the navigation, so that there may be no doubt as to where the responsibility rests. It is for that purpose that I offer this amendment.

The Government has had one or more experiences in connection with just such matters. The Government was compelled for its own protection to buy out an enterprise of this kind. I think it was situated in the State of Wisconsin—it was Wisconsin or Michigan, if Wisconsin, I think—where the parties started out with great promise and failed. I want to make plain in the RECORD certain provisions of the law relative to these water companies, and I shall do it briefly because I do not intend to prolong the consideration of the pending bill to any great extent on this occasion.

Under the system of organization by the terms of the Carey Act, which is the plan proposed by this company, as I understand it, as soon as the land has been settled upon and certain payments made, what is called a "water users' company" or "association" is organized, and the whole proposition is turned over to the water users' association. The responsibility behind the water users' association is practically none at all, so far as maintaining this kind of work is concerned. I use for example a practical illustration. The Twin Falls enterprise is under the same law as that under which the Benton Water Company proposes to operate.

Four years ago, five the coming October, I think, those people entered what was known as the "Twin Falls irrigation project." They constructed their ditches, they opened their land to settlement. It was settled; the payments were made for the land, as provided in the law under which they settled; and their water payments were made up to a certain percentage, practically all of them.

Then the company that had undertaken to build the dam, and did build it; that had undertaken to construct the canals, and had constructed them, turned the matter over, or have taken the necessary steps to turn it over, to the water users' association. The water users' association becomes a substitute for the company that built the dam and the canals, which was the same character of corporation as the Benton Water Company, which is seeking this right at the hands of Congress. Now, that company has practically closed its business. Its functions have been fully performed, and hereafter the water users' association is the only organization that stands for the maintenance and as the guarantor for the performance of the contract.

This is important to be considered when you are considering the responsibility behind this proposed legislation. The water users' association is an association of farmers and truckmen and of all the class of people who have settled upon the land. The purpose of their organization is merely to keep the water ditches in order, to see that the water is fairly distributed, and to make the necessary rules and regulations incident to those very limited functions.

Mr. President, it will be seen that there remains no responsibility behind this company after it turns its plant over to the water users' association, which is the second end of their control. Now, what remains? A corporation for the purpose of selling electricity for lights or power. All that remains is a corporation of minor importance, of limited responsibility. All of this great wealth, represented by the ownership of the land, has passed from the company into the water users' association.

If the Senate is ready to enter upon that kind of business, I am ready to allow it to take the responsibility, with the assurance in my mind that it will not be very long before we will be appealed to to relieve these people from this dilemma.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am in sympathy with the amendment if the present law permits the company to take tolls. What I should like to know of the Senator is whether, as the bill is framed and as it has been reported by the committee, the company would have the power to charge tolls on anybody that was navigating the river or any part of the river.

Mr. HEYBURN. There is no prohibition against the company collecting tolls.

Mr. PILES. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. HEYBURN. And there is no provision here for the maintenance of such attendance as will make it convenient for the parties to use the lock.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. I will state for the information of the Senator from Illinois that the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to the bill, which I accepted and which is a part of the bill, reads as follows:

Provided, That said Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, shall construct, operate, and maintain locks, perpetual and free of charge or toll to navigation and navigators, and shall so use said stream as not in any manner to obstruct, embarrass, or retard navigation.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is only a part of my amendment.

Mr. PILES. So no tolls can be charged.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is only a part of my amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. As I understand it, the amendment the senior Senator from Idaho offers proposes to require the company to have ample attendants there to see that there shall be no delay in navigation on the river.

Mr. HEYBURN. And that the Government shall never at any time be charged with any expense for maintaining it, which, of course, will include attendance and care of the work.

Mr. PILES. If the Senator is willing to let this matter come to a vote, I am willing to accept any reasonable amendment. I have no objection to requiring these persons to do whatever is necessary or proper in the premises. This amendment, however, goes altogether too far.

As a matter of fact, there was not a steamer, according to a telegram which my colleague has received from Captain Gray, whom the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] knows very well, passing up and down that river during the year 1907 between Riparia and Ainsworth. Ainsworth is located at the mouth of the river, and Riparia is about 50 miles above. The dam is proposed to be put in between these two places, about 5 miles above the mouth of the river. No steamer in the year 1907 passed up that river between those points except those owned and operated by the railway company, and the Government steamer there, I presume, for the purpose of improving the river.

I will state the only objection I see to the amendment. I will read it all, so that I can get it in proper connection:

Provided, That the said Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, shall not at any time charge or collect any toll or fee for the passage of any boat or craft of any kind through any lock or locks which said company may construct or cause to be constructed under the provisions of this act or any regulations pursuant thereto.

Here is the part I object to:

And provided further, That the said Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, shall at its own expense keep at all times competent and sufficient attendants at said lock or locks for the purpose of opening and closing the same.

As I stated a few moments ago, there are practically no vessels going up and down that river, and to require the company to keep a competent and sufficient crew there is not necessary, and it would work an unnecessary expense and hardship on these people, as I view it. But I am perfectly willing that the amendment shall be put in this way:

And provided further, That the said Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, shall, at its own expense, keep such attendants at said lock or locks for the purpose of opening and closing the same, as may be required by the Secretary of War.

I do not think that an unnecessary hardship should be imposed upon these people, but we should let the Secretary of War determine what is necessary to be kept there by the company for the purposes of navigation and to protect everyone. I am perfectly agreeable to accept the amendment with that modification.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the fact that steamers did not pass up there during the last year is due to the fact that the work of the Government at Celilo Falls is not yet completed. Arrangements have been perfected by parties, who are as responsible as it is possible for business men to be, to put a regular line of steamers on the river between Lewiston and the sea, connecting with each other. If that work is completed this year or next, there will be a class of navigation that will require constant attendance night and day.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; for a question.

Mr. PILES. Does the Senator say it will be completed this year?

Mr. HEYBURN. I say this year or the next.

Mr. PILES. There has been only $1,000,000 appropriated for that work, and it will cost between four and five million dollars, if not $10,000,000. I have forgotten just the amount that it will cost. It can not be completed for four years.

Mr. HEYBURN. I saw the chairman or the president of the Board of Commerce of Oregon here the other day, and I had some talk with him in reference to the work. I am speaking on the strength of his statement. Neither of us can say definitely when a great Government project like that will be completed; but that is near enough. The fact would be the same if it were next year or the year after; but those who are hopeful and who are giving it close attention believe that it will be completed within the time I have suggested. That, however, is not so material as is the condition that will exist after it is completed. But even now there is a class of river craft, owned and operated by men who depend upon it for their daily livelihood, that has been going up and down that river. I have received a suggestion that I should name these people. That I am not called upon to do; but I make the statement on information, which is as reliable as can be obtained, that there is a great deal of what you call small craft operating on the river. That is not all.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. PILES. I ask the Senator if he has any objection to an amendment that I shall propose to his amendment, to the effect that this company shall be required to keep there, at their own expense, such attendants as may be required by the Secretary of War for the accommodation of any person or persons navigating said river or any portion thereof, or desiring to pass through its locks?

Mr. HEYBURN. If this bill is to pass, of course there should be such a provision, but whether that is necessary or not we will not pause to consider at this moment, because I am briefly going to finish the remarks that I have to make in regard to this bill.

The man in a rowboat, who is living along the margin of this stream and making his living by the use of his rowboat, is as much entitled to free and open navigation as is the man on a steamboat. They are proposing to build a dam 35 feet high. That is what they tell me in their letters, and I think I have stated it accurately.

Mr. PILES. I do not know.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the statement that is made to me—a concrete dam, up which nothing living can climb, and over which nothing living can go safely. Now, how is a man with a raft of logs going down that river—and that is a rafting country—how is the man with a rowboat; how is the man with his homemade marine construction, who is taking his wheat down to put it on the cars—how are they to go over that dam? It is as important that that river should be kept open for that class of navigation as that it should be kept open for any other class of navigation.

Now, is it unreasonable to require by the provisions of the law—and not be at the mercy of obtaining some convenient regulations—is it unreasonable to require that these people shall keep that river open for navigation? They should be required to construct this side passageway before they commence a dam on the river, and they should be required to put their lock in it and have it ready to operate, so that when they commence to obstruct the main river, which is a very large river, they may immediately coincidentally use this lock and this canal. Is that unreasonable?

I am not waiving my objection to this artificial substitution for the rights of our people; but if you are going to do it, notwithstanding my objections and the objections of the State of Idaho to it, do it with as little liability of damage as possible.

Mr. President, I have gone over in my mind the situation as it was presented here yesterday, and I not only have not seen any reason for changing or varying from the position I took on yesterday; but I find, if there was a fault committed, I did not state it strong enough. I know how difficult it is to convince a body of this kind, composed of men 3,000 miles away from the conditions, men who, when you speak of the Snake River and of its great usefulness to that community, probably in their minds have some river in their own community and think that this or that might be done without inconvenience.

There were laid on my desk here this morning a lot of bills which have been enacted into law providing for the bridging of some alligator streams in Florida. I do not desire to be understood as speaking with any disrespect of the State of Florida, but the idea of comparing that class of navigation with the navigation of a river such as this is, with a country behind it in which there are counties as big as the State of Florida, I believe, and with the future, not only of our lives, but of the lifetime of innumerable generations to follow us! You stand here at the very threshold of the growth of that country to stab it, and promise to continue to do it when these other five applications that I have received notice of come to you, and you will have the Snake River resembling stairs, rather than a navigable stream; you will have decrepit and decayed financial institutions that spring up on great streams and go down into financial destruction generally within five years.

This company will never build this work. If this bill is passed my prayer will be that these people will fail. The only salvation that I can see for the State of Idaho and its future is that this enterprise shall fail, as it surely will, and as I hope it will. I say that in no spirit of malice toward any man or any man's hopes or ambitions, but I say that because it is the only frail barrier between Idaho's rights and the enactment of such legislation as this. It seems impossible that the Congress of the United States, with the facts before them, could be induced to do such a thing. I have endeavored to restrain my language and my expressions throughout the consideration of this question within the bounds of parliamentary propriety, but I was never tried to the extent that I have been in discussing this question. I never dreamed that Congress could do such a thing or would do it, or that men would fail to see the threat that this kind of legislation is to the prosperity of the State of Idaho.

Now, I am not inclined to be unreasonable, and I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Is there any provision in the bill that the Government may regulate the tolls to be charged on this canal? I suppose, of course, there will be a charge.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; the amendment which I have offered is that there shall never be any charge. That is the amendment that I am now asking for a vote on.

Mr. TELLER. That is the amendment which is now before the Senate?

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the amendment which is now before the Senate.

Mr. PILES. Is the vote to be on the amendment which I offered?

Mr. HEYBURN. I imagine the vote is on my amendment. I have offered an amendment, and it is now before the Senate.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let us have the amendment read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 11, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the said Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, shall not at any time charge or collect any toll or fee for the passage of any boat or craft of any kind through any lock or locks which said company may construct or cause to be constructed under the provisions of this act, or any regulation pursuant thereto: And provided further, That the said Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, shall at its own expense keep at all times competent and sufficient attendants at said lock or locks for the purpose of opening and closing the same when required so to do by any person or persons navigating said river, or any portion thereof, or desiring to pass through its locks: And provided further, That the Government of the United States shall at no time be at any expense for construction, repairs, or maintenance of the said dam, lock, or anything in connection with said dam or lock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PILES. I move that the amendment be amended, so as to read as follows:

Provided further, That the said Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, shall at its own expense keep such attendants at said lock or locks for the purpose of opening and closing the same, as may be required by the Secretary of War for the accommodation of any person or persons navigating said river, or any portion thereof, or desiring to pass through its locks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Washington please send his amendment to the Secretary's desk, so that it may be stated.

Mr. PILES. I have interlined the amendment so that it may be stated.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I think it is hardly conceivable that the Senate will authorize the building of a dam accompanied by a lock unless it makes some provision for the use of the lock. The water company might build a dam and build a lock, but it would not help the navigation of the river to have the lock and the canal if there was not some provision made in the act for keeping it open. A shipmaster who goes up or down, as the case may be, probably would not know how to open it, and if he did know how to open it he would not know how to close it perhaps. So, necessarily, there must be somebody there. Now, is the canal company to do that or is the Government to do it? I think the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] is entirely proper. I think it would be very astonishing if we should pass the bill without some such provision as that in it.

For myself, Mr. President, I do not believe in the Government of the United States allowing private parties to interfere with the navigation of streams, even though it may be beneficial temporarily and the Government may save money by such parties building a dam. We have tried it in a few instances, as I said yesterday, and every time we have had trouble. I predict now, if this company builds the dam and builds the locks, that eventually the Government of the United States will have to take charge of the work in order that the navigation of that river may be unimpeded.

Mr. President, I dislike to interfere with what may seem to be a local matter, and yet it seems to me that the people who are interfered with ought to be given such protection as is suggested by the Senator's amendment. That river, as I said yesterday, is destined to have a great deal of commerce on it, provided always the Government of the United States does its duty by that river. It opens up a country in the interior of Idaho, away from railroads and away from communication, except by stage, telegraph, and telephone, that will some day be a very rich producing country. I think the Senator from Idaho stated that the railroad had reached Lewiston, though I am not certain about that.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. Up the river the other way there is a railroad running into Lewiston, I know.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. The railroad is now completed from Lewiston down to the mouth of the Columbia River; that is to say, through the section to which the Senator especially refers.

Mr. TELLER. From Riparia up?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; that road is completed and in operation.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, that river from Riparia to Lewiston for the last fifteen years, except in extreme low water, has been in use by a regular line of packets from Riparia to Lewiston. I think the distance is 80 odd miles, or something like that; I do not remember exactly. There are some reefs in that river which in low water make navigation somewhat difficult, and I believe in certain seasons there has been trouble in that respect; but yet these boats have carried a vast amount of freight down from Lewiston and the country above it, and this trade has been of very great benefit to the country. Of course it is not so great since the railroad came up above Lewiston.

Away up in the interior of Idaho is a country that is partially settled and partially opened. It is a country that I have some knowledge of, and I know it to be a very rich country. I know that some day it will produce an immense amount of mineral as well as agricultural products.

We are very apt to underrate the Western country. Very few people who ever went there anticipated what it would be in fifty years. I recall when the Union Pacific Railroad was built that there was a great deal said about it. The Government gave a large amount of money toward the building of it. I myself talked personally with the people who put their money in it. Any number of them told me that they did not expect the road would ever be made to pay, and that ultimately the Government would have to take it for its debt. The Government did take it for its debt, but when the Government took it, which was about the time that McKinley was President, we provided that it should be turned over to some parties in the East, who had organized a new company, on condition that they would pay a certain amount of the debt.

I myself made objection on this floor on the ground that they ought to have paid all of the debt; and when Mr. McKinley became President he determined that they ought to pay all of the debt. They did so, and then they took charge of the road. I make the statement, not upon my own authority, but upon information which, I take it, is perfectly reliable, that the Union Pacific last year carried more tons of freight than the Pennsylvania Railroad carried and more tons of freight than the New York Central Railroad carried. It had a tremendous trade, and the trade is going to increase. Because there is no large trade now on the Snake River it can not be said that there will not be a great trade in the future.

I should like to see this bill amended, at least so as to provide that there will be no real obstruction to the navigation of that river. The Senator who has the bill in charge says that is the intention. If so, I hope it will be carried out. We have been, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has said, passing a lot of these bills. They applied mostly to rivers where there is no business, and probably never will be. When we allow the building of a dam across a river we are declaring, practically, that the river above that point is not to be a navigable stream. I have had my attention called to a number of such bills, and in most cases they apply to streams where there is not much above the dam. In this case there is an empire above the dam; there is a long stretch of country, and as good country, as you will find, as there is in the United States when water is put on it and it goes under cultivation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire it to be understood that I am not offering this amendment with the idea that, with it adopted, the bill should be passed. It is one of those cases where, if we have to suffer, I want to reduce it to the minimum if I can. The amendment I have offered is a proper amendment if the bill is to pass. I shall, of course, desire support for the amendment and desire its adoption, but it does not follow that I will then support the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Suppose this amendment is adopted and the company should fail to comply with its stipulations, is there any provision as to the forfeiture of their charter or any other penalty that would compel them to live up to the requirements of the amendment?

Mr. HEYBURN. No, Mr. President, there is no method under the proposed law by which the Government of the United States can recoup itself for any loss that it may sustain by reason of the failure of this company. It is incorporated under the laws of the State of Washington. It is engaged in intrastate business; it is not engaged in interstate commerce; it is not engaged in anything that would bring it within the Federal jurisdiction. If they ever get the right to do anything, and if they can manage to inveigle some persons into advancing money in order that they may start some work, after a few months and the expenditure of the temporary fund that they may get together, you will see an incompleted wreck in the Snake River—a wreck that will impede navigation and stand there as a menace.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I do not wish to take up any more of the time of the Senate with this subject, but I want to read to the Senate the official statement of the Chief of Engineers with respect to the Snake River. The Senator has been talking here about great battle ships going up to Lewiston.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, Mr. President, I would prefer that the Senator should do it in his own time. I am thoroughly familiar with the reports that have been made from time to time as a basis for the river and harbor bill. I am also——

Mr. PILES. Does the Senator——

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to finish my sentence; I do not like to be broken in the middle of a sentence—I am also familiar with the engineers' reports on the Snake River, and I am also familiar with the fact that Congress, with all that information before it, has been making appropriations for the improvement of the Snake River. Now I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. PILES. I merely want to read this into the RECORD and get through with it; that is all. I will read from the Report of the Chief of Engineers of the Army for 1907, at page 759. Under the designation of the Columbia and Snake rivers, Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, speaking of the Snake River, he says:

> The difficulties of navigation are the many rapids which exist throughout the entire length of this waterway, especially in the upper reaches of the Snake River. In some of these rapids the current is moderate, but in others it is very swift and impossible of ascent by any but the swiftest boats. Some of the channels through the rapids are crooked and narrow and all of them are shoal, with a ruling depth of 2 to 3 feet at low water between Celilo and Lewiston.

This dam is proposed to be put in between Celilo and Lewiston, where there is a navigable depth of water of between 2 and 3 feet at low water. Proceeding, he says:

> And a lesser depth above that point. A detailed description of the rivers may be found on page 2293 of the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1880 and page 3211 of the Annual Report for 1891. The only stretch of river upon which navigation was continued after that date—

Speaking of a certain date—> and has continued up to the present time, is the 76 miles of the Snake River between the point of railroad crossing at Riparia Junction and the important city of Lewiston, Idaho. This suspension of traffic on the lower Snake below Riparia Junction and upper Columbia River between the mouth of the Snake and Celilo continued from 1882 until the revival of interest in open-river navigation by the completion of the portage railroad at Celilo by the State of Oregon in 1905.

Then he goes on and gives the appropriation.

> There has been no comprehensive plan of improvement adopted for this entire stretch of river, but improvements have been made at certain points from time to time under special projects. Before 1877 the sum of $120,000 was appropriated and expended in removing rock at the principal rapids in the Columbia River and for making detached surveys.

Then he proceeds:

> The amount expended on the original and modified projects up to the close of the fiscal year 1907 was $373,143.48, of which $14,747.08 was expended during the fiscal year on raking gravel shoals and bettering the conditions above Riparia.

In all these years only $350,000 have been expended on the Snake River.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the Senator has disclosed a condition of false pretenses that should be sufficient to indict somebody who is responsible. The Government has expended at the Celilo Falls $9,000,000, I think——

Mr. PILES. About $3,000,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. I mean the ultimate expense.

Mr. PILES. It is shown here in this report.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the appropriation up to this time.

Mr. PILES. It is estimated in this volume, and I will give it to the Senator if he wishes it. It is on page 764 of this record:

July 1, 1907, amount covered by uncompleted contracts	$220,904.00
Amount (estimated) required for completion of existing project	3,433,392.64

Mr. HEYBURN. I will take that estimate now, although I have other figures in my mind in connection with this work. Congress has been inveigled into appropriating that money for the purpose of what? Of including the lower Columbia River with nonnavigable waters; with useless waters.

Mr. PILES. Is the upper Columbia River navigable?

Mr. HEYBURN. About as navigable as the Snake River; not any more so.

Mr. PILES. The Senator can not get out of Lewiston except by the Columbia River.

Mr. HEYBURN. Great sections of these rivers are navigable, and then there are points where they are nonnavigable. Navigation continuously is maintained on the stretches, long or short, as the case may be, between points that are not navigable. I have never known of so persistent an effort to be made to discredit the work that has been performed in both Houses of Congress during the last span of years to persuade the Government to waste its money. Three hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars, I believe the Senator read—I will find it in the Engineer's Report——

Mr. PILES. That is further back in the book.

Mr. HEYBURN. Never mind; $375,000 is approximately the amount, and that is near enough. I am not in as great a hurry as is the Senator from Washington. I am going to be reasonable, but I am not going to be in a very great hurry about this matter. I am like a man going to execution—I do not care how slow the wagon travels. [Laughter.] So that the execution takes place before sundown, I will be satisfied.

For years we have been asked to appropriate money to do that which the Senator from Washington says, in effect, never can be done. According to him, that this river is a navigable stream is a myth, and no amount of Government expenditure can make it a practical proposition to navigate the Snake River. The Snake River flows through the State of Idaho for a distance, if I am correct in my recollection, of upward of 800 miles. It is navigable at many points at intervals. Commencing at Lewiston, it is navigable under certain conditions for 120 miles. The last steamer that was built to navigate that portion of the river was built at the crossing at Huntington, which is on the Oregon line where the Oregon Short Line crosses the river. That boat made the trip down the river successfully. It made repeated trips over that part of the river successfully, and other boats have been engaged in doing the same thing. It requires the removal of certain rocks and reefs, the exact location of which is known and the cost for removing which has been estimated. From Lewiston down it is a question of constant navigation. Two lines of steamers ply upon that river. Those of us who live in that country frequently have occasion to ride upon them, and they carry an immense amount of tonnage. As I said before, there is now a company organized, in anticipation of the completion of the Celilo Falls Canal, for the purpose of navigating continuously from Lewiston to tide water, which is to be placed at the mercy of this little, puny, feeble effort on the part of some speculators to obtain something in the way of a commission from Congress that they can take into the money market and raise some money on. That is the truth of it.

Legislators should not look merely at to-day and to-morrow and take the opinions of men as to the conditions that exist to-day and the judgment of men upon those conditions, but they should ask, What will the next generation think of it, and the next one after that, and the next one after that? The duty of a legislator is to look beyond the present hour. I can go into the city of Lewiston and get telegrams, too. I can get them both ways. So can any man. You say, "My friend Blank wants this done. It will please him. I should like to have you send a telegram to So-and-so and ask him to please vote for this bill."

I do not know whether there will be anybody to vote against this bill except myself, but so far as I am concerned, I am ready to let it come to a vote.

Mr. President, is there not an amendment that has not been acted upon?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Idaho, as amended, is pending.

Mr. PILES. I will accept the amendment as amended to save time.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, when this bill was considered in the Committee on Commerce, of which I have the honor of being a member, it was favorably reported to the Senate. We had the recommendation of the War Department, and supposed it a wise and proper measure. Since that date the President of the United States has sent a special message to Congress bearing upon the subject-matter, and, as a friend of the measure and of all measures designed to develop and improve the great watersheds and navigable streams of the West, I will quote one paragraph of the President's message, as follows:

> Numerous bills granting water-power rights on navigable streams have been introduced. None of them give the Government the right to make a reasonable charge for the valuable privileges so granted, in spite of the fact that these water-power privileges are equivalent to many thousands of acres of the best coal lands for their production of power. Nor is any definite time limit set, as should always be done in such cases. I shall be obliged hereafter, in accordance with the policy stated in a recent message, to veto any water-power bill which does not provide for a time limit and for the right of the President or of the Secretary concerned to fix and collect such a charge as he may find to be just and reasonable in each case.

I think it proper for me to call the attention of the Senate to this message, which is on the desk of every Senator, and, in compliance with the suggestions contained therein, I offer the amendments which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, after the word "operate," it is proposed to insert "for a period of fifty years."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment just stated.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not prevail. This bill has passed the House twice, the last time a year ago, and certainly the message of the President can have no application to a bill which, as I have said, passed the House a year ago, and would have passed the Senate, I think, but for the objection of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], who asked that it be put under Rule IX, in order that he might investigate the matter and get information in regard to it. Therefore the bill went over because it could not be heard at the last session of Congress, it having come over to this body too late for action.

I do not believe that the President's message has application to this bill under the circumstances, but if it does that is a matter that should be taken up in the House, where the bill originated.

Then, on the other hand, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] yesterday made what I thought a very powerful argument, to the effect that it is not within the province of the Government to sell water from the navigable rivers of the United States; that the people of the States did not part with the right or title to the waters in the navigable rivers of the United States any more than they parted with the soil underneath. The Senator cited authorities from the Supreme Court of the United States upon the doctrine I have mentioned. That is a question, I think, that ought to be considered, in addition to the fact I have stated that this bill passed the House twice; and I think the President will look upon it as not coming within the scope of his recommendations contained in the message recently sent to Congress.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not wish to obstruct the passage of the bill or to insist upon the amendments if the friends of the bill are not in favor of them. Fifty years is the term for which licenses or charters are issued to corporations in the State of Washington, and I made the amendment to conform to the statute of that State. The President on March 2, by direct declaration, states that he will not approve any measure that does not have the two provisions which I have embodied in these amendments; but I will not press them if the friends of the measure object.

Mr. PILES. I prefer that the matter be taken up in the House if the President wishes that amendment made.

Mr. PERKINS. The message was sent to the Senate as well as to the House.

Mr. TELLER. The suggestion of the Senator from California raises another new question on this bill. We have passed several bills like this at this session without any such provision, and it seems to me that it is not the time now to commence a new system, on this particular bill. If this bill has any merit, let us consider the bill on its own merit. I should doubt very much our authority to say what is proposed by the amendment of the Senator from California. I presume we could say that the corporation should not have this right except for fifty years if the dam obstructed navigation; but if it does not obstruct navigation and we consent to it, I do not see why we should limit the time. I suppose they will occupy it through the life of their charter. I do not know what the second amendment of the Senator from California is. It was not read. I should like to hear it read.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the second amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 2 the following:

> And nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent a reasonable charge by the Government of the United States for the use of any of the waters of said river diverted by means of said dam.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, that opens up the question that I discussed yesterday and which I propose to discuss again if it is sought to place that amendment on this bill. I regard that as one of the things that we people in the West can not submit to, and I do not intend to submit to it, even if I make myself a burden to the Senate. I do not want to discuss it now, but I give notice that if this amendment is put upon the bill I shall discuss it ad infinitum. I do not intend to let the bill pass with such an amendment on it.

Mr. PERKINS. As a member of the Committee on Commerce, I felt it my duty to call attention to the President's message and to the declaration in his message which I have read, but if the friends of the measure are still willing to permit it to run the gauntlet and look upon the amendments as objectionable, I will withdraw them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California withdraws his amendments.

Mr. BACON. Before the bill is put upon its passage I ask that the amendment providing for the guaranty of the free passage of the river be again read to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendments that have been made.

The Secretary read as follows:

> Provided, That said Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, shall construct, operate, and maintain locks, perpetual and free of charge or toll to navigation and navigators, and shall so use said stream as not in any manner to obstruct, embarrass, or retard navigation: Provided further, That the said Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, shall not at any time charge or collect any toll or fee for the passage of any boat or craft of any kind through any lock or locks which said company may construct or cause to be constructed under the provisions of this act, or any regulations pursuant thereto: And provided further, That the said Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, shall, at its own expense, keep such attendants at said lock or locks for the purpose of opening and closing the same as may be required by the Secretary of War for the accommodation of any person or persons navigating said river, or any portion thereof, or desiring to pass through its locks: And provided further, That the Government of the United States shall at no time be at any expense for construction, repairs, or maintenance of the said dam, lock, or anything in connection with said dam or lock.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, a new idea has been presented in connection with this legislation. While the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] has withdrawn his amendment, nevertheless it presents a phase in this class of legislation that has not been considered, and while I do not feel inclined at this time to open up the question of the power of the Government of the United States to exercise the right to charge for the use of waters in any State, yet it seems to me that the question ought not to go by default. I do not care to have the impression go out from this body at the present or at any other time that it recognizes or ever will recognize the right of the Government of the United States, acting either through its legislative or executive branches, to exercise any right or control or charge any price for the use of the waters in any stream in any State in the United States.

When the constitution of the State of Idaho was framed that question was provided for and taken care of, and I believe, without having specially investigated it, that the constitutions of all the States recently admitted into the Union have contained the same provisions. No one can have title to water. The title is to the use of the water and not to the water in any stream. I place that more distinctly. No one can have title to the water in any stream; people have a right only to the use of it. That is the law. When the water has passed by it has gone beyond the claim or the right to claim by the party over whose land it flowed.

Mr. President, never did a more serious question come before Congress than the question suggested in the message that was read by the Senator from California. We provide by our organic law that the right to the use of the water can be acquired only by appropriation, and we prescribe the manner of the appropriation. That is the organic law of the State of Idaho, and I believe it is the organic law of all of the recently admitted States, at least.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. At this point I will call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the fact that the Government of the United States, fully advised as to its rights and the law in the premises, regularly makes appropriations from the streams for irrigation purposes in connection with projects agreeable to the laws of the States.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it does it because the laws of the State and the administrative government of the State permit it to do so. The representative in Idaho of the Forestry Department since we have been in session here has demanded the right to file locations upon a large number, thirty odd or even more, of water rights in the State of Idaho, as though the Forestry Service or the Government of the United States can exercise the right given to a citizen of the United States.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator's reply indicates some lack of comprehension of what I intended to convey by my words. If the United States under the law is required to make an appropriation of water under the laws of the State precisely as a citizen of the State is required to make the appropriation, how can it be possible that the Government while pursuing that policy in another Department asserts the right to sell the water, or its use, without consulting the State?

Mr. HEYBURN. I think my reply will be comprehensive of the suggestion of the Senator when I couple it with the statement that the United States is not a citizen of any State and is not a citizen of the United States, and it does not come within the meaning of the law which says that the waters of a stream may be appropriated by a citizen of the United States or one who has declared his intention to become such by doing this and that act. There is no law under which the United States may locate a water right so far as our State is concerned, and I believe so far as any State is concerned. The United States Government has no sovereign right or power that makes it the proprietor of the waters in any State.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. It is understood that under the reclamation projects of the Government, projects under which millions of money are being expended in the construction of canals and reservoirs, the Government has attached to the canal used for diversion a right to divert the water, subject, of course, to prior appropriation. That the Government is not a citizen of any State nor a citizen of the United States is a mere aphorism. The officers of the United States, acting as trustees for the water users under a project, unquestionably do acquire a valid legal right to the water they appropriate under the laws of the State of Idaho, subject only to prior appropriation.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the controversy suggested by the remarks of the Senator from Montana will be a matter for the consideration of the courts of the United States under existing conditions. I do not care to enter into a full and technical discussion of that question at this time, because of the fact that it is a matter now in dispute. The reclamation act provides, assuming that no one will object, that the waters when acquired may be used for certain purposes within certain limitations under certain conditions. The reclamation act does not confer the right to use the waters of any stream. It does not undertake to do it. Congress can not take back the power that it grants to the State when it creates the State.

When the State of Idaho was admitted into the Union it came to Congress with its constitution framed and adopted. The act of Congress admitting Idaho as a State recites the fact and ratifies the constitution in express terms. That is a condition which exists as to only a few States. It makes the constitution of Idaho in one sense an act of Congress, an unrepealable and unchangeable act. Congress can not repeal a single clause or change a single word in the act by which Idaho was made a State. It can not take back any right that was conferred by the act admitting Idaho as a State. That is one of those final and sovereign contracts between the State and the Government that neither of them can change without the consent of the other, and there is no provision under the Constitution by which either of them may change that contract against objection.

The little message of the President, which has just been read to us by the Senator from California this afternoon, seemingly an innocent document on its face, raises one of the most far-reaching questions of law that was ever before the Congress of the United States. The other day we passed a bill for two forest reserves, the Appalachian and White Mountain forest reserves, and sent them to the other branch of Congress for their consideration. They are destined to become the law of the land. These two reserves cover a watershed as large as a State, yes, larger than some States in the Union, and they cover streams that afford immense water power for all purposes. I think that in the State of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] some very valuable water rights exist that will be subject to the suggestions contained in the little innocent message which was read to us.

I think that Senators can afford to be patient when a question of that magnitude comes before them; where it is involved in the vote that they are going to cast; when we are warned that the Executive Department of the Government is going to demand the right to charge and collect a price for the use of the waters in a navigable stream, and tells us that any bill which does not recognize that right will receive the veto of the Executive. Does it not seem proper at this time to take some notice of that, when we are legislating upon that very subject?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that when the Appalachian and White Mountain bills were before the Senate in the Fifty-ninth Congress, I became somewhat alarmed at the suggestion that the Government could take possession of the water power, recalling the fact that the Merrimac River, which runs through my State, carries more spindles than any other river in the world. I made a suggestion to the Senate that if that was to be our fate, I preferred that the bill should not pass. I did not want to surrender to the Federal Government the right to interrupt our industrial affairs, and still I can scarcely believe that any such attempt will be made.

Mr. HEYBURN. And yet, Mr. President, when the Senator from New Hampshire made that suggestion, if my memory serves me accurately, it was made to me while I was on my feet discussing the forest reserve question, and I replied that that was the interpretation which the executive branch of the Government placed upon the law, holding that if the Government conserved the water (and they have adopted the word "conserve" and given it a meaning peculiar to their purposes) by protecting the forests the Government must necessarily have some right, just as a child might claim some title to the waters in the ocean because it emptied a tin cup full of water into the ocean. But that is the claim of the Government. The statement that I made to the Senator from New Hampshire then, only upon the conjecture of my own mind, which was the result of what I thought I knew, has been crystallized in the message to Congress a few days ago, which is in all the desks, in which the President serves notice upon us that he will approve no bill that does not provide specifically for the manner of exercising this that he claims as a right.

Mr. President, it is the most far-reaching and overreaching claim of power that ever was made in a Government. The kings and emperors claim no such rights in their lands. And yet you are going to pass a bill which gives to those people the right to build a dam for the purpose of generating electrical power, for the purpose of making the water available for various uses, and here comes the demand of the toll master that you must remember when you pass this law that "I will claim the right to collect the toll, and you can not take it away from me."

In our State of Idaho we have more water than any other State in the Union. We have lakes on top of high mountains that will afford an enormous supply of power. We have rivers rising up in the mountain chains of that State where you can reservoir and reservoir over and over again the waters of the river and have at your command unlimited volumes of water that you can flow onto any lands in the State. It is merely a question of distance that you carry them. In the State of Idaho we deem it a matter of small importance to carry the water 60, 70, 80, or 120 miles, where we need it, and we would carry it 500 miles if we needed to do it. Yet we are told by this message that hereafter, because they have planted down upon us more than one-third of the area of our State in forest reserves, and because they are going to exercise that imaginary function of preserving the snows and the waters and adding to them, they will, because of that imaginary contribution to the water sources of the State, claim the right of charging the people for it.

But as I said to the Senator from Washington, I am more interested in having those who are going to vote upon this measure know what they are voting on than I am that the Senator from Washington should realize his fond dream of passing the bill. This was a proper time to pause and consider whether in enacting the bill into a law we should meet the suggestions contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from California and withdrawn.

If we are to pay toll for the use of the water of the streams, how long will it be before we are to pay toll for the right to breathe the air that surrounds us? Waters running in natural streams have always been accounted free. That is the reason why the courts have said that no man can acquire title to the water; that the most he can acquire under any law is the right to use the water, and that is the limit of his right. That has been said over and over again by the highest court in the land.

Mr. President, I am sorry that the Senator from California withdrew his amendment. He is a member of the committee that reported the bill and will doubtless support it. There are nearly enough Senators on that committee to pass a bill if no one else supported it. So I know what is in front of me.

Now, Mr. President, having called attention to this marvelous statement, that the Government of the United States, in addition to being in the business of keeping wood yards and sawmills and various business establishments, is going to add to it that of a water master and a sort of Jupiter Pluvius, I will let the measure come to a vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments to be offered as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask for a roll call.

The yeas and nays were ordered and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GAMBLE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I will withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 47, nays 4, as follows:

YEAS—47.

Ankeny	Culberson	McCreary	Smith, Md.
Bacon	Curtis	McLaurin	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Dick	Martin	Smoot

So the bill was passed.

SETTLEMENT OF STATE ACCOUNTS.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 415) regulating the settlement of the accounts between the United States and the several States relative to the disposition of the public lands, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I renew my request that the report accompanying the bill be read.

Mr. GAMBLE. I was about to ask that the report accompanying the bill be read, in compliance with the request of the Senator from Kansas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read the report at the request of the Senator from Kansas.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. GAMBLE, from the Committee on Public Lands, December 11, 1907, and was interrupted by—

Mr. BURKETT. I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. NELSON. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The Secretary will continue the reading of the report.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report, the entire report being as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 415) regulating the settlement of the accounts between the United States and the several States relative to the disposition of the public lands, and for other purposes, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report it back with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The purport of the proposed legislation is fully set forth in the report of the Committee on Public Lands made upon a bill (S. 269) identical in its provisions in the Fifty-eighth Congress, and a bill (S. 311) identical in its provisions in the Fifty-ninth Congress, a copy of which is hereto attached and adopted as the report of this committee.

Senate Report No. 782, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session.

Mr. GAMBLE, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 269:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 269) regulating the settlement of the accounts between the United States and the several States relative to the disposition of the public lands, and for other purposes, having had the same under consideration, recommend that the same do pass.

The provisions of this bill are identical with Senate bill 1473, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, which was favorably reported by this committee. After careful consideration of this bill your committee believe it ought to be enacted into law.

The reasons and necessities for this legislation are very fully set forth in Senate Report No. 1743, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, to accompany Senate bill 1473, above referred to, which is hereby adopted as the report to accompany this bill.

The report then adopted was Senate Report No. 1380, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, to accompany Senate bill 2895, identical in its provisions with the present bill, as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred Senate bill 2895, have had the same under consideration and report as follows:

The object of this bill is to settle the accounts between the United States and the several States relative to the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands, and thus bring to a conclusion several long-contested questions. The bill consists of two parts, the first devoted to the claims of the States for 5 per cent upon the net proceeds of the public lands disposed of for bounty land warrants, Indian reservations, and other purposes named, and the second to the advances deposited many years ago with the States out of the proceeds of the public lands.

Similar bills have been before Congress for many years, and the following reports, all favorable, have been made on them in the two Houses: House Report 707, Forty-fifth Congress, second session; Senate Report 121, Forty-sixth Congress, second session; Senate Report 193, Forty-seventh Congress, first session; House Report 345, Forty-seventh Congress, first session; Senate Report 775, Fifty-second Congress, first session; Senate Report 1043, Fifty-third Congress, third session; House Report 1552, Fifty-third Congress, third session; Senate Report 226, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session; House Report 996, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session; Senate Report 12, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session; House Report 1668, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session.

I. THE 5 PER CENT ACCOUNTS.

THE PROMISE TO THE STATES.

Upon the admission of the various public-land States to the Union the enabling acts have provided for the reservation of 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the sales of public lands within each State for the benefit of the State. Each State has stipulated in return, either the exemption of the public lands from tax, the exemption for a certain period from tax of lands granted for military services, the equality of nonresident with resident landowners, or some other like covenant.

The provisions on this subject are found in the following acts:

The variation in form and identity of purpose in these acts is seen by the following provisions taken from the above-cited acts:

Act for admission of Arkansas, June 23, 1836 (sec. 3, 5 Stat. L., 58):

"That 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the sale of lands lying within said State, and which shall be sold by Congress from and after the 1st day of July next, after deducting all expenses incident to the same, shall be reserved for making public roads and canals within the said State, under the direction of the general assembly thereof."

Act for admission of Minnesota, February 26, 1857 (sec. 5, 11 Stat. L., 167):

"Fifth. That 5 per cent of the net proceeds of sales of public lands lying within said State which shall be sold by Congress after the admission of the said State into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to said State for the purpose of making public roads and internal improvements, as the legislature shall direct."

Act for admission of North and South Dakota, Montana, and Washington, February 22, 1889 (sec. 13, 25 Stat. L., 680):

"That 5 per cent of the proceeds of the sales of public lands lying within said States which shall be sold by the United States subsequent to the admission of said States into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to the said States, to be used as a permanent fund, the interest of which only shall be expended for the support of common schools within said States, respectively."

The States have always insisted that under these provisions of law they are justly entitled to 5 per cent, not alone upon the sales of public lands for cash, but also upon the disposition of the public lands for permanent Indian reservations to discharge the treaty obligations of the United States to the Indians, and upon lands disposed of in satisfaction of bounty-land warrants and agricultural-college or other scrip issued by the United States in payment of its obligations.

FIVE PER CENT ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The claim for 5 per cent on Indian reservations was early made by the States and admitted by the United States.

By the act of March 2, 1855 (10 Stat. L., 630), the following provision was enacted, confined to the State of Alabama:

"An act to settle certain accounts between the United States and the State of Alabama.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, required to state an account between the United States and the State of Alabama, for the purpose of ascertaining what sum or sums of money are due to said State, heretofore unsettled, under the sixth section of the act of March 2, 1819, for the admission of Alabama into the Union; and that he be required to include in said account the several reservations under the various treaties with the Chickasaw, Choctaw, and Creek Indians within the limits of Alabama, and allow and pay to the said State 5 per cent thereon, as in case of other sales.

"Approved, March 2, 1855."

The next Congress, on March 3, 1857, made the following provision, by the first section for Mississippi and by the second section for all the other States (11 Stat. L., 200):

"An act to settle certain accounts between the United States and the State of Mississippi and other States.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, required to state an account between the United States and the State of Mississippi, for the purpose of ascertaining what sum or sums of money are due to said State, heretofore unsettled, on account of the public lands in said State, and upon the same principles of allowance and settlement as prescribed in the 'Act to settle certain accounts between the United States and the State of Alabama,' approved the 2d of March, 1855; and that he be required to include in said account the several reservations under the various treaties with the Chickasaw and Choctaw Indians within the limits of Mississippi, and allow and pay to the said State 5 per cent thereon, as in case of other sales, estimating the lands at the value of $1.25 per acre.

"SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said Commissioner shall also state an account between the United States and each of the other States upon the same principles, and shall allow and pay to each State such amount as shall thus be found due, estimating all lands and permanent reservations at $1.25 per acre.

"Approved, March 3, 1857."

The rate of calculation for the 5 per cent is by estimating the several Indian reservations at $1.25 an acre.

In an opinion rendered by the Secretary of the Interior on March 20, 1858, printed in Senate Report No. 226, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, page 3, it was held that the benefits of this act extended not alone to lands reserved and occupied by the Indians, but to lands located in the various States by scrip issued to the Indians in discharge of the treaty obligations of the United States. The Secretary said:

"The principle was thus indicated that when lands within those States had been disposed of by the United States to satisfy stipulations of an Indian treaty, they should, as respects the calculation and payment of the 5 per cent, be placed on the same footing as the lands sold by Congress. * * *

"In this connection the principle of adjustment established appears plainly to have been intended to embrace all the lands within the State disposed of by the United States to satisfy the stipulations of the treaties with the Indian tribes named.

"Within this class the tracts taken to satisfy the scrip which had its foundation in the Choctaw treaty of 1830 are plainly included as the tracts more directly selected by the Indians to satisfy their rights under the treaty."

The act of 1857 plainly shows a purpose to establish a general rule to regulate the accounts between the various States and the United States on the subject of Indian reservations, and the accounts of all the States then in the Union were adjusted in accordance with this act.

The amounts paid under this law to the several States are as follows:

Alabama	$128,336.42
Mississippi	167,686.17
Ohio	850.73
Indiana	6,333.73
Illinois	2,609.66
Iowa	7,562.94
Michigan	18,947.86
Wisconsin	41,647.13

Many years afterwards other States not in the Union in 1857 applied for a statement of accounts in their favor in accordance with this act, but two successive Secretaries of the Interior denied their claims, holding that the act was limited to the States in the Union at its date. (See 5 Land Dec., p. 712; 22 Land Dec., 550.)

The portion of this bill relating to Indian reservations is therefore nothing more than an application to the States of Minnesota, Oregon, Kansas, Nevada, Nebraska, California, Colorado, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Washington, Idaho, Wyoming, and Utah of the principles applied to the other States.

The original theory upon which this grant was made to Alabama, and subsequently to Mississippi and the other States, was that the reservation to the Indians of lands was a discharge of the obligation of the United States to those Indians, and that the States themselves should be in a no worse position when the United States used its lands to discharge its obligations than when the lands were sold for cash. The principle once applied to States in the Union in 1857 should be extended to all the other States.

It may indeed be supported for another reason. The continuance of the Indians within the boundary of a State, while a responsibility which the United States can not avoid, is yet a heavy burden upon the people of the State. No taxes are paid, the progress of settlement is impeded, intercommunication is broken up, and there is always danger of some of the many possible embarrassments in the relation between the Indians and their white neighbors. It is some compensation for this burden carried by the States, although by no means an equivalent for the disadvantage, that they should receive the same grant as would be given were the lands sold for cash to progressive settlers.

The committee has carefully guarded this portion of the bill from any possible abuse. The 5 per cent is to be paid only on existing permanent reservations, including lands allotted to Indians exempt from taxation. No allowance is to be made for past reservations ceded to the United States by the Indians or for any lands except those now actually occupied by the Indians.

The committee reports also the following amendment to provide for certain specific cases where the United States receives nothing from the sale of lands, but holds the proceeds in trust for Indian tribes:

"Nor shall it include any lands ceded by Indians or Indian tribes to be disposed of for the benefit of such Indians or Indian tribes, nor a per cent on the moneys derived on the sale of such lands."

An instance of the lands affected by this provision is found in the act of January 14, 1889, for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota (25 Stat. L., 642). After providing for the sale of the surplus lands of these Indians, section 7 then provides:

"That all money accruing from the disposal of said lands in conformity with the provisions of this act shall, after deducting all the expenses of making the census, of obtaining the cession and relinquishment, of making the removal and allotments, and of completing the surveys and appraisals in this act provided, be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of all the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota as a permanent fund, which shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, payable annually for the period of fifty years after the allotments provided for in this act have been made, and which interest and permanent fund shall be expended for the benefit of said Indians."

The sale by the United States being for the benefit of the Indians, and the proceeds being held in trust, no money from the sale is in the Treasury of the United States. Under these conditions the committee have thought that the 5 per cent ought not to be donated to the States from the moneys of the United States.

The committee have also carefully guarded this subject by the closing proviso of the second section, that where 5 per cent has once been paid on an Indian reservation there should be no further payment on the same lands if they should subsequently become a part of the public domain and be sold for cash.

The committee believe that these provisions are just both to the United States and to the States, and that the grant within these limitations ought not longer to be withheld.

BOUNTY-LAND WARRANT LOCATIONS.

This bill proposes to grant to each State 5 per cent upon the bounty-land warrants located in the State, calculated at $1.25 per acre. The justice of this contention is best exhibited by examining the statutes on the subject. The origin of the bounty-land warrant policy is set forth in Senate Report No. 193, Forty-seventh Congress, first session, as follows:

"The acts of Congress for the benefit of the recruiting service of the United States at the opening of the Revolutionary war are dated in August and September, 1776.

"The Commonwealth of Virginia about the same time (October, 1776), for the purpose of raising her quota of men and meeting the exigencies of the coming war, also offered lands to her soldiers as part compensation for their military services. These lands thus offered by the legislature of Virginia were afterwards patented by Congress to her soldiers agreeably to the terms of the cession made by Virginia to the Federal Government of the Northwestern Territory March 1, 1784.

"The several military grants for the war of 1812 are dated December 24, 1811; January 11, 1812; February 6, 1812; December 12, 1812; January 24, 1814; January 27, 1814; February 10, 1814; April 18, 1814, and December 14, 1814.

"Those of the Mexican war are dated February 11, 1847; March 3, 1847; September 28, 1850.

"It is clear from the language of these grants that they were designed to effect a future object, and in no sense did they relate to a past subject. The time when and the circumstances under which they were passed indicate but too manifestly the aim in view, namely, to facilitate and encourage enlistments that the requisite numerical force of the Army might be enlarged as rapidly as possible in order to meet the pressing necessities of each of the impending wars.

"At the time the resolution of September 16, 1776, was adopted, Congress owned no land, but expected by conquest to become entitled to all the land which England had acquired by discovery. Anticipating, therefore, the acquisition of large landed possessions, and expecting to have more land than money, Congress, in order to fill up the rank and file of the Army, and to raise and complete a regularly organized military establishment, offered in advance, besides specified monthly wages in money, an additional consideration in land, not for past services, but for services thereafter to be rendered. The colonial government of Virginia did the same thing, and her engagement to pay in land was afterwards assumed and fulfilled by Congress by setting apart for that purpose a section of country lying between the Little Miami and Scioto rivers in Ohio."

In some of the acts an option was given to the soldier to take either a land warrant or money. (See act of February 11, 1847, authorizing the raising of troops for the Mexican war, sec. 9, 9 Stat. L., 125.) Although this scrip was always known as bounty-land warrants, it was not a bounty in the sense of a gratuity, but was extra pay or increased emoluments for enlistments.

In House Report 345, Forty-seventh Congress, first session, this is very ably stated as follows:

"The several grants of land for military services rendered in the three great wars of this country, namely, the Revolutionary war, the war of 1812, and the Mexican war, were not bounties merely; they were not mere gratuities given by the Government out of a spirit of generosity to the soldiers who served in these wars; they were not granted or received in this spirit, but were, by the very terms of most of the acts authorizing the same, given in part payment for military services. They entered into and formed a part of the contract of enlistment. The object of these grants was to facilitate and encourage enlistments. In order to fill up the rank and file of the Army rapidly, Congress offered in advance, besides specified monthly wages in money, an additional inducement or consideration in lands—not for past services, but for services thereafter to be rendered. The land warrant to be received was as much a part of the stipulated compensation provided for by the law under which the enlistment was made, and entered into the contract just as fully between the soldier and the Government as his monthly pay did."

The principle is also strongly stated in Senate Report 193, Forty-seventh Congress, first session:

"The military grants for the war of 1812 and the Mexican war are of the same character, enacted at or near the commencement of each, wholly prospective in their operation, and are their own best expositors; their meaning and purpose can not be misinterpreted. In effect, they said to the party whose military prowess the Government so much needed at the time, 'Enlist, and serve your country a given period, and you shall have as a reward therefor a quarter section of land in addition to your monthly pay.' The land thus offered in advance of, and as an inducement to, the engagement formed as much a part of the contract of enlistment as did the money compensation. One can not with any show of reason be designated a gratuity any more than the other; both alike constituted the consideration for which the services were to be rendered. It follows, therefore, that these grants of land for military service in the three great wars of this country are essentially in the nature of contracts, and as such become the foundation of the claim which the Western and Southern States now make for the 5 per cent thereon, according to the terms of the compact contained in their several enabling acts; for, if they have the elements of a contract, it follows that the lands located thereunder are sales in legal contemplation, and not bounties in any just sense of that term. It involves no other or different principle than if one man should say to another, 'Work for me twelve months and I will pay you at the rate of $15 per month and 80 acres of land for such service.' Could he, in law, discharge his obligation by making the money payment and withholding the land, upon the pretext of a bounty to be paid or not, at his own pleasure?"

This character of the warrants as a mere substitute for cash was emphasized by the passage of the act of March 22, 1852 (10 Stat. L., 3), authorizing the assignment of land warrants and their location by the assignees.

The effect of this act is stated in Senate Report No. 226, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, as follows:

"But on March 22, 1852 (10 U. S. Stats., 3), Congress made all bounty-land warrants which theretofore had been, and all which might thereafter be, issued under any law of the United States, not only assignable, but also made equally assignable all valid locations of land which theretofore had been or thereafter might be made with any of said warrants. Not only that, but in its said act, an act entitled 'An act to make land warrants assignable, and for other purposes,' Congress specially provided 'that any person entitled to preemption rights to any lands shall be entitled to use said land warrants in payment for the same at the rate of $1.25 per acre for the quantity of land therein specified;' and in that same act Congress further provided 'that when said warrant shall be located on lands which are subject to entry at a greater minimum than $1.25 per acre the locator of said warrant shall pay to the United States in cash the difference between the value of said warrant at $1.25 per acre and the tract of land located on.'"

After this act a land-warrant location became the exact equivalent of a location for cash.

By the act of March 3, 1855 (10 Stat. L., 701), revising and extending the bounty-land laws, a very large increase in the issuance of military bounty-land warrants was made, the number issued under this act being stated to be almost equal to all theretofore issued. The result of the passage of this act and of the act of 1852, making land warrants freely assignable, was to produce the immediate location of a very large number of land warrants in the States and Territories then being settled. The unequal distribution of land-warrant locations may be seen by a comparison of five States of almost equal area:

State.	Area in square miles.	Land-warrant locations to June 30, 1893.
Arkansas	53,850	$2,263,626.92
Iowa	56,025	14,100,025.77
Illinois	56,650	9,533,853.00
Michigan	58,915	4,516,305.50
Wisconsin	56,040	6,647,632.53

Where land-warrant locations were more numerous, cash payments were less. The effect of such inequality in these locations is stated in Senate Report No. 226, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, as follows:

"The effect, therefore, of such unequal locations of the public lands with military bounty-land warrants in the several public-land States has been and is that those public-land States in which were located the maximum acreage of the public lands with military bounty-land warrants have received the minimum amount of money, and per contra those public-land States in which were located the minimum acreage of the public lands with military bounty-land warrants have received the maximum amount in money, on account of said 5 per cent grant according and in proportion to the respective areas of the several public-land States."

It is this inequality which the pending bill proposes to correct. Bounty-land warrants were treated in localities as exactly equivalent to cash. It is now proposed to declare that they shall be likewise treated in the settlement of the accounts between the United States and the several States.

This claim was very promptly made as soon as the location of military bounty-land warrants became a matter of any considerable importance through the operation of the acts of 1852 and 1855. It appears from Senate Report No. 226, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, page 14, that the State of Iowa on September 7, 1858, made application to the Interior Department for 5 per cent upon bounty-land warrant locations, and this was denied by the Secretary of the Interior on September 20, 1858. How active the prosecution of the matter has been before Congress appears by the lists of favorable reports in both Houses heretofore cited in this report.

The States strongly insisted that their right to the 5 per cent on military bounty-land warrants was not a matter of grace, requiring amendatory legislation by Congress, but a matter of strict legal right cognizable by the Executive Departments and courts. For the enforcement of this right a mistaken remedy was adopted in 1882 by an application for a mandamus on the Commissioner of the General Land Office requiring him to state an account of the amount due to the States of Iowa and Illinois. The Supreme Court of the United States (Five Per Cent cases, 110 U. S., 471), without deciding upon the propriety of the remedy chosen, decided that the claim did not present a matter of strict legal right.

It is not necessary, in order to sanction the passage of this bill, to maintain this proposition. The right of the States appeals to the discretion of Congress. It rests not alone upon the words of the enabling acts, but calls for the just enforcement of their spirit. The States ask for the application of the principles of fair dealing in carrying out the objects of the statutory contract. Two of the most distinguished judges of the Supreme Court, however—Justices Miller and Field—speaking through the former, declared their opinion (110 U. S., 485) to be that the right of the States was one of absolute law, and supported it by the cogent arguments contained in the following opinion:

"Mr. Justice Miller, with whom concurred Mr. Justice Field, dissenting:

"I do not concur in the judgment of the court in this case, if that can be called a judgment in which the court, declining to consider the question of its jurisdiction, decides that if it had jurisdiction the petitioners make no case for relief.

"I doubt very much whether this court has jurisdiction in a suit by a State to establish an obligation of the United States to pay to the State a sum of money, by compelling one of the auditing officers of the United States to state an account under the direction of the court according to a rule which the court may prescribe to him.

"I discuss this matter no further but to observe that if the court has no such jurisdiction its opinion is of no value beyond the force of its argument and the weight of character of the judges who concur in it.

"The opinion concedes that the acts of Congress under which the States of Illinois and Iowa were admitted into the Union, and the acceptance of their provisions, are compacts. If any less sanctity is due to these provisions by calling the matter a compact instead of a contract it is not perceptible to me. It is not denied that the State and the United States were capable of contracting. It is not denied in the opinion that they did contract. Taking the case of the State of Iowa, the sixth section of the act for her admission (5 Stat., 789) says that, in lieu of the propositions submitted to Congress by the convention of the Territory, which are rejected, the following propositions are hereby offered to the legislature of the State of Iowa, which, if accepted, shall be obligatory on the United States. They were accepted. The propositions were the result of a negotiation, of items accepted and others rejected in that negotiation. It was a fair bargain between competent parties. The fifth item of this contract is as follows:

"'Fifth. That 5 per cent of the net proceeds of sales of all public lands lying within the said State which have been or shall be sold by Congress from and after the admission of said State, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be appropriated for making public roads and canals within the said State, as the legislature may direct: Provided, That the five foregoing propositions herein offered are on the condition that the legislature of the said State, by virtue of the powers conferred upon it by the convention which framed the constitution of the said State, shall provide by an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that the said State shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the soil within the same by the United States, nor with any regulations Congress may find necessary for securing the title in such soil to the bona fide purchasers thereof; and that no tax shall be imposed on lands the property of the United States, and in no case shall nonresident proprietors be taxed higher than residents; and that the bounty lands granted or hereafter to be granted for military services during the late war shall, while they continue to be held by the patentees or their heirs, remain exempt from any tax laid by order or under the authority of the State, whether for the State, county, or township, or any other purpose, for the term of three years from and after the dates of the patents, respectively.

"'Approved March 3, 1845.'

"The legal expression of this contract is that the State of Iowa has the right to tax all the lands of the Government as soon as the Government sells them. She may have other rights with regard to the disposal of these lands by the United States, as, for instance, in regard to title to aliens or corporations in perpetuity unacceptable to the State.

"Now, in consideration of that she agrees to make no interference with the primary disposal of the soil or any regulations of Congress for that purpose; that she will tax no nonresident in regard to said lands higher than she does residents; that she will impose no tax on the property of the United States, and no tax on lands granted for military services for three years after the dates of the patents, either for State, county, or township purposes; there shall be paid to the State 5 per cent of the net proceeds of sales of all public lands lying within the State which have been or shall be sold by Congress from and after the admission of the State.

"The question raised here is whether the word 'sales' in this act of Congress is limited to sales made for money, or whether lands used in payment for the services of her military and naval officers and soldiers are sold within the meaning of the statute.

"It seems probable that a false impression has been made by calling these latter 'bounties;' and it is true that in some cases where, after the service has been rendered, Congress has granted lands as gratuity to the soldier or sailor, it is a bounty, and is not a sale in fact or within the meaning of the statute. But the large body of these land warrants were issued under statutes which, in calling the men into service and prescribing their compensation in advance, declared that for so many months' service they should, in addition to their monthly cash payment, receive so many acres of land, according to the length of their service.

"This was as much a part of the pay which the Government agreed to make for his services as the cash payment. And to show that the Government so considered it, a reference to the acts of 1847, to raise troops for the Mexican war, under which the largest part of the sales in Iowa was made, is all that is necessary.

"The ninth section of that act (9 Stat., 125) authorizes the soldier to receive, at his option, a land warrant for 160 acres, to be located on any public lands, or Treasury scrip for $100, such scrip to be redeemable at the pleasure of the Government and to bear interest at 6 per cent per annum until paid.

"It was also enacted that those land warrants should be received at the land office in payment of any Congressional subdivision of the public land at the rate of $1.25 per acre, the purchaser paying any balance above the value of the land warrant in cash. (9 Stat., 332.)

"And still later it was enacted that a person having a preemption right to a tract of land should be entitled to use any such land warrant in payment of the same at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

"That they might be thus freely used in the purchase of the public lands these warrants were by statute early made assignable, and it may be safely said that for years the largest part of the public lands sold by the land officers were paid for by these land warrants.

"Blackstone defines a sale to be 'a transmutation of property from one man to another in consideration of some price.' (2 Blackstone, 446.) And Kent says, 'A sale is a contract for the transfer of property from one person to another for valuable consideration, and three things are requisite to its validity, viz, the thing sold, which is the object of the contract, the price, and the consent of the contracting parties.' (2 Kent, 468.) And though there is some controversy whether, in reference to personal property, the consideration is not to be paid in money, the use of the old phrase 'bargain and sale' in regard to land never required that the consideration should be exclusively a money payment. (2 Bouvier's Law Dictionary, 494, clause 6, Sale.)

"But it surely was never contemplated in this compact between a State of the Union and the General Government that if the Government could dispose of her public lands and secure their full price in other valuable consideration than money, the State should thus be cheated out of the 5 per cent of the value which she had a right to expect.

"The United States made these warrants the equivalent of money in purchase of these lands by the holders. They gave them the equivalent purchasing power of money and the quality of negotiability, and they gave the soldier the option of a Treasury draft or a land warrant when he had rendered the service.

"It is the merest quibble to say that where a man purchased a quarter section of the public lands with one of these warrants the Government had not sold him that land at a dollar and a quarter an acre.

"No importance can be attached to the previous construction of the Government. The amount in controversy attracted no attention until the location of the land warrants for service in the Mexican war, and the lands in the Territories were not subject to the 5 per cent. As early as 1858, when the locations under the Mexican war claims were thickest, Governor Lowe, of Iowa, asserted this right in a letter to Mr. Thompson, Secretary of the Interior. This was immediately after the act of 1857, making it the duty of the Land Commissioner to state these accounts. The claim has been urged by that State ever since, except during the disastrous period of the civil war; and the Senate of the United States passed a law recognizing the justice of the claim and that of other States and ordering their payment during the last Congress, but, on a motion to reconsider, it was tied up and has not been acted on since.

"I entertain no doubt of the legal as well as the moral obligation of the United States to pay to the States concerned the 5 per cent on these sales which they have thus far withheld.

"Mr. Justice Field concurs with me in this opinion."

When these distinguished judges find that the right of the States rests upon the literal terms of the act of Congress, and when it is shown, as has been done in this report, that upon a fair construction of the purpose of the original grants to the States the right of the States must be conceded, your committee feel constrained, following in this the view of many previous committees of both Houses of Congress, to report in favor of the allowance to the States of the 5 per cent claimed on bounty-land warrant locations.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE AND OTHER SCRIP.

Agricultural college scrip was authorized by act of July 2, 1862 (12 Stat. L., 503). The grant was made to each State of public land of a quantity equal to 30,000 acres for each Senator and Representative. If there were public lands in a State the State selected its lands within its own limits. If there were no public lands, or if these were insufficient, scrip was issued to the State, subject to location by its assignees under the following provision:

"And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to issue to each of the States in which there is not the quantity of public lands subject to sale at private entry at $1.25 per acre, to which said State may be entitled under the provisions of this act, land scrip to the amount in acres for the deficiency of its distributive share; said scrip to be sold by said States and the proceeds thereof applied to the uses and purposes prescribed in this act, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever."

The United States assumed an obligation to the various States to pay a certain sum in land for the encouragement of agriculture and discharged this obligation by exhausting the public lands subject to cash sale in other States. Had the scrip not been issued these lands would have been subject to cash sale and the States would have received their percentage on the sales. The operation of this law, unless corrected by the allowance now claimed, was most inequitable to the public-land States. These were obliged to locate their own grants within their own States. The States having no public lands had the privilege of selecting other lands where they pleased. Thus they had the advantage in selection of the choice of the best lands held by the United States, while the public-land States themselves, having a restricted choice, were obliged to see their lands taken up by assignees of the various States. The scrip freely passed from hand to hand and was received by the United States as cash, but the States where it was located were in their settlements with the United States refused the right to count it as cash and were deprived of any allowance on account of it for the benefit of their improvement or school funds.

Other scrip issued under various other laws, all of far less importance than the agricultural-college scrip, rests equally upon the same principle, and the allowance, except as provided herein, should include all such scrip. The principle is, indeed, not vitally different from that admitted by the act of 1857 in granting 5 per cent upon Indian reservations. This was construed by the Secretary of the Interior to extend also to Indian scrip, because the grant of land and scrip alike were to discharge the obligations of the United States and were in equal derogation of the right of the States to a share in the proceeds of the public lands.

LIMITATIONS OF THIS BILL.

The interests of the United States have been carefully guarded in this bill by provisions declaring that the 5 per cent shall be limited to permanent Indian reservations and allotments and scrip locations. It expressly excludes lands disposed of under the homestead law, except where commuted payments were made; it excludes lands located by soldiers' additional homestead scrip, and lands granted for railroad, wagon road, or canal purposes, or reserved for military, naval, forest, park, or other reservations, except as specifically provided for in the bill. It differs in respect to its limitations from many of the bills heretofore favorably reported by excluding from the account many lands included in former bills.

CALIFORNIA.

The State of California requires special consideration. It will be remembered that the usual enabling act was not passed in regard to California. The people of California organized their own State without previous authority from Congress, and Congress on September 9, 1850 (9 Stat. L., 453), passed an act admitting the State under the constitution presented by the people. Thus the grants found in the other acts failed to be specifically made to California, and this State alone in the Union had never received 5 per cent upon the cash sales of public lands. It can not be questioned that California, having in her admission surrendered to the United States the same consideration for which the other States received the 5 per cent grant, should be placed on the same basis as the other States. This bill provides for the equal inclusion of California in its benefits.

ARKANSAS.

By the act of August 4, 1894 (28 Stat. L., 229), a settlement of various disputed demands between the United States and the State of Arkansas was authorized. The settlement arranged under this act was confirmed by the act of April 29, 1898 (30 Stat. L., 367). The committee does not regard this compromise as affecting the right of the State of Arkansas to participate in the grants now made by this bill. The right of the State to a payment of 5 per cent on cash sales under the act admitting the State into the Union (June 23, 1836; 5 Stat. L., 58) were included in the adjustment, but the right to 5 per cent upon military bounty land warrants and scrip locations not being then admitted as of right, but now granted by the discretion of Congress, this State must share in the benefits of the pending bill.

THE AMOUNT INVOLVED.

The total amount involved in the grant to the States by this bill has been calculated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. In his communication of February 9, 1900, he summarizes the matter as follows:

"I therefore submit the following statement and estimate of the area of lands already disposed of by the Government for military bounty-land warrants, and for scrips of various kinds of Indian allotments, and of lands embraced in present permanent Indian reservations, and an estimate of the amount required to pay 5 per cent of the estimated value of such lands at $1.25 per acre, including 5 per cent of the net proceeds of public lands sold in the State of California.

"It appears from the records of this office that 28,085 military bounty-land warrants for 160 acres each were issued under the act of May 6, 1812 (2 Stat. L., 729), embracing an area of 4,493,600 acres; and it appears from the annual report of this office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, that 17,600 acres of said warrants were still outstanding. It therefore appears that 4,476,000 acres of such warrants have been located and patents issued thereon. It also appears from said report that for warrants issued under the acts of February 11, 1847; September 28, 1850, and March 3, 1855, patents have issued to 58,973,050 acres, making a total area of 63,449,050 acres for which patents have issued under military bounty locations prior to June 30, 1899.

"It also appears from the records of this office that to June 30, 1899, agricultural college scrip locations have been made aggregating 7,954,188.05 acres, and that other scrips located from 1864 to 1899, inclusive, aggregated 801,570.09 acres, making a total area of scrip locations (not including Choctaw scrip located prior to 1864) of 8,755,758.14 acres.

"It further appears from the records of this office that prior to June 30, 1899, Indian allotments have been made embracing 655,695.74 acres.

"The area of Indian reservations is not kept in this office, but it appears from the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1899 that the present area of Indian reservations (unallotted) in the several public-land States is 40,007,816 acres.

"Therefore the area of lands already disposed of by the United States and directly affected by the bill, the estimated value thereof, and the total amount to be paid to the States thereunder may be stated as follows:

	Acres.
Lands located with military bounty-land warrants	63,449,050
Lands located with agricultural college scrip	7,954,188.05
Lands located with other scrips	801,570.09
Indian allotments	655,695.74
Indian reservations (unallotted)	40,007,816
Total	112,868,319.88

Cash value of 112,868,319.88 acres, at $1.25	$141,085,399.85
Estimated net proceeds cash sales in California	16,703,337.86
Total cash base (estimated)	157,788,737.71

It follows that 5 per cent of said sum would amount to $7,889,436.88, the amount to be paid to the States under the bill.

In regard to the amount due each State, the Commissioner reports, under date of April 19, 1900, as follows:

"To show the amount that would accrue to each particular State would involve tedious examinations and extended calculations that have not been made and would require much time and labor."

The committee have made some investigation in regard to the amounts due to the several States and are able to make an approximate calculation on this subject, the general correctness of which is exhibited by its substantial agreement in the aggregate with the Commissioner's figures. These amounts are as follows:

Ohio	$115,000	Nebraska	$175,000
Indiana	100,000	South Dakota	765,000
Michigan	295,000	North Dakota	240,000
Illinois	596,000	Montana	480,000
Wisconsin	440,000	Wyoming	75,000
Minnesota	495,000	Colorado	35,000
Iowa	890,000	Utah	80,000
Missouri	425,000	Nevada	35,000
Arkansas	150,000	Idaho	85,000
Louisiana	85,000	Washington	90,000
Alabama	75,000	Oregon	80,000
Mississippi	40,000	California	1,000,000
Florida	40,000
Kansas	295,000	Total	8,182,000

II. ADVANCES TO THE STATES.

Section 4 of this bill deals with the advances made to the several States under the act of June 23, 1836, section 5 (5 Stat. L., 55). The grant of the surplus money in the Treasury made by this act was not a gift, but a deposit. The terms were expressed in the act itself as follows:

"And the Secretary of the Treasury shall deliver the same to such treasurers or other competent authorities on receiving certificates of deposit therefor signed by such competent authorities, in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary aforesaid; which certificates shall express the usual and legal obligations and pledge the faith of the State for the safe-keeping and repayment thereof, and shall pledge the faith of the States receiving the same to pay said moneys and every part thereof, from time to time, whenever the same shall be required by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purpose of defraying any wants of the Public Treasury, beyond the amount of the five millions aforesaid: Provided, That if any State declines to receive its proportion of the surplus aforesaid, on the terms before named, the same shall be deposited with the other States agreeing to accept the same on deposit in the proportion aforesaid."

They now stand as loans, subject to demand. It is interesting to note from the debates in Congress when this act was passed that these deposits were the surplus proceeds of the sales of public lands, although the fact does not appear on the face of the act.

The amounts deposited with the States under this act are shown by a report of the Treasurer of the United States of May 13, 1892, printed in Senate Report No. 226, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, as follows:

Maine	$955,838.25	Maryland	$955,838.25
New Hampshire	669,086.79	Virginia	2,198,427.99
Vermont	669,086.79	North Carolina	1,433,757.39
Massachusetts	1,338,173.58	South Carolina	1,051,422.09
Connecticut	764,670.60	Georgia	1,051,422.09
Rhode Island	382,335.30	Alabama	669,086.79
New York	4,014,520.71	Louisiana	477,919.14
Pennsylvania	2,867,514.78	Mississippi	382,335.30
New Jersey	764,670.60	Tennessee	1,433,757.39
Ohio	2,007,260.34	Kentucky	1,433,757.39
Indiana	860,254.44	Missouri	382,335.30
Illinois	477,919.14	Arkansas	286,751.49
Michigan	286,751.49
Delaware	286,751.49	Total	28,101,644.91

The present bill proposes to close the accounts between the United States and the several States for these deposits by a statutory release of the States from their obligations to repay on demand. The original act was an exhibition of the generosity of the United States toward the several States then in the Union. The continued possession by the various States of these amounts is a complete answer to any criticism which could by any chance be made against this bill on the ground of undue liberality toward the States admitted into the Union since that grant.

The liberal dealing of Congress with the several States then in the Union in regard to funds derived from the sale of public lands was evinced by the absolute donation to the States by the act of September 4, 1841 (5 Stat. L., 453), of the proceeds of such sales. The first section gave to Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Michigan 10 per cent of the proceeds of the sale of public lands within each State in addition to the 5 per cent required by the enabling act. Under this section these States received $233,258.20. (The Public Domain, p. 256.) The second section donated the entire net proceeds of the sales of public lands to the States then in the Union, the District of Columbia, and the Territories of Wisconsin, Iowa, and Florida. Under this act, until its suspension by act of August 30, 1842 (5 Stat. L., 567), the States then in the Union and the Territories named received $691,117.05. (The Public Domain, p. 753.)

CONCLUSION.

With these legislative precedents for liberality toward the States earliest in the Union, the present bill exhibits but moderate fairness toward the later public-land States. In relation to Indian reservations and Indian scrip, this bill carries out the policy actually executed in regard to the older States. In regard to bounty-land warrants and other scrip, it grants to the States nothing more than the amounts justly due upon a fair construction of the covenants of the United States contained in the enabling act.

A number of amendments have been incorporated in the bill, all of which appear in it as now reported, and the committee recommend the passage of the amended bill.

Before the reading of the report was concluded,

Mr. BACON. I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, pending that request, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BACON. I have one or two amendments which I wish to offer before we go into executive session.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to offer an amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. GAMBLE. I want to make a suggestion pending the motion to go into executive session. It is understood that the pending bill will be the unfinished business of the Senate. I assume that, of course, as it was taken up on motion.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it will be time enough for that when we pass from its consideration. I desire to offer some amendments.

Mr. GAMBLE. Before going into executive session I want that understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKETT in the chair). The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the remainder of the report may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BACON. The report is very voluminous, and I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. GAMBLE. Only about six pages more of the report remain to be read.

Mr. BACON. Then I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the entire report will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BACON. I now wish to offer an amendment which I desire to come in at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as additional sections the following:

SEC. —. That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, given to the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim or claims of any owner, or the legal representative of any owner, to the proceeds of any abandoned or captured property which have heretofore been placed in the United States Treasury, notwithstanding any former suit to recover said proceeds may have been dismissed by said court for want of jurisdiction: Provided, That suit to recover the same shall be commenced within two years from the passage of this act.
